In this case, however, the assumption that any duel has been fought, or that any persons contemplated fighting a duel, is simply absurd. There is abundant and conclusive evidence to the contrary. Those who believe that a duel has been fought base their opinion upon the fact that the two foolish young men left town, after having caused it to be widely rumored that they intended to fight, and subsequently fired half a dozen rounds of pistol cartridges in a lonely locality in Delaware. To call this sort of thing a duel is to be weakly misled by mere appearances. When, during the representation of "The Shaughraun," guns are fired, and the villainous and the virtuous in turn fall upon the pasteboard sod, and remark that they are severally and collectively dead men, no spectator, except, perhaps, a casual Deacon from a remote Connecticut village, dreams that murder has been committed or the law against homicide in any way violated. We all know that when the curtain falls, the slain pick themselves up and return to their dressing-rooms without a scratch. Why, then, should intelligent men suppose that the so-called duel at Marydell, from which every one returned safe and sound, was more felonious or in any way more serious in its nature than are the combats in "The Shaughraun"?

A duel is defined as "a premeditated fight between two persons." In this case there was obviously no fight whatever, and hence there was no duel. It may be conceded that the two foolish young men did stand at fifteen paces from each other and fire three pistol shots each. If the pistols were loaded with ball, and the foolish young men fired at each other, one or both would certainly have been hit. Each had the reputation of being a good shot, and that a good shot should miss a large person, however foolish, at fifteen paces, is simply incredible. Even a poor shot, though he might have missed his opponent, would infallibly have brought down one of the seconds or winged the doctor. The two foolish young men, however, gave their bullets no billets whatever, and hence the conclusion is irresistible that they took the utmost pains not to hit anybody.

In all probability, however, their pistols were merely loaded with powder. When firearms are discharged on the stage, blank cartridges are, of course, always used. As much noise and smoke can be got out of a pistol without the use of a bullet as with one. Now, it is altogether improbable that the two foolish young men who went to Delaware expressly to fire pistols without hurting anybody neglected the obvious precaution of using blank cartridges. Without bullets no one could possibly be hurt, and as this was the evident object of those concerned in the so-called duel, it would have been an objectionable species of folly to provide the principals with ball cartridge. The evidence, then, indicates in the plainest possible way that there were no bullets in the pistols fired at Marydell, and hence, there was certainly no "fight" in the proper meaning of the term.

If those two foolish young men and the select audience which witnessed their private theatricals are to be indicted for dueling, a blow is struck at the whole theatrical profession. If the actors at Marydell are to be arrested, Mr. BOUCICAULT must be arrested for shooting sundry members of WALLACK'S company, and every actor who has at any time played Sir Lucius O'Trigger must be indicted for dueling. The two foolish young men played their farce out of doors instead of on the stage of a theatre, but that fact does not convert a harmless melodrama into a statutory offense. Of course, if they are willing to have it supposed that they were really in earnest, and were not amusing themselves by playing a farce as dull as the usual new American comedy, they cannot expect to escape punishment. If, however, they will listen to good advice, they will promptly go before the Grand Jury and furnish conclusive evidence that they never had the least intention of fighting. They cannot well make themselves more ridiculous than they are at present, but they can save themselves from much inconvenience by a frank confession. Doubtless, they bound themselves by a written contract to put no bullets in their pistols. Let them produce this contract, prove that they visited Delaware in the capacity of two amateur strolling actors, and thus clear themselves of the preposterous charge that they ever had the slightest purpose of fighting a serious duel.

CENTRAL AMERICAN AFFAIRS.

DIPLOMATIC TROUBLES BETWEEN NICARAGUA AND COSTA RICA.

PANAMA, Jan. 2.—The Nicaragua Gazette publishes the decree of Costa Rica, suspending all official relations between the two Republics, the first consideration of which says: "The Government of the Republic of Nicaragua by act has severed its relations with that of Costa Rica, by refusing to recognize the present Administration of the nation." The official organ of Nicaragua, refuting this decree, says the assertion that Nicaragua has not recognized the Administration of Herrera is not correct. Nicaragua has said openly that she did not choose to qualify the legality of every act, but thought it her duty to call the attention of the Costa Rica Cabinet to the circumstance that the Government of Herrera had been placed in power on account of its enmity to Nicaragua.

A revolutionary conspiracy in Salvador, headed by a young man named Don Balsazar Estribniar, editor of La Prensa, has been discovered. Beyond the meeting of the faction, nothing had been accomplished.

Costa Rica continues in the same impoverished and unsettled condition. Her railroad work is at a standstill, and war with Nicaragua is daily threatened by Gen. Guardia, who is now visiting Salvador and Guatemala in search of assistance to carry out his threatened invasion of that Republic.

REVOLUTION IN ECUADOR.

DEFEAT OF THE CONSTITUTIONAL ARMY BY THE REVOLUTIONISTS—PRESIDENT BORRERO OVERTHROWN.

PANAMA, Jan. 2.—News has been received here of a bloody battle, fought at Galte, Ecuador, on Dec. 14, between the Constitutional Army, 2,500 strong, under Gen. Aparicio, and the revolutionary forces, under Gens. Urbina and Veintermilla, which lasted about three hours, and ended in the complete rout of the former and the capture of their Commander in Chief, Gen. Aparicio. It was a hard-fought encounter, and both sides behaved bravely, losing altogether about 400 killed and a much larger number wounded. When the news of the disaster reached Quito, President Borrero left the palace and took refuge, it is said, at the Colombian Legation, while the citizens pronounced in favor of the revolution. The revolutionary forces probably entered Quito on Dec. 25, which event, it was expected, would put an end to the war in that Republic.

TYRANNY IN SAMOA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 11.—C. N. Griffin, United States Consul at Samoa, arrived here yesterday by the steamer Zealandia, en route to Washington. He is commissioned by the National Government of Samoa as Minister Plenipotentiary to negotiate a treaty with the United States, with a view to the formal recognition of the native Government of Samoa by this country, and the cultivation of closer commercial and general relations. Mr. Griffin accepted the commission subject to the approval of the State Department at Washington. Concerning the state of affairs at Samoa, he says that the German house of Godeffroy & Co., a member of which firm is the German Consul there, has been carrying on affairs with a high hand, virtually ignoring native authority, and levying arbitrary fines on the people, in satisfaction of minor offenses committed by natives against German residents. In many instances the charges have been trumped up. In enforcing the payment of fines, Godeffroy & Co. have been backed by a German war vessel, and they have pursued generally an oppressive and tyrannical course, which has prompted the native Government to seek the moral support of the United States. Mr. Griffin will leave for Washington in a few days.

THE WAR IN COLOMBIA.

PANAMA, Jan. 2.—The war news from the interior of the Republic is meagre and indefinite, and generally considered less favorable to the Liberal or Government Party. A steamer, which arrived at Aspinwall on Dec. 29 from Santa Martha, brings advices to the effect that the armistice set on foot some time ago continues, and that negotiations for peace are being carried on between Gen. Velez, Commander in Chief of the rebels in Antioquia, and Señor Rodriguez, Secretary of the Interior and of Foreign Relations of the National Government. A revolution started in the State of Santander by Leonardo Canal against the Government was quickly suppressed. The revolutionists surrendered on Dec. 14 with all of their munitions of war. Canal is at liberty under a bond of $10,000.

A MISSING OFFICIAL DISCOVERED.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 11.—The Republican has a special dispatch from Sedalia, Mo., which says that information from a trustworthy source has been received there to the effect that Samuel S. Burdett, late Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington, who mysteriously disappeared from New-York some months ago, was recently seen in San Antonio, Texas, by a gentleman who knows him well, and talked with him there. He did not allude to the cause of his disappearance, but asked his friend not to mention their meeting.

THE WRECKED STEAMER GEORGIA.

PANAMA, Jan. 2.—The Panama Transit Company's steam-ship Wilmington, which sailed from New-York for the purpose of endeavoring to save the steam-ship Georgia, of the same line, which was wrecked in the Straits of Magellan, is reported to have arrived at Valparaiso. As she was not accompanied by the Georgia, it seems certain that her efforts to save that vessel have been fruitless.

THE PANAMA ICE MONOPOLY.

PANAMA, Jan. 2.—The Legislature of the State of Panama have rejected the petition of the Boston Ice Company to abolish the ice monopoly in this State. The ice company have appealed to Bogota, where there is hardly a doubt the monopoly will be annulled as unconstitutional. Ice costs here, under the monopoly, seven cents a pound.

ALBANY.

THE COMMITTEES READY FOR WORK

BILLS COMING IN—POOL-SELLING AGAIN—A GENERAL COUNCIL ON THE GOVERNMENT OF NEW-YORK CITY—THE GAS COMPANIES—A PROSPECTIVE FIGHT OVER COUNTY TREASURERS—THE SUPERINTENDENCY OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Both branches of the Legislature held short sessions this morning, and beyond the introduction of bills no business was done calling for comment. The standing committees have organized and are now in good shape for work. Next week there will be sufficient reports from these to go into Committee of the Whole upon. The House itself is only just settling into working order, but some of the new members have already contrived to make some bad mistakes; while others from whom trouble was expected have wisely kept quiet, knowing that the time for effective action is never at the start of the session. If gentlemen who come to the Legislature for the first time would only reflect that a legislative body is governed by a rather complex code of rules, and that the operation of these cannot be learned without at least several weeks' practical experience with them, they would not destroy their chance for usefulness by attempting to take a leading part in the business of the Assembly in ignorance of the principles upon which business is and must of necessity be conducted. There is only one safe rule for a new member to follow, viz., to keep perfectly quiet on the floor of the House for at least the first six weeks of the session. Any argument he desires to present upon a bill should be made before the committee to which it has been referred. If the bill is reported favorably, the members of the committee may be trusted to look after it in the House.

Another bill for the prevention of pool-selling has made its appearance. It makes the penalty for selling pools imprisonment for not less than one nor more than three years, and a fine of from $1,000 to $5,000. It authorizes any Justice or magistrate to issue his warrant for the seizure of all the instruments used in pool-selling, in the same manner as other gambling instruments, and the arrest of the parties using them. Some bill on this subject will undoubtedly be perfected and reported by the Judiciary Committee at an early date; but fears are expressed that it will not get through the Senate.

A number of reports of various State institutions were presented, as well as the Prison Inspectors' report—happily the last with which the State will be afflicted.

Mr. Mitchell will introduce to-morrow a bill for the regulation of gas companies. It is made to apply to the whole State. It requires that gas companies shall report annually to the State Controller as follows: The amount of capital stock, incomes and profits from all sources; dividends, shares, and extra shares of stock issued; certificates of indebtedness; investments of any kind made in behalf of such companies; also all and any assets not above enumerated; the amount disbursed for improvements to machinery and works, sums expended for taxation upon income, and all expenditures of any kind whatever. The report must be sworn to by the President, Treasurer, and Secretary. The State Controller is empowered to reject any report which he may deem not sufficiently explicit, and require the company to file an amended report. Failure to comply with the provisions of the law is made a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment, the prosecution of the delinquent officers to be conducted by the Attorney General.

One of the bills brought here by Mr. Dorman B. Eaton was introduced this morning by Mr. Cowdin, somewhat modified from the original form. Briefly it may be described as a plan for overhauling the City Government of New-York. It requires that within 20 days after the passage of the act, the Mayor shall summon the members of the Board of Apportionment, the President of the Board of Aldermen, and the heads of the several City departments, and also 12 eminent citizens of either political party to meet in conference and do the following things: 1. Consider what is a reasonable and proper salary for every City officer, (except the members of the conference and of Judges and Justices) and what the actual and what the proper number of officers, clerks, and employes in each department and bureau. 2. The conference is to classify all clerks employed by the City into two or more classes, according to service, &c., and shall make, as far as possible, the salaries of each grade uniform. 3. The grading, &c., of the Police and Fire Departments is to be done separately. 4. The conference is to report a plan for promotions in the clerical service. Another duty of the conference is to report upon the experience of other cities in the matter of government, and all matters which may tend to further the ends for which the conference meets. The powers of the conference are simply advisory, as it is not empowered to do more than issue a report.

We shall have the long standing fight over County Treasurers renewed this session; bills having been already introduced into both House and Senate, putting these officers under the control of the County Supervisors, which seems to be what they particularly object to, and have fought against every session. There is a probability that this session the fight will go against them.

The first report from a committee (the Judiciary) was presented this morning, and it was an adverse one. The Chairman of the committee intimates that as few bills as possible will come out of it this session. There are too many statutes already.

Mr. Grady, of New-York, following Nachtmann's lead on the liquor question, offered a resolution requiring the Committee on General Laws to report within 30 days a new Excise law; which resolution was immediately jumped upon by Mr. Alvord, and sent over under the rule.

The "Lodging-house bill" has turned up. This, it will be remembered, is a bill to provide for the erection of free lodging-houses for tramps and vagrants in New-York City, and the furnishing of free breakfasts to them. Dr. Hayes introduced the bill by request, but wished it distinctly understood that he entirely disapproved of it.

Stranger to say, the notorious "old soldier" bill has not yet made its appearance. It may be expected shortly, and very amusing it will be, to see some respectable old gentleman, who has come to Albany for the first time, rising in his place to introduce this familiar old "strike," all unconscious of its character and reputation.

To-morrow a bill will be introduced in the Assembly relating to the new office of Superintendent of Public Works. In accordance with the suggestions of the Governor, it will be short, merely fixing the salary of the office, the amount of the bonds to be furnished by the incumbent, and one or two other necessary matters. A salary of $7,500, with traveling expenses, has been suggested by the Governor, and will be named in the bill; but the Canal Committee, to which the bill will go, may increase this sum. It scarcely seems sufficient. A man who is competent to fill so important a position could not be had for so small a sum. The Governor has not yet fixed upon any one of the 10 or 12 men who

DARK POLITICAL WAYS.

WHICH GIVE DEMOCRATIC SUCCESS.

FOUR REPUBLICANS DESERT THEIR COLORS IN THE NEW-JERSEY HOUSE—A DEMOCRATIC SPEAKER ELECTED—AN EX-LIBERAL THE LEADER—CONJECTURES ABOUT THE INFLUENCES WHICH PRODUCED THE BOLT.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TRENTON, Thursday, Jan. 11, 1877.

The dead-lock in the New-Jersey Legislature was broken to-day by a bolt from the Republican caucus. The House met at 10 o'clock, and the roll-call showed all the members present, with the exception of Mr. Vail, of Union, who took his seat a few minutes later. The announcement of the presence of a quorum had scarcely been made before Mr. Cooper, of Morris, moved an adjournment to Monday evening. That was voted down by 34 to 26, and Mr. Egan's motion to proceed to the election of officers was carried. Mr. Griggs, of Passaic, raised the point of order, that, as the business pending at the adjournment of the House last evening was the choice of officers, it became of itself the first business to which the House could address itself this morning. Clerk Foster had scarcely declared that the point was well taken, when Mr. Howell, one of the Republican delegation from Essex, upon whose defection the Democrats had hung all their hopes, was on his feet shaking a paper. The paper was handed to the Clerk, who read it as follows:

Resolved, That the following-named gentlemen be and the same hereby are elected to the offices hereinafter named, respectively, to-wit: That Rudolph F. Rabe, of Hudson, be and he is hereby elected Speaker of this House; that John Y. Foster be and he is hereby elected Clerk of the same; that J. Herbert Potts be and hereby is elected Assistant Clerk; that Jonathan Goble, of Ocean, be and is hereby elected Engrossing Clerk; that John Fell, of Mercer, be and hereby is elected Sergeant at Arms; that William H. Brown, of Essex, be and hereby is elected Assistant Sergeant at Arms; that Samuel W. Bell, of Middlesex, be and hereby is elected Sweeper of the Ladies' Gallery; that Edward B. Smith, of Essex, be and hereby is elected Keeper of the Gentlemen's Gallery.

The Democrats winked knowingly to each other, and it was seen at once that the threatened bolt had occurred, and that the organization was to be effected. Mr. Howell had lumped the elections so as to compel action on all at once from an evident and very pardonable distrust of his Democratic friends. Mr. Griggs made the point of order that each officer must be elected separately. The Clerk declared that the point was not well taken. No appeal was taken from the decision, nor were any dilatory motions interposed. The resolution was submitted to a vote of the House, and adopted by the votes of the 30 Democrats and of Messrs. Howell, Van Rensselaer, Wrightman, and Vail, of the Republicans. Mr. Rabe was sworn in by Mr. Howell and delivered a short address, in which, after thanking the House for the honor conferred upon him, he declared that he would recognize no party on the floor, but endeavor to protect the rights of all without distinction of party. The other officers were then sworn in, and the House proceeded to business. A few important bills were received, and the House adjourned to Monday evening. The Senate adjourned to the same time immediately upon the organization of the House.

In the organization the Democrats secure the Speaker, the Assistant Sergeant at Arms, and one of the Door-keepers—Smith. It is understood to have been part of the arrangement, too, that they should have the privilege of naming the Journal Clerk, and in caucus this evening they selected James J. Madden, of Hudson, originally the Democratic nominee for Engrossing Clerk. The Republicans get the Clerk, the Reader, the Engrossing Clerk, the Sergeant at Arms, and one of the Door-keepers.

The Republicans are denouncing vigorously the defection of their members. The causes which led to it are variously stated. In some quarters it is said to be the result of a combination on the question of the United States Senatorship. In others it is said that some moneyed corporations, in which Mr. Howell is interested and who have staked large interests upon the non-interference by the Legislature with the Five Country act, selected Mr. Rabe as their candidate. Whatever his motive was, it is certain that his defection has killed him politically. Howell has always been a lukewarm Republican, and during the Greeley campaign he went over to the Democracy, and was loud and bitter in his denunciation of the party which, by seating him in the Legislature, gave him the opportunity for to-day's treason. As to the others little is said, and what recompense they expect is not known. Howell is known to have been the arch-conspirator, and the others are thought to have followed his lead.

Now that the Democrats have secured the organization of both houses, they are beginning to feel timid of their men in the great struggle for the Senatorship. Rumors of fortunes offered to several of their members in consideration for their votes for one of the Republican candidates are rife among them. They openly charged Mackey, who absented himself for some reason from the caucus last Tuesday, with having waited and looked for an opportunity to sell himself. The Democratic caucus made their nominations on Monday morning. Their meeting at 2:30 o'clock, half an hour before the time appointed for the organization, was only to count the heads before going into the Assembly Chamber. When the roll was called Mackey was found to be absent. A committee was sent for him, and at about 3 o'clock he was found standing at the door of the Assembly Chamber. "Why," say the Democrats, in telling the story, "the Sergeant at Arms could have pulled him right in. He could have made up the one needed for a quorum, and an organization, giving the Republicans all the offices, could have been effected at once." When the committee discovered him, they asked him to go up stairs where the Democrats had assembled, which he positively refused to do, his pretext being that the caucus had refused to give some friend of his an office which he had sought for him. The members who waited in the room for the return of the committee were notified. Several of them waited upon him at once; and he finally accompanied them. He has not yet regained enough of their confidence, however, to save him from being "shadowed" wherever he goes.

VARIOUS THEORIES OF THE MEANING OF THE DISGRACEFUL AFFAIR — GOSSIP ABOUT THE SENATORSHIP.

From Another Correspondent.

TRENTON, Thursday, Jan. 11, 1877.

Trenton has looked for three days as if Gov. Bedle had ordered a levee en masse of New-Jersey's male population to assist in organizing the one hundred and first Legislature; but at last the Senate and House have exchanged compliments with each other and with the Executive; there has been a formal announcement that everybody was "ready to transact business," an adjournment without transacting any, and then a general folding of tents and oozing away from the capital. The eleven Democratic Senators quickly officered the upper house, on Wednesday, while ten Republicans looked on. Senator Dayton, of Bergen, came down with enough votes to control the caucus, but Leon Abbett, by an ambidextrous intimidation of both the foremost Democratic candidates for the United States Senatorship, secured Mr. Dayton's defeat, and climbed over him into the Presidential chair. The culminating spectacle in the Senate Chamber was rather tame, although Mr. Abbett's essay, which he read as a sort of religious preliminary to the Chaplain's prayer, was very touching, while the martial bearing and dimensions of the new Sergeant at Arms, and the sleek and well-conditioned look of the Democratic clergymen and editors, who were promoted to be clerks and door-keepers, elicited much kindly comment.

In the Assembly it appeared to the uninitiated as if there was a serious block, but the wise ones foresaw the end from the beginning. For three days there was intermittent balloting with 30 steady Republican votes for Scovel as Speaker, and 30 other votes delivered with unwavering Democratic emphasis for Rabe. But this morning, when the time was ripe, the Democrats received their promised reinforcement of four Assemblymen from Newark and one of its dependencies, and the House was organized with a Democratic Speaker and Republican Clerk. This defection has called out some very acrid criticism from Republicans, and there are various speculations as to its cause. One theory is that the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company was anxious to protect its mortgages from taxation, and preferred a Speaker from one of the "Five Counties," in which such property has been heretofore exempted. A second theory is that there has been some collision of interest between this company and the Pennsylvania Railroad, and that Mr. Scovel would probably champion the latter. Political reasons are more plausible. Secretary Robeson and Gen. Sewell are both supposed to be Senatorial aspirants, and the defeat of Mr. Scovel, who is a fellow-townsman and intimate friend of these gentlemen, is a damaging blow to the prospects of both. Of course, this indicates among certain Republicans a strong feeling against the gentlemen from Camden, and this feeling is deeper than a mere personal objection. New-Jersey is afflicted with more geography than any other portion of the earth's surface of equal area. North Jersey and South Jersey stand forever facing each other with clamor for an equitable distribution of political honors, and each accusing the other of too grasping an ambition. It is not forgotten that a year ago it was a vote from Essex which gave Camden the Presidency of the Senate, and Essex refuses to-day to give Camden the Speakership of the House with all the leverage which this position will bring during the session when a Senator is to be chosen.

There may be some undercurrent of hostility to Gen. Sewell as a leader, inasmuch as he exercises a rather autocratic domination in the party councils, but geography is after all the serious difficulty, and it seems to be an incurable malady. That the Essex bolters looked beyond the defeat of Camden and Camden's candidate so far as to strike in the interest of some gentleman from Newark who aspires is both asserted and denied. Mr. Howell, the leader of the revolt, and all his followers are said to prefer Courtlandt Parker for Senator, but the indications point toward George A. Halsey as the gentleman who is to reap some mysterious harvest from to-day's sowing. Practically it means the defeat of both Camden and Newark, for it looks now as if these rival cities, which have heretofore divided and ruled at will, had declared a war which is to be waged without a truce. It, then, the Democrats break ranks, it will be the opportunity of some compromise candidate, who has not identified himself with either faction.

But whatever the motives of the four recalcitrant Assemblymen, (and they are all gentlemen of character and position,) and whatever the final result of their action, their methods have been criticised with much severity. If they had determined, for what seemed sufficient reason, to vote against a Republican candidate, they might have made an effort to select one whom they could support instead of making terms at once with the Democrats, as it is held they did. The Democratic organization was far from compact, and it was only held together by the promised Republican aid. If the bolters had consulted only with members of their own party, the Democrats would have yielded at the first collision, and the Republicans could have made as clean a sweep in the House as the Democrats made in the Senate. More than this: Senator Dayton was so treacherously slaughtered that some of his friends were anxious to hold out against Abbett, and with the help of Republican Senators the caucus slate could have been shattered. But when it was understood that in the House, with a tie vote, the Democrats could win, the party discipline grew more rigid in the Senate, and the disheartened minority did not dare to make the struggle.

What fresh combinations next week will develop, it is difficult to foresee. The Democrats claim, as one result of their victory, that they are now certain to keep their men all in hand, but they may be mistaken. Judge Green's friends aver that he holds a pledged majority of the caucus, and Mr. McPherson is sure that he can count as many. One of them will certainly be sold out; perhaps both.

MAY IN RETIREMENT.

HE IS SAID TO BE ON THE SHORE OF GUNPOWDER RIVER RECOVERING FROM THE MARYDELL STRUGGLE—PERHAPS HE IS THERE, AND PERHAPS NOT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 11.—It continues to be asserted here that Frederick May is much more seriously wounded than at first reported, and that the fear of what may happen in the event of fatal result is the reason for the secrecy observed in the matter. Around the Clubs to-day, and by persons intimate with the May family, it is stated that the wounded man is now at a ducking shore, on the Gunpowder River, 20 miles from Baltimore, and near the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore railroad, owned by a distant relative of the Mays. It is said that this comfortable house on the shore affords good quarters for a wounded man, while at the same time, it is in a secluded locality, from which all trespassers are forbidden, and is therefore favorable to concealment. It is well known that a prominent surgeon of this City has been out of town on a mysterious errand each day since Monday, and suspicion strongly points to his travels being for the purpose of attending on May. The Baltimore Frederick May, who acted as second for his cousin, cannot be found, and it is hinted that he is at the bedside of the latter in retirement, on the shores of the Gunpowder.

THE DISTRICT ATTORNEYSHIP.

GEN. STEWART L. WOODFORD NOMINATED BY THE PRESIDENT TO SUCCEED DISTRICT ATTORNEY BLISS.

Franklin A. Paddock, of New-York, through his brother, Senator Paddock, yesterday withdrew his name, which had been presented for the United States District Attorneyship for the Southern District of New-York, recommending for that office either Gov. Woodford or Mr. Tenney. Gov. Woodford was nominated in the afternoon by the President in place of Mr. Bliss, whose term has expired. Gen. Woodford informed a TIMES reporter last evening that he had received no official notification of his nomination, but would probably accept the office.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The nomination of Gen. Woodford as District Attorney for the Southern District of New-York was made at the instance of Senator Conkling, who this morning finally recommended it.

AMUSEMENTS.

BRIEF MENTION.

Mr. Hopkins' Orpheon Concert occurs at Chickering Hall this evening.

It is now arranged that Mlle. Aimée and her troupe will appear at the Eagle Theatre, and not at the Lyceum, at the close of this month. Mr. Maurice Grau is expected in town on Sunday.

The Kellogg English Opera Troupe will give four representations at the Academy of Music, the performances commencing on Jan. 22. "The Flying Dutchman" is to be sung during the week.

Mr. Daly's new comédie vaudeville called "Lemons" will be acted by Messrs. Coghlan, Crisp, Brougham, Lewis, and Hardenbergh, Misses Davenport, Sidney Cowell, and Rigl, and Mrs. Gilbert. New scenery has been painted for the piece.

The third and last public rehearsal preparatory to to-morrow evening's Philharmonic concert may be attended at the Academy of Music this afternoon. Goldmark's "Ländliche Hochzeit" and a quintet, septet, and chorus from "Les Troyens," by Berlioz, are the novel elements of the programme.

A testimonial concert to Miss Emma C. Thursby was given at Chickering Hall, last evening. Miss Thursby sang the florid soprano air, with violin accompaniment, from "Le Pré aux Clercs," and Taubert's "Bird Song," and a miscellaneous programme of considerable attractiveness, but of slender artistic importance was cleverly interpreted by Mr. Richard Hoffman, Miss Finch, Mr. Carri, a string sextet and a quartet of male voices.

COMMISSIONER NICHOLS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

An Albany dispatch to an evening journal explains the absence of the Chairman of the Committee on Street-cleaning as follows:

"Police Commissioner Nichols arrived to-night in the interest of Capt. Wylie, who was nominated for Commissary General of Ordnance in the place of Kilbourne Knox."

I rejoice to know he has reached a place where the walking is good and the streets decently cleaned.

DEATH OF LUCILLE WESTERN.

Lucille Western, the actress, died at 7 o'clock last evening, at the Pierrepont House, in Brooklyn, of pneumonia. She arrived from Philadelphia last Sunday, and proceeded directly to the above-named hotel. She had an engagement to play Nancy Sykes, in "Oliver Twist," at the Park Theatre She was then suffering from a bad cold, but her condition did not prevent her from fulfilling her engagement until last Wednesday night, when she felt too ill to leave her room. She had acted at the matinée during the afternoon, although feeling very ill. Just before going to the matinée performance Dr. Spier was summoned, and he counseled the patient to remain in her room. Miss Western disregarded the advice, and possibly paid the penalty with her life. Even on Monday night, when she began her engagement, it was noticed by the spectators that her voice was little more than audible, and on the following day the local papers announced that its weakness was attributable to a sore throat. Nevertheless, her acting was very impressive, and it attracted much larger audiences than have attended the Park Theatre since the fire. On the occasion of the matinée the house was literally packed. In the evening Miss Annie Ward Tiffany assumed the rôle of Nancy. During the night Miss Western grew much worse, and when Dr. Spier called he found her in a high fever with strongly defined symptoms of pneumonia. The usual remedies were administered, but had little or no effect, the unfortunate lady sinking fast. Yesterday morning, however, she appeared to be somewhat better, and took a light breakfast of milk-toast and eggs. Stimulants were given throughout the day, and the patient seemed to be quite easy. No one thought she was in immediate danger; she was in and out of bed, and conversed at length with her nurse, the housekeeper, and her agent, Mr. A. G. Cambridge, who were with her almost continually. Shortly before 7 o'clock she got up to have her bed made. She sat in a large rocking-chair, drank a cup of tea, and ate a little toast. On returning to her couch she lay down heavily, threw her right arm across the pillow, and said, "Rest at last!" The tone was one of complete resignation and attracted the attention of the attendants, who hurried to her only to find she had sunken into a coma. The physician was hastily summoned, but he came too late, for Miss Western breathed her last in less than five minutes after uttering these words. Dissolution was seemingly so painless and quiet that even those who sat at her bedside, eagerly watching her countenance, could not tell absolutely when breathing ceased. During the afternoon of yesterday, seeing that Miss Western was very ill, her agent telegraphed to her mother at Malden, Mass., requesting the lady's presence. The mother answered the dispatch by asking if her daughter could not be brought home, and this dispatch was handed to Mr. Cambridge while he was closing the eyes of the dead actress. The remains will be taken to Malden to-day. Miss Western was the eldest of two sisters, Lucille and Helen, and was born at New-Orleans 8th January, 1833. From an early age she displayed decided talent for the stage, and when in 1858, or thereabouts, her mother married an unprincipled manager named W. B. English. Lucille and her sister were introduced to the public in a piece of a questionable character called "The Three Fast Men." In their new rôles, the sisters, and particularly Lucille, made a decided impression, though rather through their personal attractions than through any literary merit inherent in the piece itself. In fact "The Three Fast Men" was an eminently improper, even for that not over-fastidious day, that in Cincinnati and other cities Mr. English was enjoined by the courts against producing it. When it was finally withdrawn from the boards, Lucille had some difficulty in securing an engagement, but at length found one in a stock company in Philadelphia, under the management of Leonard Grover. While here she evinced remarkable dramatic power, and was recognized by John Brougham, Lester Wallack, Wiseman, Marshall, and other dramatic authorities, as an actress of great promise. In 1860 or 1861 she appeared in Baltimore in a dramatization of Mrs. Henry Wood's novel "East Lynne,"—which she is said to have purchased of Mr. Clifton Tayleure, the author, for a trifling sum. It was supposed that the play would only have a brief existence, whereas it proved the greatest success of the period, and gave Lucille Western a national reputation. It is estimated that her profits from the dramatization during the last 16 years have been between $250,000 and $300,000. Miss Western was first married to James Meade. Her sister, Helen, died at the Kirkwood House in Washington in 1867, and Lucille soon after engaged an actor named Herne as her business manager, and went to California on a professional tour. During the last few years she has been somewhat broken down in health, but has rarely allowed physical weakness to prevent her from fulfilling her engagements. She will be remembered by her personation of Nancy Sykes, Margaret Rookley, (in "the Child Stealer,") and Madame Vine in "East Lynne," and, in spite of critical disapproval of many of her methods, realistic almost to brutality—the impression of these performances will not be speedily effaced. Had Miss Western commenced her career ten years since, the influence of the society-drama which is now taking the place of melodrama pure and simple must have had a good effect upon her acting, and the prudeness of her style would doubtless have been lessened, its genuine power would have lost nothing by the increased refinement of the actress. Unfortunately the works in which she appeared were coarse and lurid, and the severe judgments often passed upon the performer in late years might with greater propriety have addressed themselves to the répertoire with which she had become identified.

CONSOLIDATED VIRGINIA MINE.

MEETING OF THE STOCKHOLDERS AT SAN FRANCISCO—STATEMENT OF OPERATIONS AND FINANCIAL CONDITION OF THE MINE—HOT WORDS BETWEEN STOCKHOLDERS AND DIRECTORS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 11.—The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Consolidated Virginia Silver Mining Company was held here this afternoon. Messrs. Mackey, Flood, O'Brien, and Judge Heydenfeldt were present in behalf of the management, and S. P. Dewey represented the malcontents. The office was crowded and much interest was manifested. The Secretary submitted his report, which shows that the receipts for the year, including the balance outstanding from the last report, were $17,470,106 80. The principal items were the gross product of the mine, $16,646,177 71, and overdrafts in the Nevada Bank, $569,055. The Managers had previously stated that much of these overdrafts were to save the ruinous discount on silver. The disbursements include bullion to balance unsold in bank, $568,636; dividends, from the 22d to the 33d, inclusive, $11,838,000; reduction of ore, $1,806,285; bullion discount, $1,342,000; salaries, $486,560; ore purchase, $453,000; supplies, $238,650; taxes, $236,000; C. and C. shaft, $236,000; assaying, legal expenses, &c., accounting for the balance.

Mr. Dewey attacked Mr. Flood sharply, accusing him of withholding information as to the condition and prospects of the mine, and the probability of passing the January dividend, when a candid explanation a few weeks ago would have saved the public millions of dollars.

Messrs. Mackey, Flood, and Heydenfeldt defended the management, claiming that it was impossible to anticipate developments; that two or three days or a week could not promise anything for the future to a certainty, and that the management had done their best.

The old board was re-elected, the opposition ticket receiving 32,335 votes.

A resolution was adopted, providing that hereafter a monthly statement of the receipts and expenditures be placed on file in the office for the benefit of the stockholders.

A proposition was made that the company purchase the Pacific Mill, owned by Flood & O'Brien, and used for crushing Consolidated Virginia ore, but was voted down.

The discussion during the afternoon was very hot, charges of falsehood being exchanged by Messrs. Flood and Dewey, and the meeting adjourned amid considerable confusion.

THE BURNING MINE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 11.—Nothing new can be learned in reference to the fire in the Lyken's Valley mines. The firemen are still at work combating the flames, but their progress is very slow. During an interview with a gentleman just from there this afternoon, it was learned that the work of extinguishing the fire is not progressing as favorably as was hoped. What is gained one day is lost the next. Fire, which is extinguished on the surface, smoulders underneath and breaks out again when least expected. The indications are that a month may elapse before an examination of the extent of the damage can be made.

MOVEMENTS OF NAVAL VESSELS.

PANAMA, Jan. 2.—The United States steamers Pensacola, flag-ship, and Omaha are still in port. The United States corvette Lackawanna, Capt. J. S. Grier, was at Mazatlan, Mexico, Dec. 22, looking after American interests there during the present troubles. She expected soon to start for La Paz, Lower California, to return to Mazatlan.

THE EASTERN CONFERENCE

THE POSSIBLE RESULT OF IT.

PROSPECTS OF AN ADJUSTMENT BY THE CONFERENCE OF THE POWERS—POSITION OF GERMANY.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company, dated Constantinople, 12:45 P. M. to-day, says: "It is asserted that although the Porte maintains its opposition to the proposed international commission, and the manner of nominating the provincial Governors, it is still possible that a basis for an understanding will be found on the ground of the Andrassy note, inasmuch as the attitude of Russia is thought to be really conciliatory. The sitting of the conference to-day is regarded as very important. Hopes are still entertained of an agreement being reached, but the attitude of Germany is said to excite some misgiving. If the sitting be without result, or there appears to be no possibility of an understanding, the powers, it is thought, will take decisive steps."

A Constantinople dispatch says: "Roumania has expressed satisfaction with the declaration of the Porte, that article 7 of the new constitution was purely internal, not affecting the rights of a principality guaranteed by international treaties."

PARIS, Jan. 11.—A dispatch from Bucharest published in the journals here, report that a band of Bashi-Bazouks crossed the Danube on Monday night, plundered a Roumanian outpost, and killed two Roumanian soldiers. There is great excitement in Roumania at the outrage.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 11.—The Phare du Bosphore says war must be considered imminent so long as the powers confine themselves to endeavoring to force the Porte to discuss their conditions without taking the Turkish proposals into consideration.

Herr Busch, the newly appointed Secretary of Legation, who will take charge of the German Embassy on the departure of Baron Von Werder, had an interview with Midhat Pasha to-day, and urged him to yield to the demands of the powers.

A dispatch from Pesth to the Daily News asserts that five fresh army corps will be added to the Kisheneff Army, and several divisions have already arrived.

A Belgrade dispatch to the Times says that it is stated there that the Turks attacked Rsiatz in the Negotin District on Tuesday, and 21 men were killed and wounded in the action. They attacked Negotin, but were repulsed. The Turks have burned two villages in the Morava Valley. It is possible that Gen. Nikotine has gone to the scene of action at Negotin. The Times correspondent adds that the Turks perhaps intend to violate the Servian soil, seize the south bank of the Danube opposite Turnseverein, and fortify the crossing place on both sides of the Ibar before the Russians or Roumanians can anticipate them. The Russian Consul has engaged a steam-boat to convey all the remaining Russian troops down the Danube.

LONDON, Jan. 12.—Reuter's telegram from Constantinople dated Thursday evening, says: "It is stated that at to-day's sitting of the conference, Baron Von Werther declared in the name of Germany that no further concession could be made. The Turkish delegates did not present to-day a new project for an understanding. The next sitting was fixed for Monday. It is generally believed here that the European plenipotentiaries will not then present an ultimatum, but will make a fresh communication to the Porte finally summing up the intentions of the powers, declaring this communication to be the last, and demanding that a categorical reply be given at the sitting following its presentation. If an understanding is then found to be impossible, the plenipotentiaries would quit Constantinople."

The Vienna correspondent of the Standard reports that the Italian delegate to the conference has been instructed to propose the removal of the seat of the conference to Vienna if no result is reached at Constantinople.

Reuter's telegram from Constantinople says explanations were exchanged in the conference which further demonstrated the existence of differences between the European powers and the Porte. The Turks persisted in rejecting the proposals of the powers, especially those for subjecting the appointment of Governors of Provinces to the approval of the powers and for an international commission. The Europeans remained united throughout the discussion. The conference rose yesterday before it came to any conclusion.

According to a Berlin dispatch it is said the Czar has demanded an immediate report on the state of the Southern Army, and he conferred Wednesday with the Minister of War concerning the further mobilization of troops.

It is reported that 50,000 Martini-Henry rifles, from Birmingham, have just arrived at Constantinople.

The Standard's dispatch from Belgrade, dated Thursday, says: "Gen. Nikitine goes to Gladova and Negotin to inspect the fortifications. He will return to Belgrade in a few days."

Intelligence comes from Bucharest that fresh means of transport for troops, artillery, and ammunition are arriving at Kisheneff. The Czar is expected there shortly.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says the statement is confirmed that at the beginning of the week Prince Bismarck sent Baron Von Werther a very curt dispatch criticising the extreme slowness of the conference, declaring the plenipotentiaries had gone too far in their successive concessions to the Porte, and regretting that Werther had joined in the concessions. Bismarck at the same time sent to his minister a note, directing him to communicate the dispatch to Lord Derby and with it state that he (Bismarck) thought this series of concessions and modifications agreed to by the conference in the face of Turkey's delay and resistance was contrary to the dignity of Europe and impaired the force of its collective action.

THE MEMBERS OF THE CONFERENCE—PERSONAL CHARACTERISTICS.

A letter from Constantinople in the Deutsche Zeitung says that Gen. Ignatieff is of middle height, strongly built, with somewhat abrupt movements, and a military bearing. He has a high forehead, strongly marked features, piercing brown eyes, a reddish moustache turning white at the points, and "the broad face of a Panslavist." He speaks several languages, but with a Slavonian accent. His family belongs to the petite noblesse, but his father was a general like himself, and is now President of the Ministerial Council at St. Petersburg. Gen. Ignatieff first distinguished himself by a very able report on the English Army which he sent to the Czar while he held the post of military attaché in London. In 1858 he was sent as Special Commissioner to Khiva and Bokhara. He was then for a time Minister in China, after which he became President of the Asiatic section in the Foreign Office at St. Petersburg, whence he was sent, eleven years ago, as Ambassador to Constantinople. Lord Salisbury is described as "a serious-looking man of 46, with a frank, energetic, and intelligent countenance." The Austrian Plenipotentiary, Count Zichy, is a short, active man of 65; he is one of the few Hungarian noblemen, who instead of squandering their property, have increased it, and he is said to be a personal friend of Gen. Ignatieff. His enemies say that he possesses very little influence, whether with the Turks or with the other diplomatists. Baron Von Werther, the German Plenipotentiary, is of about the same age as Count Zichy, and "looks, with his short grizzled beard, like an old colonel on half pay." He is unpopular with the German residents in the Turkish capital; but he is much respected by his subordinates, and makes a great impression on the Turks by his haughty bearing. He detests newspapers and newspaper correspondents, and if a correspondent pays him a visit, even with best introduction, he always treats him as an enemy. His wife, who was a Countess Oriola, is a staunch Ultramontane, and, although his children were christened as Protestants, she has brought them up as Roman Catholics. The outward appearance of Sir Henry Elliot, proceeds the correspondent, is very similar to that of Baron Von Werther. They are both of the same age, and both "stiff and lean," only that Sir Henry looks more like a "Quaker missionary." Count Corti, the Italian Plenipotentiary, is "short, lively, thin, and dark;" the French representative, Baron de Bourgoing, is "round, fat, tall, and dignified." Count Corti is 52 years old, and first became generally known in connection with the Alabama Arbitration. He was for 15 years Secretary to the Italian Embassy in London, and then served as Italian Minister in Sweden, Spain, Holland, America, and Constantinople. He has a great reputation as a diplomatist, and it is said that his special mission consists in striving to obtain Corfu for Italy, as a naval station, beside Tunis, the Albanian coast, and other little acquisitions which are believed to be coveted by Young Italy. Baron Bourgoing is 55 years of age. Both his father and grandfather were Ambassadors, and he was the French Minister at Rome before he came to Constantinople.

PUBLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE SOCIETY—VARIOUS REPORTS OF INTEREST READ—PRESIDENT CHANDLER'S ADDRESS—MORTALITY IN TENEMENT-HOUSES—THE CROTON WATER SUPPLY.

The annual meeting of the Public Health Association took place at No. 12 West Thirty-first street last evening, Dr. Charles F. Chandler in the chair. Dr. John C. Peters made a report for the Committee on Prevailing Epidemics, giving in detail the statistics of the various epidemics, including small-pox, diphtheria, typhoid fever, diarrheal disease, &c. Dr. W. De F. Day presented a series of maps, upon which were designated the location of the various cases of epidemical disease. Mr. William E. Partridge made brief address upon the subject of scattering salt in the streets for the purpose of melting the snow. His opinion in regard to the matter was that if the practice was allowed to continue, the simple result would be not the removal of the snow, but the conversion of snow into salt slush. He was of the opinion that there would be no difficulty in dealing with the snow question if there were not a "job" at the back of it. If steam could be used as a motive power in conveying the snow from the streets, he thought the expense would be far less than that now sustained in the continued interruption of business.

Dr. Peters expressed the opinion that the English system of salting the accumulated snow and ice, and then rapidly sweeping it into the sewers, was a good plan, and one which had been approved at a meeting of physicians in Philadelphia several years ago, when such men as Dr. Rogers, and Dr. Hayes Agnew had expressed their approval of that system.

Dr. Chandler, the President, next delivered his annual address. He said the ancients were far more particular in regard to hygiene than the people of modern times. In the early Christian ages, owing to a misconception of the Scriptural injunction in regard to "mortification of the flesh," it was believed that filthiness was akin to godliness. He had often heard it said when a child had died that "perhaps it was better for children to die young, for they were thus spared a great deal of suffering." Sanitarians, however, thought differently, and considered every life worth saving. The improvement in the public health during the past year had been very satisfactory, and the total number of deaths occurring during that period compared very favorably with that of previous years. The subject of the rate of sickness was very important, and one which he would endeavor to elaborate in a subsequent paper. It had been estimated that to every death 28 cases of sickness occurred. One of the most important topics for discussion was the overcrowding of tenement-houses. There was no reason why this City should not be one of the most healthy in the country; rivers flowed on either side of it; it was far the most part high ground, and in spite of all to the contrary, the supply of water was one of the finest possessed by any city in the world. He was of the opinion that one-third of the people who die every year in this City should be saved, as probably the greater part of this number of deaths was caused by overcrowding in tenement-house districts. In old times it had been customary among sanitarians to estimate 3 per cent. of the deaths in the City to the population of the tenement-house districts. Since April, 92, 1876, however, great care had been taken by the health officers to state whether deaths, as reported, had occurred in tenement houses or not, and the result had been to considerably reduce the established ratio, as it had been found that the actual number of deaths in tenement houses had been 53 per cent. of the entire mortality. It, however, the number of deaths in the City institutions were added to this number—and they were more properly of that class—it would be found that the death-rate was very nearly 60 per cent. It had been very truly stated that the Board of Health existed for the population of tenement-house districts, and there was no doubt that very much of the suffering of that class was alleviated by the board. It would, however, be impracticable for that body to adopt any stringent measures for the abolishment of the system of overcrowding in the tenement houses, as the capitalists who owned the buildings would resist with all their might, and the result would be disaster to the department. The speaker next passed to the question of the water supply. He said he was satisfied that the City was provided with an excellent supply of water. On certain occasions during the year the Croton water was turbid; the snow melted and ran into the streams before it could sink into the ground, and reappear in the springs, thus becoming purified; then, again, during the Summer, at certain periods, the water was turbid, owing to the presence of minute vegetable life, which produced an odor and an unpleasant taste, but these results were perfectly harmless, and it had not been shown that the turpidity of the water had caused any marked increase in the rate of sickness. A considerable portion of the city of London, England, derived its water supply from the Thames River, a portion of which receives the drainage of all the sewers of the city; but it had been found that the water of living streams had the power of purification and destroyed much of its own impurities. A plan had recently been proposed for utilizing the water of the Hudson for drinking purposes in this City. As to the character of the water there was no objection; but it was expensive, so far as the cost would go, would be fully as great as to increase the volume now derived from the Croton River and its tributaries. Dr. Chandler then spoke of the subject of improper food, and said that owing to want of an appropriation there were now no officers engaged in the inspection of meats. As to the adulteration of cereals or sugar, he did not believe it was carried on to any appreciable extent. He had examined the grape-sugar with which cane-sugar was said to be adulterated, and he had found it to be harmless in its sanitary conditions. He reviewed the project of providing abattoirs for the slaughtering of cattle, proposed a few years ago, and said that though the popular cry gone up against their establishment, the plan might have been acted upon, as at the time of that outbreak, the butchers had become reconciled to the project, and it would then have been an easy matter to have all the cattle arriving in this market for consumption, inspected before being slaughtered. The speaker then gave a brief outline of the recent work of the Health Department in preventing the adulteration of milk, and said he desired to correct the impression which had become general, to the effect that milk was adulterated with chalk or other substances, by saying that the Health officers had never claimed that anything but water had been used in diluting or adulterating milk. It was absolutely necessary, he said, that children under the age of five years, should be supplied with pure milk, as the lactean fluid was the principal article of food consumed by them at that period of life. Dr. Chandler concluded his address by giving the statistics of the deaths from various epidemical diseases during the past year. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Dr. Charles F. Chandler, Pa. D., L.L.D.; Vice President, Col. William P. Prentice; Recording Secretary, C. E. Lockwood; Corresponding Secretary, Dr. John C. Peters; Treasurer, Dr. Charles P. Russel.

THE MAIL ROBBERIES.

Another one of the missing mail-bags stolen by members of the gang broken up last week was received yesterday from Toronto, Canada, making the last now known to be missing. This contained about 500 letters, all of which, with a few exceptions, had been opened. These letters had not been wholly examined up to a late hour last night; consequently it is not known what inclosures they may have contained. Yesterday afternoon, Assistant Postmaster Pierson received instructions from Postmaster General Tyner, that hereafter the mail wagons from the Post Office should be covered with canvas, and in this way an effort will be made to prevent the repetition of these robberies.

A CANADIAN SWINDLER IN NEWJERSEY.

MORRISTOWN, Jan. 11.—Mr. Fuller, of the firm of Abbett & Fuller, New-York, lawyers for the Consolidated, Bank of Canada, is here with an order for the release of John H. Tallmadge, confined in this jail for the past four months on a charge of swindling the bank. The Sheriff refuses to release him until to-morrow morning. It is believed that the release is for the purpose of rearresting Tallmadge on another charge. He professes to have made no settlement with the bank, and the lawyer says there is no settlement.

THE RUSSIAN FLEET.

NORFOLK, Jan. 11.—The Russian Minister and Admiral commanding the Russian fleet arrived here to-night. The fleet has not yet arrived.

TAMMANY PRIMARY FRAUDS.

The committee of five appointed at the meeting of the new Tammany Hall Committee on Organization on Monday last are investigating the frauds alleged to have been perpetrated at the primary election held in the First Assembly District, on Dec. 27, for delegates to the General Committee for 1877. Yesterday Justice Duffy appeared to defend himself and the inspectors against the charges made, and was seconded by ex-Police Justice Quinn, who, in an address of some length, asserted that the ticket appended to the return presented to the General Committee on its organization was printed before the primary election, and received a majority of the votes cast. This assertion was sustained by other testimony. Mr. Dalton insisted that the only ticket voted for at the primary election was the one agreed upon in caucus, and that this ticket had been altered by the Inspectors of Election and had been wrongfully received as genuine by the General Committee. The Committee on Investigation then adjourned, after hearing further arguments from ex-Justice Quinn. A report will be made at the next meeting of the Committee on Organization.

THE TAXATION OF BANKS.

A PROTEST BY BUSINESS MEN.

SPECIAL MEETING OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE—ADOPTION OF PETITIONS TO CONGRESS AND THE LEGISLATURE—THE EVILS OF EXCESSIVE BANK TAXATION FULLY SET FORTH.

A special meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was held yesterday afternoon, in the rooms corner of William and Cedar streets, to take into consideration the subject of excessive and discriminating taxation levied by the Municipal and State authorities upon banks and bankers of this City, and likewise by the Federal Government upon all national banks, bankers, and banking institutions throughout the United States. Among those present were Mr. James M. Brown, Mr. Henry F. Spaulding, Mr. Gustav Schwab, Mr. Nathan W. Chandler, Mr. E. W. Corlies, Mr. George T. Hope, Mr. B. G. Arnold, Mr. W. H. Guion, Mr. James P. Wallace, Mr. A. S. Barnes, Mr. Benjamin B. Sherman, Mr. George A. Jarvis, Mr. Frederick D. Tappen, Mr. J. S. T. Stranahan, Mr. George S. Coe, Mr. B. L. Solomon, Mr. John Paton, Mr. H. K. Bull, Capt. Ambrose Snow, Mr. Charles Watrous, Mr. James Hasleburst, and Mr. James F. Ruggles.

The meeting was called to order by the President, Mr. S. D. Babcock, who stated that the call was not signed by parties directly interested in banks, but he should judge they were principally large stockholders, who were led to this course by the fact that excessive taxation would lead to the diminution of capital, and that some preliminary step was necessary to prevent this reduction and the diversion of capital that would add to the existing depression.

Mr. Gustav Schwab, in an address calling attention to the petitions circulated in the meeting, said that it was only natural that such an effort should be made in this State and City, where was represented over 28 per cent. of the banking capital of the United States, and where is held over 38 per cent. of the bank deposits of the country. Any tax on such capital and deposits for the benefit of the United States must necessarily be felt in the financial metropolis of this State more than anywhere else. On the other side, the taxation in the State of New-York has been brought to bear on our banks with far greater stringency, and to a much greater extent, than has been the case in other States, thus placing these banks in a very unfavorable position compared to these of our neighboring States. The injurious effects of such double taxation have, therefore, developed themselves here in a degree which forces upon bankers the necessity of action. The taxation borne by the banks of this City has, for a number of years past, averaged over 5 per cent. on the amount of their capital, and every observer of financial affairs must be aware that, with this heavy burden to carry, it has been exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, for them to earn what must be considered a fair net interest for their stockholders. Many of the disasters and losses experienced by individual banks within the past ten years must be ascribed to their inability to earn dividends without taking undue risks. The national taxation had to be patiently borne as long as the credit of the country had to be redeemed from the effects of the war; but this object being now fully accomplished, they might justly appeal to Congress for relief from the whole of that war tax. With regard to State taxation, they might with equal propriety point to the great injustice with which the laws of the State operate on corporate bank capital in comparison with the capital of foreign bankers and of business men generally, and they might justly ask for such partial relief as will place the banks of the City and State since more on a par with those of other States. For no other reason than an excessive taxation have the accumulated surplus earnings of New-York banks within a short time past been reduced by upward of $3,000,000. Not only is this reduction in rapid progress, but for the same reasons a movement has also been initiated for the reduction of bank capital. If the propositions recently made to their stockholders by a few leading banks in this City are carried out, as they probably will be, the reduction of bank capital within the present year alone will amount to $12,500,000 dollars, or about 12 per cent. of the incorporate bank capital of this State, and 15 per cent. of the bank capital of this City. This reduction of bank capital and reserve is likely to go on and to assume much larger proportions than would be warranted by the temporary reduction in the volume of business, and if they now failed to stop its course, they will, when the much-desired revival of business sets in, discover that that revival is obstructed by the fact that the tools of commerce and industry have been blunted and rendered inadequate by unwise taxation. The sudden decrease of the bank capital of the country before 1857 culminated in the crisis of that year; the lesson might be applied to present circumstances, and a similar financial embarrassment be expected if a violent reduction of banking facilities be allowed to run to excess. For arresting this dangerous movement, no remedy be so far proposed except the relief from taxation prayed for in these petitions, and the Chamber of Commerce of this State will act in harmony with its traditions and duty if it adds the weight of its voice to the united effort of the banks, and indorses the sentiments therein expressed. Mr. Schwab then offered the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this Chamber cordially indorses and adopts the petitions prepared for presentation to Congress and to the Legislature of this State on the subject of excessive taxation on banking capital, and that a committee of —— members be appointed to take charge of procuring signatures to the petitions and of their presentation at Washington and Albany.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Chamber is hereby authorized and instructed to communicate with the various Chambers of Commerce and Boards of Trade in other cities, requesting them to co-operate in this movement by immediately sending to Congress petitions similar to the one adopted by this Chamber.

Mr. George T. Hope seconded the resolutions. He was glad that the matter had been taken up by the right parties. We as bankers should speak for ourselves that are always objects of suspicion to legislators, as it was believed they were acting only in their own interests. It is the duty of members of the Chamber to study this question of the taxation of corporations. As a consequence of this unendurable tax the surpluses of our institutions are to be reduced, and the effect of the tax has been to interfere with and retard the success of our institutions. It should be the duty of our institutions to restrict their dividends until they have abundant surpluses. So with regard to all taxes imposed by the State; the tendency, unless they are wisely distributed, is evil. The citizens of New-York are interested in this subject, as discriminations in many ways have been made against this City, and it is unnecessarily in danger of losing its supremacy. The danger is quite as great to the rest of the State as it is to the City.

Mr. Isaac Philips also seconded the resolutions in a similar strain.

Mr. Henry Wilson, Secretary of the Chamber, then read the petitions, which were as follows:

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The petition of the undersigned respectfully showeth: That war taxes, both heavy and unequal in their burden, are imposed on the National banks, State banks, savings banks, and private bankers of this country, which taxes have been for several years productive of great commercial injury; that in no other country are such taxes incurred by the business of banking, and, the exigency having passed away, the war taxes can be taken off without any sacrifice to the Treasury at all commensurate with the benefit which will result to the agricultural, financial, commercial, and industrial pursuits of the country. That the continuance of this onerous and discriminating taxation on banking capital is rapidly withdrawing it from the business, leaving the commerce and industries of the country ill prepared to meet a long-hoped-for returning tide of prosperity. That a persistence in this unequal and special tax can lead to but one result, and that is, to compel the banks to withhold depression and inactivity. That the present time is a proper one for Congress to interfere for the relief of these interests; that the taxes now levied by the General Government upon the capital of the banks of the United States be immediately repealed; and the subject of bank taxation be remitted to the several States and Territories, as before the war. And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

To the Honorable the Senate and Assembly of the State of New-York:

The petition of the undersigned, engaged in commercial, mercantile, and manufacturing business, respectfully shows: That the taxes upon the shareholders of banks in the City of New-York are assessed in a manner that imposes upon that single class of property a heavy and unequal burden, not applied to any other, and which is driving out of the City and State immense amounts of capital which have hitherto contributed to the public revenues, and have also promoted the growth and prosperity of every variety of taxable and dependent interest; that the diminution of banking capital in this City alone, and of the taxable value of bank shares consequent upon this unjustly discriminating assessment, has for the past year reached some $20,000,000, and the reaction is still further threatened. That this loss is occurring at a critical moment, when the commercial pre-eminence of this Metropolis is endangered by rival interests, and when the State and the nation will require all their combined capital to aid in restoring the country to a sound financial condition. That neither justice, public policy, nor even immediate revenue is promoted by the present method of taxing banks, but, on the contrary, that the city, state, and nation are all receiving irreparable injury from the consequent diminution of this important interest. Wherefore, they pray your honorable bodies to amend the laws so that the shareholders of banks in this State shall not be assessed above the actual value of their property so invested, after deducting all property with respect to which any private citizen or incorporated corporation, not a bank or banking association, is exempt from assessment and taxation by authority of the State. And your petitioners will every pray, &c.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted. It was then voted that the committee suggested by the resolutions should consist of 10 members, and that it should be appointed by the Chair. The meeting then adjourned. After the meeting the petitions were signed by Williams & Guion, Archer & Bull, B. L. Solomon & Sons, B. G. Arnold & Co., John Monroe & Co., Oelrichs & Co., Francis T. Walker & Co., and George E. Sutare. The committee appointed by President Babcock was as follows: Mr. George T. Hope, Mr. Gustav Schwab, Mr. B. G. Arnold, Mr. H. B. Claflin, Mr. Martin Bates, Mr. James Hasleburst, Mr. Anson Phelps Stokes, Mr. James M. Constable, Mr. William B. Kendall, and Mr. A. S. Barnes. The petitions are to be circulated among business men for additional signatures.

AN INCIDENT OF CITY TRAVEL.

A BEAUTIFUL LADY IN DISTRESS—EXCITING CHASE AFTER A STREET CAR BY A STOUT GENTLEMAN—RECOVERY OF A VALUABLE PACKAGE.

About 12:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon a very beautiful lady hurriedly entered car No. 40, of the New-York and Harlem Line, at Twentieth street, and informed the conductor that she had left a valuable package in the car immediately ahead, and anxiously asked whether there was any way by which she could obtain it without going to the terminus at the City Hall. She explained that she was in a great hurry, and that it was a matter of great importance to her to get possession of her package with as little delay as possible. The conductor very politely told her that he would endeavor to catch up with the other car, and at once went to the front platform and directed the driver to increase the speed of his horses. By this time the sympathies of the passengers were excited in the lady's behalf, and all watched the progress of the chase with much interest. A stout, well-dressed gentleman with a kindly face and gray moustache, perhaps remembering the old saying that "a stern chase is a long chase," and seeing that it would be some time before the car would be overtaken, volunteered to catch it. At this time the rear car had stopped at the corner of Thirteenth street, and having obtained a hurried description of the lost property, he sprang from the platform, and, gaining the sidewalk, gallantly started in pursuit. The spectacle of a stout, elegantly dressed gentleman, running at full speed down Fourth avenue, attracted considerable attention, and had it not been for his exceedingly respectable appearance he would undoubtedly have been arrested on suspicion, for even as it was, the policemen whom he met on his way turned and watched him as if doubtful whether it would not be proper to take him up as a matter of precaution. He continued on his way unmolested, however, and with the exception of a few collisions with small boys with sleds, met with no accidents.

In the meantime the conductor of No. 40 was on the front platform doing his best to attract the attention of his comrade on the "chase" by waving his handkerchief and blowing the driver's whistle. His efforts were unsuccessful, however, until Third street was reached, when the car was halted. The stout gentleman, who had gained about half a block on the car which he had left, immediately jumped on board, and a moment later came out triumphantly, holding the coveted package in his hand. The pretty lady who had been watching the progress of the gallant volunteer, so soon as she saw that he had been successful, impatiently stepped from the rear platform of the car while it was in motion, and fell in the street. At this juncture, a tall, lean, yellow-faced gentleman, attired in a long gray ulster, with an immense collar and heavy cuffs of astrakhan, sprang to her assistance and helped her to rise and escorted her to the corner. There she was met by the stout gentleman, who, with beaming face, gave her the package and blushingly received her thanks.

THE SINKING OF THE MONTGOMERY.

ARRIVAL OF THE CAPTAIN AND 18 OF THE CREW IN THIS CITY—STATEMENT OF THE STEWARD.

Capt. Winters and 18 of the crew of the steam-ship Montgomery, which was run into and sunk off Cape May on Sunday morning, Jan. 6, by the steamer Seminole, arrived in this City on Wednesday evening from Boston. They all give glowing accounts of the kind treatment received in Boston when they reached that city. E. O. Laughlin, the steward, yesterday gave to a TIMES reporter some interesting particulars of the collision and sinking of the vessel, and of the rescue of the men who were saved. Laughlin says that at the time of the collision he was asleep in his berth, which was on the main deck of the Montgomery. He was partly dressed, and when the crash came he sprang up, hearing a loud blowing of whistles and confused cries on deck. Emerging from his state-room he saw the two vessels locked together. The Seminole had struck the Montgomery at a point just opposite the foremast, driving her bow nearly halfway through the latter steamer. She then "slewed" or swung around, opening wide the breach made by striking, and allowing a flood of water to pour into the hold. Capt. Winters ran about the decks, apprising the sleeping men below of their danger, and urging them to jump to the Seminole, which lay alongside the Montgomery for a moment or two, so that several of the men could leap on board her decks. The latter backed out, and ten minutes after she was struck, the Montgomery, with a glide, without listing a particle, sank beneath the waves. Laughlin says he saw the Spanish passengers near by him a moment before the sinking, and that when the vessel went down several men were at work cutting away one of the boats. The night was very dark, and he could just see the forms of men in the water near him, although he could not distinguish faces. He swam about for perhaps half an hour, when he saw a dark object floating near him. He reached out for it, and caught the side of a boat. He was drawn in, and found it to be one of the Montgomery's boats. He took an oar, and three other men who were on board helped to pull the boat toward the Seminole. Soon after they picked up a fifth man. Seven men were saved by means of the Montgomery's boat, E. O. Laughlin, R. H. Jenkins, James Norton, P. O. Strum, James Callender, John Lehman, and John Hagan. While the Seminole's boat picked up three—John McEwen, Henry Osborne, and John Munroe—the first two of the last named being found on the upturned keel of a boat, while John Munroe was taken from a floating hatch eight minutes after the rest had been found. Among the lost were John O'Keefe, oiler, of New-York, a married man, whose brother and sisters are living; John Morgan, fireman, New-York, and Thomas Scott, New-York, all of whom lived in the First Ward. James Deering, stoker, New-York, and Thomas Stockburn, New-York, were lost. Laughlin says that, so far as he was aware, the discipline on the vessel was good. There were no women on board, the name of Alexander Phillips having been incorrectly reported from Boston as Alice Phillips Robbins.

THE CARGO OF THE AMERIQUE.

The Jesse Hoyt arrived in this City yesterday with 10 car-loads of the cargo of the steamer Amérique, and there seems to be every probability that by to-night the entire load of the steam-ship will be removed either to the beach or lighters, and that it will be received by the consignees in perfect order. The vessel is still in good condition, and efforts will be made as soon as possible to pull her off from the shore. The task is looked upon as a prodigious one, and even in the office of the Coast Wrecking Company the prospect of saving her is based entirely upon the continuance of favorable weather. The hull is now imbedded 12 feet in the sand, and a shoal has formed between the ship's side and the beach, upon which one may almost walk out to her. The Thingvalla will take out the freight intended for the Amérique.

THE LOSS OF THE SHIP SIMLA.

The ship Simla, which was stranded a week ago, five miles south of Barnegat, yesterday began to fall to pieces, and will become a total loss. She was bound for this port in ballast, and after stranding was put into the hands of the Coast Wrecking Company. She remained dry and intact for several days, but the strain upon her becoming severe, she was broken up, the masts finally going by the board. Messrs. Salter & Livermore, the engineers, say that the ship was insured in Boston companies for $54,000, distributed as follows: American, $6,000; Washington, $6,000; China Mutual, $12,000; India, $6,000; Boylston, $6,000; Manufacturers', $6,000; Boston, $12,000; total, $54,000. The vessel will now probably be stripped and the material sold for what it will bring in the market.

CHARGES AGAINST POLICE CAPTAINS.

A complaint has been preferred by Mr. H. B. Herts, the auctioneer, against Capt. Edward Walsh, of the Twenty-sixth Precinct, charging him with improper conduct in stopping a sale of furs at Mr. Herts' establishment and denouncing it as a swindle. Charges are being prepared against Capt. Hedden of the Thirty-third Precinct, by Mr. Hawley, Chief Clerk of the department, who, however, declines to make the nature of the charges public until the matter has been acted upon by the Commissioners. It is understood that the complaints had its origin in a station-house "squabble," in which one of the Sergeants of the Thirty-third Precinct took a prominent part. Capt. Tynan, of the Sixteenth Precinct, is also at present the subject of an investigation by the Superintendent. The Captain is charged with having abused a respectable young man, who was arrested on suspicion of being a disreputable character, and failed to give the accused an opportunity to prove his good character, but kept him locked up at the station-house all night.

THE DE VERNON HOMICIDE CASE.

Messrs. Coudert Brothers, counsel for Mme. Clotide de Vernon, widow of Gustave de Vernon, have sent a petition to Senator Wagstaff asking for the passage of a special act by the Legislature for the relief of the lady and child, her husband having died from the effects of a beating received by him from John Powar, a nurse in the Blackwell's Island Lunatic Asylum, who was convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to imprisonment by Judge Brady. The petition recites the poverty of the petitioner and the improbability of any recovery as against the City under the law as it now stands.

BEARING THE BRUNT OF IT.

DR. PHELPS' CASE IN COURT.

THE PRISONER PUTS IN A TRAVERSE TO THE SHERIFF'S RETURN—ARGUMENT ON THE LEGALITY OF THE COMMITMENT—THE QUESTION OF A WITNESS TESTIFYING AGAINST HIMSELF—THE DECISION RESERVED AND THE PRISONER TEMPORARILY REMANDED.

The committal of Dr. Charles Phelps for contempt of court, in refusing to answer certain questions put to him by the Grand Jury in regard to the Bennett-May duel, was brought before Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, at 9 A. M. yesterday, on the return to the writ of habeas corpus obtained in the case. The Sheriff made a return to the writ, setting forth the authority by which he held the prisoner. The latter's counsel immediately put in the following traverse:

Supreme Court.—In the Matter of the Habeas Corpus for Charles Phelps.—Before Hon. Charles Donohue, one of the Justices of the Supreme Court.—Now again comes Charles Phelps, who has before petitioned under the statute for his release upon writ of habeas corpus and of certiorari in aid; and the said petitioner having inspected the return to said writ now traverses said return as follows:

First—It doth not, as in fact and law it should in order to maintain his said detention, appear by the recitals of the commitment that either any member of the Grand Jury or any other person had, before this traverser was examined by said Grand Jury as a witness, complained under oath or otherwise in the name of the people against the said James Gordon Bennett or the said Frederick May as being guilty or probably guilty of the offence against the statutes of this State, so that the said Grand Jury could acquire any jurisdiction to examine this traverser in the mode set up in the commitment returned as true cause of the imprisonment of this traverser, or to examine this traverser as a witness any of the questions recited in the said commitment; and this traverser avers that as matter of fact no member of the Grand Jury nor any other person before this traverser was called as a witness had in any manner made on oath or otherwise any complaint wherein this traverser, Charles Phelps, could be lawfully examined as a witness before the said Grand Jury. And this traverser avers that at the time there was pronounded to him the questions set up in the commitment the said Grand Jury did not possess jurisdiction to propound to him said questions, nor did the Court of General Sessions possess jurisdiction to issue the said commitment.

Second—That at the time this traverser was called as an alleged and pretended witness before the said Grand Jury, no one had complained against this traverser, or against the said Bennett or May, as being an offender against the laws of this State in that he had within this State fought a duel with deadly weapons against any other person, or that he had, within this State, challenged another person to fight a duel, or that he had sent or delivered any written or verbal message purporting or intended to be a or such challenge or message, or had knowingly carried or delivered any or such challenge or message, or had been present within this State at any time or fighting therein any duel with deadly weapons, either as second, aid, surgeon, or had advised or given any countenance or assistance to such duel; and this traverser denies that any complaint embodying any or all of the foregoing particulars was in any wise entertained by said Grand Jury against any person at the time when this traverser refused to answer the questions alleged in the said commitment; and this traverser avers that neither he nor said Bennett nor said May was, in any wise, an offender against the statutes made and provided in the case of persons challenging to, or fighting a, duel within this State; and this traverser avers that he is not, and was not at the time of the propounding of the said questions, within the jurisdiction of any statute granting him immunity against prosecution for any or all of the offences aforesaid, should he testify to any matters tending to expose him to prosecution for a criminal offense.

Third—That the commitment is void in that on its face it shows that in propounding the questions aforesaid to this traverser the Grand Jury were proceeding to inquire into transactions occurring outside of this State.

Fourth—This traverser has been advised by counsel, and he believes and avers that by the recitals of the commitment he had been by an informal and illegal action of the Grand Jury, exclusively of any other charge, charged with having aided and abetted said Bennett and said May, or either, in leaving this State with an intention and purpose of eluding the law relating to dueling, and then of aiding and abetting said Bennett and said May or either in returning into this State a challenge to fight a duel out of this State, they being inhabitants thereof; and that said questions were by the Grand Jury propounded to this traverser under the instruction and direction of the Court, and this traverser alleges that if said charge be true he is amenable to punishment for a criminal offense in another State than New-York, as well as to punishment in this State, and he avers that by the compulsion of evidence he is upon such charge privileged from answering any questions which might tend to criminate him in such offense; and he avers that if said charge against him be true, then no statute giveth to him any immunity from punishment or protection, providing he gives testimony criminating himself, yet only to be used against other persons. And he avers that by the informal and illegal action of the Grand Jury at the time when said questions were propounded to him, said May and said Bennett were also charged as aforesaid with having left the State of New-York while inhabitants thereof for the purpose of eluding the laws made and enacted relating to dueling, and that of this State a challenge to fight a duel, and were charged with no other offence, and that to aid in discovering said and no other offence this traverser had been called into the said room from the examination as a witness, and being the examination of this traverser set up in the commitment, this traverser alleges that he was privileged by the Constitution and laws of the land from answering said or any of said questions. And this traverser avers that his acts set up in the commitment on its face, whereof he has been adjudged guilty of contempt, were acts necessarily innocent and justifiable, and that in refusing to answer said or any of the questions, he was only asserting a right which was secured to him by the Constitution and law of the land.

Fifth—That within his own mind in the Grand Jury room he declined to answer said questions because each tended to form a link in a chain of testimony which would criminate him in the allegations of crime imputed by the questions were true or founded upon fact. That he also was informed and believed by one of said questions for the reasons aforesaid, and claiming that the return shows him to be imprisoned solely because he refuses to answer questions for such reasons aforesaid, and because that the original petition for writs of habeas corpus and certiorari be adjudged of no effect, and that he be released from said commitment forthwith, without further day in court or further restraint of his liberty by the said Sheriff.

CHARLES PHELPS.

After the traverse had been put in the matter was adjourned until 1:30 P. M. At the appointed hour the court-room was completely filled with men eager to listen to the argument in the case. Dr. Phelps occupied one of the chairs in the court-room, and seemed to take things in a rather cool manner, betraying very few, if any, marks of intense interest. He was represented by A. Oakey Hall and John A. Foley. District Attorney Phelps appeared for the people.

THE ARGUMENT IN THE CASE.

Mr. Foley opened the proceedings by referring to the papers in the case, and read the traverse to the Sheriff's return.

District Attorney Phelps then said: I desire to be understood as making a motion for the dismissal of this writ upon the return and upon the traverse thereto, upon the ground that there is nothing alleged in the traverse which in anywise avoids or impeaches the commitment. I think it is proper I should make the motion at this stage, although prior to the order of discussion I have no preference, and am willing that the whole matter should be heard on argument, as may be agreeable to the court or counsel.

Mr. Hall said: My first proposition in behalf of the petitioner is that the Court has no full jurisdiction to inquire into the cause of detention stated in the commitment, and full power to discharge if the grounds we now present shall be deemed valid. I am aware that the General Term of this court in the Shanks case, in the second volume of Hun, had denied the power of a Judge at Chambers to discharge under similar circumstances. But your honor will remember that in the case I have referred to a peculiar plea of privilege, unknown to the law, was made, and was the basis of the habeas corpus. We have made this application, following the precise language of the case of Hackley, originated by Judge Waterbury as the District Attorney, and which subsequently came within the jurisdiction of his successor. Mr. Hall then referred to the Hackley case, in which the Court of Appeals held that cases of contempt like the present could be reviewed on habeas corpus and certiorari. Mr. Hall continued: The second proposition is that the commitment on its face shows that the Grand Jury were proceeding to inquire into an infraction of section 5 of the Dueling Code, or rather Anti-Dueling Code, in the Revised Statutes. For instance, in the matter of the inquiry as to whether one James Gordon Bennett or Frederick May, of the present month, left the State of New-York for the purpose of fighting a duel without the State, or for the purpose of receiving a challenge to fight a duel"—that was the subject matter of the inquiry which the Grand Jury had under charge. The statute is section 5 of the article on dueling, and is taken from the law of 1816, which was adopted with changes by the revisers. * * * In the Revised Statutes, sections 1 and 2 prohibit all kinds of acts wholly committed in this State. Section 5 relates to acts in relation to dueling and challenging partly taken—initiated, if you choose—here, and perfected in another State. The Grand Jury proceed to show that following, under section 5, are persons amenable to the common law rule of privilege. My proposition is this, that, in the language of the Court of Appeals in the Hackley case, it is a branch of the common law doctrine which excuses a person from giving testimony which will tend to disgrace him, to charge him with a penalty or forfeiture, or to convict him of a crime. It is, of course, competent for the Legislature to change any doctrine of the common law, but, I think, they could not compel a witness to testify, on a trial of any person, to facts which would prove himself guilty of a crime without indemnifying him against the consequence, because, I think, as has been mentioned, that, by a legal construction, the Constitution would be found to forbid it." Mr. Hall, continuing, said that if the inquiry of the Grand Jury were under sections 1 and 2, the witness could have immunity from punishment, but the inquiry is under section 5, and no immunity is provided or given by the statute. Under section 5 there are co-ordinate offenses—one against the laws of this State and the other against the laws of another State—so that a person might on his testimony given on proceedings here be charged in another State on his own declarations. That was the reason, doubtless, why the revisers did not attach under section 5 the immunity attached under sections 1 and 2. Another question, the counsel said, was whether Dr. Phelps was charged with complicity in the kind of transaction referred to in section 5. Mr. Hall then read the questions which the witness had refused to answer. One question was: "Do you know whether any hostile meeting has occurred between Mr. Bennett and Mr. May?" This called for personal knowledge, said the counsel. If he knew of any hostile meeting between them, he was more or less in complicity with these gentlemen, under the allegations against them which the Grand Jury were pursuing, and, therefore, the answer which he would make to that would tend to expose him not only to prosecution in this State, under section 5, but subject him to prosecution in some other State. Mr. Hall, proceeding, then said that Dr. Phelps, while in the Grand Jury room, made the declination in his own mind, relying on his common law privilege, and in the court-room his counsel so stated to the court. So far as the answers tended to criminate himself, it was the duty of the court to apprise him of his right in that respect. Mr. Hall, in conclusion, said: "I submit, reserving what else I may have to say till we have heard from our friends on the other side, that this writ should not be dismissed, because we are brought distinctly within the line of the argument, and the decision upon the law and logic of the case of the People against Hackley, and that the case of Shanks does not relate to this, because there was there no plea of privilege which the law would look at. In this case there is. It is a privilege which the law gives directly to a witness. Within the forum of his own mind he has a right to determine in reference to it, and having so determined all the court can do is to see if by any possibility the answer to the question would tend to link him with a criminal offense for which he would have to be prosecuted."

District Attorney Phelps, in response, said that it did not appear that the witness had at any time before the Grand Jury avowed or urged or claimed any privilege from answering questions upon the ground that the answers to them would tend to and wise to criminate himself. "It is not new averred," continued Mr. Phelps, "as matter of fact, either in the petition or traverse, that the answers of the witness to the questions propounded to him would in any wise tend to criminate him. The utmost that can be urged as a fact, in the allegations and the papers, is a hypothetical statement that if certain things be true, then the answers to these questions might tend to criminate him. He was brought before the Grand Jury as a witness, and certain questions were propounded which he refused to answer. It does not appear either by the commitment or the questions that any charge whatever had been made or was pending against the witness. There is not any question addressed to the witness through which the court can infer that any charge was made against the witness, or was to be made, as the result of that inquiry. My learned friend has announced as his first proposition that he claims the full jurisdiction of this court to inquire into the legality and justice of this commitment, and the mode selected, by writ of habeas corpus. I submit that the proposition is untenable. I submit that, under the clear provisions of the statutes, it must be conceded that the Court of General Sessions is a court of general criminal jurisdiction within this County, and that the Grand Jury impaneled is the grand inquest of this County, having authority to inquire into crimes and offenses committed therein. And it appearing that this witness has been committed by the orderly and regular process of the Court of General Sessions, then it becomes your honor's duty to dismiss this writ, and remand the prisoner to the custody whence he came. And I submit to your honor with great respect that, in this district at least, that question is settled in favor of the people in the case of the people against Fancher. In that case Shanks had been committed by the Oyer and Terminer for contempt for refusing to answer questions by the Grand Jury, and that commitment was precisely the same, I believe, as the commitment in this case." Mr. Phelps then called attention to the section of the Habeas Corpus act, by which it is provided that, in case it appears on the return to a writ, that the prisoner is detained for any contempt specially and finally charged in the commitment by some court or body having authority to commit for the contempt so charged, it was the duty of the Judge to remand the prisoner and dismiss the writ.

Judge Donohue asked whether the decision in the Shanks case had not been somewhat qualified by the decision of the Court of Appeals in the Tweed habeas corpus case.

Mr. Phelps said that in the latter case the court decided they could inquire on habeas corpus into the jurisdiction of the committing court, but not into the justice or legality of the commitment. Here there was no question of jurisdiction.

Judge Donohue remarked that it was a question as to whether the Grand Jury had jurisdiction to put certain questions.

Mr. Phelps, continuing, said that the question of the privilege of the witness was one to be determined by the court before whom the party was brought, and any error committed by the court could only be reviewed in the ordinary way, and not by writ of habeas corpus, and the question was not one of jurisdiction, but of error of the court, to be reviewed by appeal. The question whether the witness had the right to claim his privilege, and whether his privilege should be allowed under the circumstances, was a question to be determined by the court, and not by habeas corpus, or any proceeding by habeas corpus. The next proposition was, assuming that this court will proceed to inquire into the circumstances attending this commitment, that it nowhere appears upon these papers that the witness, either before the Grand Jury where he was examined, or before the court, was called upon to answer any question as alleged on the traverse that the witness had it in his mind, but Mr. Phelps said he apprehended that whatever the witness had in his mind cannot exempt him from answering the questions, if he did not bring the excuse of privilege to the knowledge of the tribunal examining him. The question of privilege, he said, must be availed of by the witness when the question is propounded. It was hinted in the traverse that the answers might tend to implicate the witness in an offense in some other jurisdiction outside of this State. "I apprehend," said Mr. Phelps, "that that is not a matter which your honor or I inquire into. I apprehend the courts here do not wish to furnish parties with immunity for offenses committed outside of this State, not under their control." In concluding, Mr. Phelps submitted, first, that on the face of the papers there is no privilege exempting the witness from answering these questions under the law; second, it is apparent upon the face of the papers that no privilege exempting the witness has been, or is now, claimed shielding him from answering; third, whatever may be the opinion of this court with regard to the propriety of the question of the privilege of the witness, that is a matter entirely within the province of the court which has ordered this commitment, and can only be reviewed, as errors in that court can be reviewed, on appeal, and that therefore your Honor has no power to inquire into the legality of the commitment, and it is your duty to remand the prisoner."

Mr. Hall followed in an argument in which he contended that it was the duty of the court to have advised the witness as to his privilege. The counsel also carefully reviewed the cases cited and contended that the writ of habeas corpus was the proper procedure in the case. He submitted the following propositions to the Court.

First—It is admitted that the Grand Jury were inquiring under section 5 of the Dueling act and not under sections 1 and 2—i. e., for acts partly in this State and partly in another.

Second—Unless indemnified by statute against consequences of confession, a witness cannot be compelled, to testify toward tendency of crimination.

Third—The indemnity of section 3 of the Dueling act is confined by terms of the section to acts under sections 1 and 2, to wit: to acts wholly begun, continued, and ended in this State, and does not touch section 5. The reviser's notes to sections show that the distinction was purposely made.

Fourth—There being no immunity, or protection, or compulsion attaching to section 5, the witness may assert his common law privilege.

Fifth—Asserting it in court, as he did by counsel, and as he now by himself asserts his privilege, the court is committing acted illegally.

Sixth—There was reason for not compelling a witness to self-crimination where the acts were partially done out of the State, because even if immunity was attached to the home acts, the self-crimination could be used in another tribunal. The language of sections 6 and 7, and also the reviser's notes, show this construction.

Seventh—In any event the Grand Jury was without jurisdiction. No complaint was pending. It was fishing for testimony.

Eighth—The court should have advised Dr. Phelps not to answer instead of committing him.

Judge Donohue took the papers, reserving his decision. Pending the decision he remanded the prisoner to the custody of the Sheriff.

ADDITIONAL WITNESSES BEFORE THE GRAND JURY.

The investigation into the Bennett-May duel was continued by the Grand Jury yesterday, with no definite result. The persons summoned to appear were Mr. Herman Oelrichs, cousin of Mr. Frederick May, who is supposed to know a good deal more about the transaction than he cares to tell, and Mr. John Townshend, Mr. Bennett's family lawyer, who, it was stated, was called upon to draw up Mr. Bennett's will preparatory to that gentleman setting out for the dueling-ground. Both witnesses answered the questions put them by the Grand Jury, and were allowed to depart. The evidence elicited from them was, however, entirely inadequate to warrant the finding of an indictment against any of the principals or participants in the affair, and the Grand Jury adjourned without taking action. Dr. Frederick May, the father of Mr. May; Mr. Lawrence Jerome, Mr. Bennett's valet, Vogel, and others supposed to be in possession of information in relation to the affair, have been summoned, and their appearance is awaited with interest, although it is not expected that any material evidence will be obtained from them.

In conversation with a reporter, after his departure from the Grand Jury room, Mr. Oelrichs said that the Grand Jury had received no information from him about the duel, for the simple reason that he knew nothing. Neither himself, Dr. May, nor Mr. Lawrence Jerome knew anything of the affair, and it was only a waste of time to summon them. From his intimate connection with the May family, he was, of course, conversant with their affairs, but knew nothing whatever about the duel, or whether a duel had been fought at all.

DR. PHELPS IN MORE TROUBLE.

Police Commissioner Erhardt, Chairman of the Committee on Rules and Discipline, is engaged in investigating an informal complaint made against Dr. Charles Phelps, Police Surgeon of the Eighth District, consisting of the Eighteenth and Twenty-fifth Precincts, growing out of the alleged connection of the Doctor with the Bennett-May duel. It is asserted that Dr. Phelps, who is Mr. Bennett's physician, accompanied that gentleman to Maryland, and was present at the duel. If evidence is obtained to show that Dr. Phelps was absent from the City without having first obtained permission from the Board of Police, charges of absence without leave and neglect of duty will be preferred against him, and he will be placed on trial.

Hoover, by a number of little boy and a little girl shivering behind their harp in a beating snow-storm, the picture entitled, "Out in the Cold World."

A little son of Mr. Charles Watrous exhibited his first essay in oil painting, a sketch entitled "Going to Market;" Mr. H. F. Lucas presented his "Marine Sunset," and F. A. Silva a marine painting upon the same theme, entitled "Sunset on

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

THE PROPOSITION PREPARED BY THE SENATE COMMITTEE—AN OUTLINE OF THE PROPOSED AGREEMENT—ALL DISPUTES TO BE REFERRED TO A COMMISSION—ITS COMPOSITION—THE PLAN NOT UNANIMOUSLY APPROVED—OBJECTIONS OFFERED BY SENATORS MORTON AND FRELINGHUYSEN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The Electoral Committees of the Senate and House had a long meeting this afternoon, being in session till 5:30 o'clock. Another meeting will be held to-morrow. The Senate proposition agreed on by the Senate committee was under consideration. The bill, or formal draft of the proposition, has been very carefully kept secret, but the general and most important outlines are known. It provides that the Senate shall, on the day for the counting of the vote, meet with the House in the hall of the latter body. The Vice-President shall open all the certificates, and the Tellers appointed for the purpose shall, as usual, read, record, and sum up the votes. But there are to be counted in the first place only the returns to which no objection is made. Where there is one return only from a State, and that is objected to, the two houses will determine whether it shall be counted, but the concurrence of both houses will be required to reject any vote. Where two returns are made from one State, the dispute is to be referred to a commission or tribunal composed of nine members of the House and Senate and the four Justices of the Supreme Court longest in service. The nine members of the House and Senate are to be selected by the appointment of five Senators and five Representatives, and then dropping one of the 10 by the drawing of lots. There might thus be on the commission five Senators and four members of the House, or five members and four Senators. The Justices who would become members of the commission by the terms of the proposition would be Nathan Clifford, of Maine; Noah H. Swayne, of Ohio; Samuel F. Miller, of Iowa, and David Davis, of Illinois. This commission is to be authorized to determine all questions of dispute, their decision to be final. The disputed votes having been counted in the presence of the House and Senate, in accordance with the decision of the commission, and the whole number of Electoral votes having been summed up by the tellers, the President of the Senate will announce the result in the usual form, which will determine who is to be President of the United States.

The Justices of the Supreme Court who are named above must be personally unobjectionable to all parties. Justice Clifford is a Democrat, and was appointed by James Buchanan in 1858. His Democracy is of that type to which none of his party could take exceptions. Justices Swayne and Miller are both Republicans, appointed by President Lincoln in 1862. Justice Davis was also appointed by President Lincoln. He is an exceedingly able man, who has had some political aspirations not satisfied by his present office. He has been known for several years as a Liberal Republican, and was a favorite candidate for the nomination for President by the Liberals and Democrats in 1873. He was, however, set aside by the wire-pullers at Cincinnatti for Horace Greeley. His views on the present situation are not known, and he has probably given no expression to them.

The bill has not the unanimous approval of the Senate Committee, if reports may be believed, and they agree with what seems very plausible when the opinions publicly expressed by the individual members of the committee are considered. Senators Morton and Frelinghuysen gave a very reserved and reluctant consent to the proposition. It has become clear, however, that no arrangement could be made between the two houses which would determine positively, in advance of the count, who would be elected. There is no middle ground of compromise on which the two houses can come together. There can be no agreement, in fact, unless the determination of the questions in dispute is submitted to some fair and able tribunal, outside of Congress, whose action cannot be absolutely foretold. The Senate proposition is based on a bill passed by the Senate in the year 1800, when all disputes concerning Presidential elections were yet mere abstractions. That bill authorized the appointment of six members of the Senate and six from the House to act with the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, or in case of his absence, the Justice of longest service who might be in Washington. This was to constitute a grand committee to hear and settle all disputes. The bill was lost by a disagreement between the two houses. Many Republicans will doubtless hold, with Senators Morton and Frelinghuysen, that the proposition is too liberal and gives up just partisan advantages; but, on the other hand, there will be ample support for the position taken by Senators Edmunds and Conkling. The House Committee are said to look upon the proposition with some favor, though the prospects of a final agreement cannot be now estimated.

This morning in the Senate Mr. Booth made an exhaustive argument in favor of his resolution relative to counting Electoral votes. The resolution provides, in substance, that the President of the Senate pro tempore shall report the certificate of each State before handing it to the tellers. Any Senator or member of the House may object to the vote of a certain State being counted. This objection shall be made in writing. The President pro tempore shall decide whether or not such objection shall be entertained, but after he has done so, any member or Senator may appeal from his ruling. Then the final decision of all disputes which may arise in the way indicated shall be decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, and after the ruling of the Justices, which shall be final, the vote of the contested States shall be counted in accordance with their decision, and as they direct. Most of the important points in the resolution are embraced in the bill upon the same subject introduced by Mr. Wright.

JOHN THOMPSON, OF OHIO.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—John Thompson, Sergeant at Arms of the House, has returned from Ohio, where he has been superintending the Democratic meetings held on Monday last. Mr. Thompson was made the bearer of the resolutions adopted by the Ohio Democrats, calling upon the Democracy to assemble in Washington upon Feb. 12, and requesting the Democratic National Executive Committee to meet and issue a call for such an assemblage at the National Capital. To-day Mr. Thompson called upon Mr. Hewitt, and, presenting him with the resolutions of the Ohio Democracy, requested him to call the National Executive Committee together at once. Mr. Hewitt is reported to have positively declined to do this, and to have informed Thompson, during the excited discussion which followed, that the proposition of the Ohio Democracy was treason to the Democratic Party, and, rather than call the National Committee together to consider it, he would resign as Chairman of the committee. It is reported that Mr. Hewitt left for New-York to-night to present the matter to Gov. Tilden.

AMUSING SCENES IN THE HOUSE—MR. BARNES OF THE WESTERN UNION AT THE BAR—THE HOUSE IN A RIDICULOUS POSITION—WATTERSON'S UNARMED ARMY—BARNES REMANDED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON Jan. 12.—The House had the most amusing and interesting session of the Winter, and performed a good and entertaining farce, in dealing with Barnes, the contumacious witness. Members were, of course, in the best of humor, and were talking out of order amid great confusion, to which every member contributed. At one time the proceedings were suspended for 10 minutes or more, without objection, while a crowd of members gathered around the witness and his counsel and discussed a proposed amendment of his answer. The effort to amend was given up in despair, as Watterson wittily remarked, "because the witness had been so much confused by the variety of the able arguments that they could not decide how to amend." The report of the Judiciary Committee was a long legal rejoinder to the argument of Barnes, submitted to the House last week, and concluded with a resolution directing that he might be brought before the House that he might have opportunity to state, in reply to questions from the Speaker, whether he persisted in declining to obey the subpœna of the House. Mr. Barnes read a brief reply, stating that upon leaving New-Orleans he had resigned his position, for the reason that he was under heavy bonds as an officer of the company, and that another man was now acting as manager. If restored to his position, and any of the telegrams described in the subpœna could be found among the files committed to his custody, he was willing to produce them before the committee. The reading of this reply created laughter on both sides of the House. It was clear in an instant that the House had been fooled, so to speak. Barnes committed no offense in resigning, but had put it out of his power to furnish the telegrams. A discussion on the technicalities arose upon a decision made by the Speaker that Barnes was still in custody of the Sergeant at Arms. Mr. Garfield and others held that the witness was now in charge of the House, and subject to its order, and that the Speaker could not decide upon the sufficiency of the reply made by the witness. Mr. Harris, of Virginia, was opposed to wasting time in discussing technicalities. If the reply of the witness be pronounced sufficient, the House would be powerless to enforce obedience to its subpœna. It would be simply necessary for a witness to refuse to produce papers required in a subpœna, transfer them to the custody of another person, and thus evade the process of the House. Mr. Harris spoke with much earnestness, his remarks eliciting applause from the Democratic side. As is usual when members start applause from the floor, the Speaker looked sternly toward the galleries and cautioned their occupants that if the applause was repeated he would cause them to be cleared. There were numerous cries of order, and Mr. Townsend, of New-York, looking toward Henry Watterson, asked whether the applause came from the advanced guard of 100,000 unarmed men. This hit at Watterson's war speech of last Monday caused a hearty laugh at Watterson's expense. Mr. Knott finally offered a resolution declaring the answer of Barnes insufficient, and remanding him to the custody of the Sergeant at Arms until further orders from the House. The resolution was adopted by an yea and nay vote. A vigorous punishment of Barnes, a mere employe of the telegraph company, who is no longer in custody of the dispatches wanted, and who cannot possibly comply with the order, will be regarded as a foolish thing, and will indicate that the Democrats desire to appear more zealous to obtain the dispatches than they really are. Mr. Orton's appearance before the bar of the House will take place to-morrow. He is busy with counsel in the preparation of his answer.

THE CAPITAL POLICE BOARD.

THE BILL ABOLISHING THE BOARD SENT TO THE PRESIDENT—HIS APPROVAL OF IT ANTICIPATED—THE POLICE INVESTIGATION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The bill abolishing the District Board of Police Commissioners was not sent to the President until yesterday. It is asserted by gentlemen who were instrumental in securing the passage of the bill that the President had given his assent to its passage, and that he will certainly approve it. There have been many contrary reports which seem not to have been based upon any knowledge of the facts. The investigation of the Police, in progress by a committee of the House, is thus far directed to discovering whether there was a conspiracy to arrest Mr. Whitthorne, of Tennessee, last summer, in order to influence the report of the Naval Committee of the House in respect to the management of the Navy. Col. Richards, Chief of Police, and the detectives swear that Murtagh was very anxious to have Mr. Whitthorne arrested, but they also swear nothing was done. Vastly more important, however, than the investigation of old affairs is the new bill to place the Police under authorities that have the confidence of the people. It appears from the testimony that no attempt was ever made by anybody really intelligent and interested in the subject to have the Police useful for preventing crime.

TESTIMONY BEFORE THE INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—In the investigation to-day before the select committee on the alleged improper conduct of Mr. Murtagh, President of the Police Board of this District, Major Richards, the Police Superintendent, was cross-examined for nearly two hours by Mr. Jeremiah Wilson, counsel for Mr Murtagh. The whole drift and purpose of the examination was an attempt to show that Richards had not been active in suppressing gambling houses. It had very little, and that a rather remote reference, to the matter which the committee was instructed to inquire into.

Major Richards said he did not state yesterday that a woman was to be employed in the Whitthorne case until it was drawn out of him by the Chairman of the committee. He wanted to keep it out if he could; when he made his statement the woman was not in his mind.

Q.—How did Hamlet get out of your mind when you were rehearsing the play? A.—I don't know that it was out of my mind; I talked with the Chairman of this committee about the whole subject, and with Representative Whitthorne; if I failed to bring out the fact that a woman was to be employed to entrap Whitthorne into a house of ill-fame, I don't know why; possibly it might not have been in my mind, and probably I kept it back to state it at a subsequent stage in the investigation; I cannot give the conversation with Murtagh and myself nearer than I did yesterday; but if I made mistakes of matters of fact, I will gladly correct them.

Detective John A. McDevitt, of the Police force, was examined to-night. His testimony corroborated that given by Major Richards in relation to Mr. Murtagh's attempt to have Representative Whitthorne decoyed into a house of bad repute through the agency of some woman. The witness testified that he conversed with Major Richards and Murtagh in relation to the manner in which Mr. Whitthorne was to be decoyed, and Murtagh directed Major Richards to furnish witness all the money necessary for carrying out the plot against Mr. Whitthorne; witness, on the order of Major Richards, pretended to Murtagh that he was laying a trap for Mr. Whitthorne, while in reality he was doing nothing of the kind, all he did do was to get C. E. Flinders, a clerk in the Treasury Department, to see Mr. Whitthorne and obtain a good description of him; he paid Flinders no money for his services, but spent $10, furnished him by Major Richards, in treating Flinders.

On the cross-examination, which was conducted by Mr. Wilson, witness declined to say whether the statement published in the newspapers that he (witness) was in the habit of gambling was true or not, and the committee decided that witness was not obliged to answer the question. Witness had an interview with President Grant the morning after the Police Board had been requested to resign. Mr. Wilson asked him if that interview was in any way connected with Mr. Whitthorne. Witness declined to answer, and the committee decided that witness need not answer the question at present.

The committee adjourned before the cross-examination of the witness was concluded.

A MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

THE RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS—HOW THE MONEY HAS BEEN EXPENDED—THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS SUPERINTENDING THE IMPROVEMENTS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The President to-day sent a message to the House of Representatives in reply to a resolution respecting the expenditures of certain moneys appropriated last session in the River and Harbor bill, and inclosing a report from the Secretary of War on the subject. The Secretary says that the act was signed on the 14th of August, and on the same day the President sent a special message to the House stating that he did not consider it obligatory upon him to expend all the money appropriated in the bill; that during his term of office no money should be expended on works not clearly national, and that, owing to a contemplated loss of revenue, it might be inadvisable to expend any money upon new works. The principles enunciated in this Message have governed the Secretary's action on this subject in every case presented to him. Immediately after receiving the bill the Chief Engineer was directed to ask for statements from the engineers in charge of works as to what works could be postponed for the present, and the replies from them recommended the expenditure of about $4,500,000 of the appropriation. This reduction was so slight as to practically amount to nothing, and therefore on the 4th of September, having obtained the approval of the President, the Secretary directed the Chief of Engineers, whose knowledge of this subject is more extended than that any other officer of the Government, to make statements from the sums appropriated for the various works according to his best judgment, and in such manner that the total amount should not exceed $2,000,000, only providing that no new works should be begun and none continued that were not national in their character. In making these allotments it was found that the amount designated ($2,000,000) was not quite sufficient for the purpose of carrying on the works absolutely necessary, and, therefore, the Chief of Engineers, after an extended interview with the President, was authorized in October to increase the amount to $2,237,000. Since that date, a few cases where small sums were urgently required to prevent damage or to make important examinations, have been favorably acted upon, and possibly there may be more of them. The Secretary suggests that the President had authority for his action under the law and the authority found in the River and Harbor Bill itself. The bill was in no way mandatory on the President to expend the full amount of the appropriations—nearly $5,000,000. The exercise of his discretion was influenced by the condition of the Treasury and the nature of the appropriations for other public works of quite as much importance as the river and harbor improvements.

The bill introduced by Senator Gordon to-day, to provide for the creation of a sinking fund to liquidate the Union Pacific and Central Railroad Companies' indebtedness to the Government, requires each of those companies to pay into the United States Treasury $750,000 per annum for a period of 34 years, commencing immediately, interest at 6 per cent. is to be allowed and compounded at the end of each year, by which means the sinking fund at the end of 34 years, will, it is stated, be sufficient in amount to liquidate the outstanding indebtedness of the companies, with simple interest added. The subsidy bonds will be due 12 years previous to that date.

The President has approved the act authorizing the use of certain funds in the Treasury belonging to the Osage Indians for aiding that tribe in agricultural pursuits and in extending improvements already begun on their reservation.

The receipts from Internal Revenue to-day were $453,711 83, and from Customs $369,989 01.

Commander H. B. Robeson is detached from the command of the Vandalia, on the reporting of his relief, and ordered to return home and report his arrival; Assistant Surgeon George E. Harman, from the Franklin, and ordered to duty at the Naval Academy; Acting Passed Assistant Surgeon J. J. Somerby, from the Academy, and placed on waiting orders.

Mrs. Grant's first afternoon reception was held to-day, and was very largely attended.

THE RUSSIAN FLEET.

FORTRESS MONROE, Jan. 12.—The monitors Wyandette, Passaic, and Montauk, which have been in the Roads for the past three months, were sent up to Norfolk to-day, to make room for the Russian fleet, which is hourly expected. The Roads are crowded with merchant vessels.

NORFOLK, Jan. 12.—The frigate Svetlan, the flagship of the Russian squadron, arrived in Hampton Roads this afternoon, having on board the Grand Duke Alexis and Admiral Bontakoff. The remaining ships of the squadron—the Hero, Askold, and Cruiser—are expected to arrive to-morrow. The Russian Minister and Admiral Crown, of the Russian Navy, chartered a tug and immediately went down from here to Hampton Roads to escort the Grand Duke to this city. Suitable apartments have been provided for him at the Atlantic Hotel. Salutes were exchanged with the Hartford by the Svetlan at Fortress Monroe.

POLITICAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE SITUATION IN LOUISIANA.

THE LEGISLATURE AND THE SHORT TERM SENATORSHIP—SIGNALS AGREED ON TO BRING OUT THE WHITE LEAGUE WHEN WANTED — NICHOLLS' MANUFACTURED COURTS NOT TRUSTED BY EVEN DEMOCRATIC LAWYERS—NICHOLLS' ACTS ILLEGAL AND IMPOSSIBLE, EVEN IF HE WERE GOVERNOR—QUIET.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 12.—Since yesterday there has been no change in affairs here, concerning the political muddle. The Legislature met in joint session at the State-house to-day, and took one ballot for United States Senator. A quorum was present, but the body adjourned without effecting an election. The Nicholls Police are patrolling the streets. The Democrats are resting under the expectation that Gov. Packard will make some effort to regain possession of the Supreme Court room. To prevent this, the General commanding the White League has issued an order to his men which says that in case they are needed to defend the courts, they will be summoned by signals on the fire-alarm bells. Upon hearing the number 22 sounded on the bells, the White League is to assemble with all dispatch at Jackson square. The ringing of number 33 will take the men to Lafayette square. The fire-alarm telegraph and all the Police stations are in possession of the Nicholls men.

Conservative lawyers, who believe Nicholls should be Governor, hesitate at bringing suits before the Democratic Supreme Court, believing that it cannot stand in law. Some of them say Mr. Nicholls has made a mistake in appointing Judges, to say nothing of the rude and military way he chose to put them on the bench. The point is that the Supreme Court, with Ludeling as Chief Justice, was appointed by Gov. Kellogg, whose authority is not questioned, and the appointments were confirmed by the Senate, which had in in it nine holding-over Senators whose elections are not questioned, to say nothing of the new Senators who were present to make up a quorum. Mr. Nicholls, then, even if he were Governor, had no right, three days later, to make new appointments. Gov. Packard could not do it. We have then a bogus Supreme Court put in place by the force of armed men as the first great act of Mr. Nicholls in trying to be Governor. The city is quiet.

REPORT FROM ANOTHER SOURCE.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 12.—There has been no change in the situation since yesterday as far as is known. The weather was wet to-day and exceedingly disagreeable. Both parties are awaiting advices from Washington before taking any further action.

The Senate is still without a quorum. The four Senators who have been absent, at an early hour this morning asked for and were granted an interview with Gov. Packard, the result of which is not known. The State-house Police are on the qui vive, armed with rifles, and the outlook there betokens some new movement. Gov. Packard received a number of telegrams from Washington last night, but beyond the statement that they are encouraging, he declines giving their purport. He is evidently more hopeful than he was yesterday of recognition by the National authorities.

One more member of the Republican House—Mr. Estopinal, of St. Bernard—has just been sworn in as a member of the Democratic House. In the House Mr. Delacey, of Rapides, stated in a speech that he had been offered $10,000 to go with the Democrats. A resolution was introduced and referred declaring vacant the seats of Messrs. Barrett and Kennedy, who had gone over to the Democrats.

The Legislature had another ballot for United States Senator, resulting as follows: Pinchback, 29; Antoine 22; Beattie, 12; Lewis, 11; the remainder scattering.

The Democratic seceders had another ballot for United States Senator, which resulted in no choice.

The Senate to-day ordered the arrest of all the absent members, and issued an order to that effect addressed to Gen. Badger. The latter returned the order this evening, with the following indorsement, all of which was communicated to Gov. Packard by Lieut. Gov. Antoine, President of the Senate, for his information and action:

Indorsed, New-Orleans, Jan. 19. This order is respectfully returned to the honorable the President and members of the Senate with the report that after diligent search and inquiry I discovered that three or more of the absent Senators were secreted in a certain house in Camp street, near First street, in this city; said house is owned and occupied by Hon. P. B. S. Pinchback. I repaired to the said premises with several assistant Sergeant at Arms and found a number of the so-called Nicholls police on duty around in the immediate vicinity of the house. Upon showing this warrant to Mr. Pinchback and demanding to enter for the purpose of arresting the absent Senators named in this order and was denied admittance to Mr. Pinchback, warned not to enter the premises at my peril, and informed that he had a force at hand to resist my posse. Perceiving a considerable number of the so-called Nicholls's police in the vicinity, and having positive information that many more were inside of said premises a few hours previous, and believing them to be still there at the time of making the demand, I found it impossible to enforce my writ; hearing Police whistles blowing, and seeing that Nicholls' Police were gathering and concentrating around said premises, I withdrew immediately, after a large crowd assembled about the place, and several assistant sergents at arms who remained in the neighborhood were arrested by Nicholl's Police and locked up in the station. I therefore report that he reason of interference by Nicholls' police, and the gathering of an excited mob in the vicinity, I was unable to execute this order or warrant of your honorable body. A. S. BADGER,

Sergeant at arms of the Senate.

Gov. Packard it is said has laid the whole matter before Gen. Angur for his action under the instruction of the Secretary of War.

Deputy Sheriff Walsh, with a posse of 20 men, took possession of the Superior Civil Court this afternoon on an order from the Fifth District Court, enjoining the Sheriff from recognizing that court, which is one recently abolished by the Republican Legislature.

Everything is quiet at the State-house to-night. The Metropolitans are still on the alert. They are under command of Capt. J. H. Lawlor, who was the last one to surrender in the riot of September, 1874.

POSITION OF THE ADMINISTRATION.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The position of the General Government toward the Louisiana State Government remains unchanged. The dispatches received to-day from Gen. Augur contained no new features of interest. The opinion of the Attorney General, upon which it is expected Executive action will be based in recognizing one or the other of the claimants for the Governorship and the Legislature of Louisiana, is yet delayed. Judge Taft does not indicate how long the delay may last. The consideration of Louisiana affairs by the Cabinet to-day was brief.

THE INVESTIGATIONS—ELIZA PINKSTON CROSS-EXAMINED—REPETITION OF HER FORMER TESTIMONY.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 12.—The Senate Subcommittee to-day continued the investigation of East Baton Rouge Parish. Gen. A. S. Herron testified as to the meetings at which resolutions denouncing Judge Davis were adopted requesting him to leave the parish, and said he thought a large majority of the people of the parish were opposed to using force to compel him to resign. Gen. Herron said the late election was the most peaceable one held since 1868.

Eliza Pinkston was called for cross-examination, but the wound in her breast having reopened in consequence of her ride to the Custom-house, her examination was delayed and only continued with great difficulty. She stated she was born in Canton, Miss., and never was owned by Daniel Tidwell, as stated by him, but that he took her after the surrender and brought her up; also that she never had been in jail, nor seen one; she was brought from Alabama by Capt. Farmer; she had married Finch when sixteen years old and had her first child at 14; had twins on Tidwell's place before she married Pinkston; was married to him by a white preacher. The witness was subjected to a long cross-examination by Senator McDonald, but repeated her story in reference to the killing of her husband and child, the mutilation of the former after his death, and the terrible punishment inflicted upon herself, in proof of which, she showed the wound in her breast. She flatly contradicted testimony of Tidwell in reference to the attack upon her house, and repeated that Capt. Theobald, Walker, Logan, and Dr. Young were the leaders of the party, and that two colored men were in it.

Dr. Richardson swore he had been a surgeon for 23 years. He had examined Eliza Pinkston's wounds, and said that those on the head might have been made with an axe, but if so, they were made by slight blows. Those on the face and neck were made by a knife and were superficial. The one on the temple was made by a blunt instrument, and the one in the breast by a bullet. The latter is still open and appears to have been neglected or purposely left open, being healed on the orifice. The wounds received would hardly account for her debilitated condition, but she told witness she had a miscarriage; neither did he think the wound in her heel would cause her apparent lameness, though a sore toe might cause one to limp.

Dr. White, who had attended Eliza, was recalled, and stated that Eliza had a miscarriage, and had suffered severely from mental excitement, bordering on delirium.

The Senate Committee examined a number of witnesses in reference to East Feliciana. Judge McVeigh, Capt. Fuqua, and one other witness testified to a peaceable election, and that acts of violence generally had no connection with politics; that lawlessness in the parish had been on the increase simply because the laws were not enforced; the former enumerated a number of homicides which had occurred, showing that killing was not confined to either party or color as had been stated.

Samuel Chapman, colored, testified that he had been a Deputy Sheriff of the parish, and was driven off by the whites; they charged him with assisting Gair to incite the blacks to rise, when he was only serving subpœnas; he fled to Baton Rouge and Plaquemine, and, being pursued, had finally come here; he believed it was the intention of the whites there to get rid of every colored official.

Before the House Committee Alfred Boggs denied the statements of W. R. Williams that he had asked him to enter a protest in the returns of the Ninth ward, and stated that he never saw Williams. He also produced a certificate from Marshal Pitkin, that no such person had been appointed Deputy United States Marshal.

John Ray testified as to intimidation and acts of violence in Ouachita, and that the blacks could not have voted the Republican ticket there in safety; he was counsel for the Returning Board and offered an explanation of their reasons for throwing out certain polls, but the committee declined to hear them as the board had refused to state them. He had advised the board in regard to filling the vacancy in it that the law governing it was not mandatory.

Judge Hunter, of Rapides, testified that he knew nothing against Gov. Wells that would cause him to question his testimony under oath, and that the Spaniard killed by Wells threatened his life, and Wells was never indicted.

O. H. Luzenberg testified that, as District Attorney in 1868, he had filed information against Alfred Bourges in two cases for forgery, but Bourges was afterward acquitted.

O. H. Brewster, Republican candidate for Senator in Ouachita, testified to general intimidation and terrorizing of colored Republicans there.

Brewster also said he had been offered money to vote for Tilden, but declined to say who offered it. The committee declined to report his refusal to the full committee.

The House sub-committee did nothing of importance to-day, and will close its labors to-morrow.

Representative New left this evening for Washington. Messrs. Beebe, Joyce, Blackburn, and Hurlbut will start to-morrow, leaving only the Chairman, Mr. Morrison, and Messrs. Jenks and Townsend of the House Committee, who will remain a few days longer.

THE OREGON CASE.

MR. BUSH, OF LADD & BUSH, OF SALEM AND $8,000 FAME, SUMMONED TO WASHINGTON.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PORTLAND, Jan. 12.—Obedient to a summons from the Congressional Committee, Asahel Bush, a wealthy and influential banker at Salem, started for Washington this morning. Bush, it is reported, has been intimately connected with the $8,000, which sum, it is alleged, was sent here from the East to secure political results, and that he received the money and disbursed the same. He has been subpœnaed for the purpose of explaining how the money was received, and in what manner distributed by him. Hon. C. B. Bellinger, Chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee, has also been summoned, and has left with Mr. Bush.

THE SOUTH CAROLINA VOTE.

A REFEREE TO ASCERTAIN THE FACTS APPOINTED BY THE SUPREME COURT—WHAT HE HAS ALREADY DISCOVERED—CHAMBERLAIN'S MAJORITY OVER HAMPTON—NOT YET KNOWN WHAT THE COURT WILL DO ABOUT IT.

From Our Own Correspondent.

COLUMBIA, Wednesday, Jan. 10, 1877.

In the mandamus case of the Democratic candidates against the Republican State officers declared elected by the Board of State Canvassers, the Supreme Court recently appointed T. M. Wilkes, Esq., referee to ascertain all the facts of the canvass. He was authorized to examine the returns of precinct managers as certified by the County Canvassers. It will be remembered that when the Board of State Canvassers began to do this very work, the Democrats applied for a mandamus to prevent the board from going behind the face of the returns. The Referee has received evidence which may entirely change the political aspect here. He has ascertained that there are no precinct returns from Granitoville Precinct, Aiken County. The Democratic majority reported there was 786, and it was so counted by the County Canvassers and by the State Board. The Republicans always alleged that it was grossly fraudulent, and that it was made up by repeaters from Augusta. The absence of the pollists would prevent any verification of this charge, which probably accounts for its non-appearance. He has also received evidence which ought to secure the reception of the so-much disputed Robbins votes. The managers' returns from this precinct of Barnwell County were not included in the county canvass, because they did not reach the Court-house in time. It was also alleged that the box was not opened in the proper place. The managers claimed that they were shot at and driven away from the usual place, as were those of the neighboring precinct at Cannan Fair; whereupon a poll was opened between the two points by the regularly sworn managers, and a Republican majority of 1,317 was returned. On their way to the Court-house with the box and pollists, they were attacked and compelled to hide in the swamps until it was too late to reach the Court-house. The returns were then dispatched to the Secretary of State. This box was not included in any count by the Board of State Canvassers. It is patent now that it ought to have been counted.

It is not known what the court will decide. With such a court it is hard to predict. Technically both boxes must be excluded or both counted. Justice would demand, in the opinion of Republicans, that the Graniteville box should be excluded, and the Robbins box counted. The total absence of the managers' returns from Graniteville, with the facts known in regard to that poll, argues forcibly that a gross fraud was committed, and an attempt made to conceal it. On the contrary, at Robbins an attempt was made to prevent an election at the two strongest Republican precincts in Barnwell County by violence. The irregularity of opening the poll in a safer place, between the localities where violence had prevented the managers from acting, was certainly an effort to carry out the law in its spirit—that is, to ascertain the will of the people of these precincts. The Legislature counted that box in giving the Republican contestants their seats. Should the court count the Robbins box and exclude the Graniteville box, Chamberlain's majority (without excluding Edgefield or Laurens) would be 969; that of other State officers from 2,000 to 2,250. If both were counted Chamberlain's majority would be 183; other State officers from 1,200 to 1,450. If neither were counted Hampton's majority would be about 350; and all the Republican State officers would have from 800 to 1,000 majority.

An entirely unprejudiced court would almost certainly decide to count both boxes. The direct evidence of fraud is absent in either case, and it would be safe to admit both. The court would then also settle all controversy about the Governorship, and bring relief to all interests in the State. Despite all the loud talk of disappointed office-seekers, the thoughtful tax-paying Democrats of this State would be perfectly satisfied with Gov. Chamberlain and a Legislature which, the moment the Democratic members took quiet possession of their seats, they would have under their complete control.

THE ILLINOIS SENATORSHIP.

GEN. JOHN M. PALMER NOMINATED BY THE DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS—THE INDEPENDENTS DECLARE FOR WILLIAM B. ANDERSON—GEN. LOGAN'S FRIENDS CONFIDENT OF SUCCESS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 12.—The Democratic members of the Legislature met in caucus this afternoon, and, with the exception of one vote, nominated ex-Gov. John M. Palmer as their candidate for the United States Senatorship. At about the same time seven members of the State Senate, who claim to be Independents, three of whom, however, are straight Democrats, also held a caucus, in which they nominated William B. Anderson, present member of Congress from the Nineteenth District. Last night a half-dozen bogus Independents of the House nominated Judge David Davis for the same office. There are three of the Independent Senators who are avowedly opposed to Gen. Palmer. In the division of factions rests the very strong hope of Gen. Logan's election. He and his friends are more confident now than ever of his success.

COL. PELTON ANXIOUS TO CONFESS.

HE SENDS TWO DISPATCHES TO SENATOR KERNAN—HE IS WILLING, SO HE SAYS, TO VISIT WASHINGTON—BUT THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE QUIETLY REPLIES "WAIT TILL YOU ARE SENT FOR."

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—Senator Kernan, a member of the Senate Committee which is investigating the alleged Oregon Electoral irregularities, stated to-day that he had received the following dispatch from Col. William T. Pelton, of New-York, last night:

"I received a telegram from French yesterday afternoon asking whether I would come before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections without formal subpœna. I telegraphed him at once that I would come at any time on his telegram. Have heard nothing since. A New-York paper asserts that a subpœna was issued for me and I was unwilling to obey. If the committee want me, telegraph me immediately and I will go at 9 o'clock to-night." The following dispatch was received by Senator Kernan at the same time: "The dispatch from Washington published here that I am unwilling to go as a witness is very unjust to me. If the committee want me they should telegraph so, and I will go to-night. It may be very inconvenient for me to go later. Answer."

Senator Kernan thereupon telegraphed Col. Pelton as follows: "I am not aware that the committee want you. Will learn and let you know to-morrow." Senator Kernan this afternoon sent Col. Pelton another telegram saying that Gov. Morton stated that he [Col. Pelton] would be notified by the Sergeant at Arms when wanted by the committee.

THE PENNSYLVANIA LEGISLATURE.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 12.—The Senate to-day passed the resolution agreed upon in caucus yesterday denouncing threats of violence as being intended to prevent or imperil the declaration and confirmation of the constitutional election for President and Vice President.

The Democratic members of the Legislature held a caucus this afternoon, and agreed that no member should offer any resolution in either house that would cause a political discussion without first submitting the same to a caucus. A committee of five was appointed to draw up resolutions on the Presidential question, which will be submitted to the Legislature probably on Monday night next.

SEIZURE OF ILLICIT STILLS IN INDIANA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 12.—An investigation of the business of several suspected distilling establishments in Dearborn County, Ind., resulted yesterday in an organized raid by Government officers. The principal seizure was the concern of John C. Stinger, a man of considerable wealth and influence in that part of the State. Over 1,000 gallons of illicit brandy were found in the upper story of his dwelling-house. Other stills were examined and found to contain crooked spirits. All the property seized is forfeited to the Government. The raid was made at the instigation of Collector Cumback.

AN ALLEGED DEFALCATION.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Jan. 12.—A special dispatch to the Eagle says: "Alexander Bartow, Cashier of the National Bank of Fishkill, is charged with a deficiency of from $20,000 to $60,000. Experts are examining the bank accounts. It is possible that the defalcation is over the amount stated. Bartow says he sold bonds left at the bank for safe keeping to pay overdrafts, but declines to give the names of the persons making the overdrafts. No money has been paid over the counter of the bank to-day, and it is stated that no business will be transacted by it until the result of the examination of the accounts has been reached. Bartow has been connected with the bank for over 20 years, and always bore a good character.

THE MIDLAND RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—Among the victims of the Midland Railroad accident yesterday morning was Mr. A. K. Schiebler, of the firm of Durfey & Schiebler, New-York. Mr. Schiebler is at the Providence Hospital, in this city, and has the care of his father-in-law, Mr. Charles Shipley, of Baltimore, and it is hoped his injuries are not dangerous. This morning he was visited by Dr. Henkie, member of Congress, and a well-known physician of Baltimore.

SNOW FALLING FOR THIRTY-SIX HOURS.

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—During 36 hours snow has been falling without cessation, about eight inches in all having fallen in Chicago. In the country the fall has been even heavier. Trains have been greatly delayed on some railroads, but none have been laid off entirely. The weather is cold and promises to continue so indefinitely.

WATERTOWN, Jan. 12.—The thermometer at 10 o'clock this morning indicated 20 degrees below zero, a change of 50 degrees in 10 hours.

THREE BURGLARS CAUGHT IN THE ACT.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Jan. 12.—Detectives Scanlon, Gillespie, and Shannon arrested three burglars on the Montreal train this morning, at 2 o'clock, who had planned to rob the safes of the National Express Company. The burglars were at work on the car when detected. The event occurred between here and Hyde Park, and the burglars are now in jail in this city.

ANOTHER CARGO OF TURKISH ORDNANCE.

NEW-HAVEN, Jan. 12.—The British steamer Lotus is in the lower harbor, partly loaded with arms from the Providence Tool Company for the Turkish Government. She is here to receive on board the largest cargo of cartridges and shells ever shipped from this port by the Winchester Arms Company, and will proceed direct to Constantinople.

THE GROUNDED STEAMER NEWPORT.

NEW-HAVEN, Jan. 12.—The propeller Cora Staples, which was ordered to the assistance of the steamer Newport, grounded in this harbor,

AFFAIRS IN ENGLAND.

POLITICAL AND DOMESTIC NOTES.

THE EASTERN QUESTION—DAMAGE BY RAIN AND FLOOD—BEACONSFIELD AND GLADSTONE—BOTH MEN FOREIGN IN THEIR WAYS OF THOUGHT—LIVING ON GHOSTLY REPUTATIONS—THE VICE OF DRUNKENNESS—THEATRICAL PANICS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Dec. 30, 1876.

We are here still, living under a deluge of rain and the usual depression of uncertainty and suspense. To-night or to-morrow there may be some decisive news, but at present nobody seems to have any idea of what is likely to happen, except that there will probably be some further temporizing on the part either of the Turks or Russians, or perhaps of both together. It is pretty clear that the Turks are gaining in defiant courage, not so much from hope of success as from the natural operation of their fatalist spirit, which makes them ready for desperate experiences; and, on the other hand, the more the Russians look at the prospect of war the less they like it. This, at least, is the growing impression here. So far as the domestic situation here is concerned, it is for the time dismal enough. The rains and floods have already done and are still doing, a vast amount of damage. Over a large part of the kingdom agricultural operations are suspended, and in some cases ruined, for the year, and the effect on the next harvest cannot fail to be very bad. Trade also continues to be paralyzed.

On the 27th of December Lord Beaconsfield reached his 71st birthday, and Mr. Gladstone was 67 yesterday. It cannot be said that either has in his later years developed in statesmanlike capacity or gained in public respect. The latter is, of course, not always an exact or authoritative measure of the former; but it is an undoubted fact that each of these eminent men is now utterly enfeebled and exhausted, and reduced to a condition of intellectual decrepitude by the strains of office. Nor is the reason far to seek. Neither of them possesses that sober judgment, steady honesty, and straightforwardness of mind which are the main qualifications for the responsibilities of a governing position, and the indispensable antidote for the wear and tear of mind which is involved in such a service. Disraeli—for as Disraeli he will always be known, in spite of his gimcrack title—has always had to contend against the serious disadvantage, to begin with, that he is not, in any sense, an Englishman. He is by family, character, and instinct an Italian Jew, with all the subtlety and romantic imagination of his race. He never knows from his own nature what Englishmen would be likely, on any occasion, to think or do, except by reflection and deduction. When he has to come to a decision on any question of policy, it is as if he had to ask himself how a Turk or a Chinaman would probably feel and act under such and such circumstances. He has often made shrewd guesses in this way, but he has always been liable to make mistakes, and has, in fact, made many, and there is always a certain insincere and artificial quality in his expressed opinions. Nothing, for instance, could be more unlike English common sense than his attempt to save the Irish Church Establishment by rant about the "altar and the throne;" his notion of checkmating the Czar by giving the Queen the foolish nickname of Empress of India; or the frenzied rhapsodies by which he has lately compromised and made ridiculous the Government of which he is nominally the head. On the other hand, Mr. Gladstone, though of Scotch descent, is quite as little of a Briton. There never were two men who were more foreign in all their ways of thought and conduct than these two who have for many years possessed an ascendency in this country. Mr. Gladstone has at the bottom of his nature all the peculiarities of a Jesuit monk. He is perfectly honest and loyal in intentions, but his weakness is that he has a misguiding and delusive mind. He cannot look facts straight in the face, and his conclusions are invariably formed first, while the facts and arguments to support them are discovered or manufactured afterward to suit the necessities of the occasion. Between them, these two men have, during the crisis of the Eastern question, combined, by their respective extravagances of temperament, to increase in the most disastrous manner the difficulties of their country, and to produce utterly false impressions of its wishes and policy. Happily, the active careers of both are now almost at an end, for neither can survive the discredit which they have lately brought upon themselves, and the years which they have yet to live will be passed in the shadowy sphere of ghostly reputations. Mr. Gladstone seems himself to be conscious of this, for he has declined an invitation to the opening of the New Liberal Association at Liverpool, on the ground that "there are considerations which prevent him taking a leading part, under present circumstances, in any political celebration."

Mr. Lowe has written a strong and pungent article for the Fortnightly Review on the impracticability of Mr. Chamberlain's project of starting the Gothenburg system of regulating the sale of liquor, which has been taken up in Birmingham. He shows how impossible it would be to get such a scheme to work in this country, and urges that forcible measures are of no avail. The proper course is to trust to the progress of education and the suppression of open disorder. Whatever may be thought of this view, there can be no doubt that drunkenness is becoming a terrible vice over here. The other day a Liverpool man went to spend his Christmas holidays with some friends in the country, and his manner of celebrating the great festival was to keep on drinking without interruption from morning to night, except during the intervals when he was hopelessly insensible. To make sure of materials for this enjoyment, he laid in a private stock of bottles of rum, which he carried about with him, hidden under his clothes. When unconscious he fell into the grate; the bottles of rum were broken, the liquid took fire, and the miserable wretch was fearfully burned, though he still lives, a charred wreck of humanity. In to-day's newspaper appears the wine bill of a gentleman of fortune, who seems for some time past to have been constantly more or less drunk, and who accuses his boon companions, who entertained themselves at his expense, with taking advantage of his intoxication to make him scrawl his signature to a bond, practically giving them the control of his property, and £500 down. The consumption of drink by the party, four in all, at this man's hotel, in Covent Garden, was, on the 24th of November, 30 large glasses of brandy, 37 small ones, 9 bottles of champagne, and 27 of soda-water. Next day it was 19 large glasses of brandy, 32 small, half a bottle of old brandy, five and a half bottles of champagne, and six champagne cups. To keep up their thirst the party feasted on hot pickle sandwiches.

The pantomime season at the theatres just now is suffering a good deal from the alarm caused by the disaster at Brooklyn, and the notoriously dangerous condition of many of the London theatres. The Lord Chamberlain has, indeed, ordered that all available exits shall be plearded and opened during the Christmas holidays—that is till the end of January; but he says nothing about theatres which do not possess sufficient exit; and it is obvious that free egress is equally necessary all the year round. A theatre at Doncaster was partially burned down on Wednesday night—but in the night, when there was nobody there but the watchman. On the same night, a dremedary in the equestrian pantomime at Astley's took fright at the light and noise, danced wildly about the stage, creating great confusion among the dense throng of women, children, horses, elephants, and other supernumeraries gathered there, and kicking away the central limelight of the foot-lights, over which, indeed, he at one time seemed likely to descend into the orchestra, to the terror of the musicians, who fled in a body. One of the women on the stage—a female warrior carried by negroes on a shield—also fell off with a shriek, but happily no panic occurred. Mr. Sanger, the manager, declared that in three minutes the house could be cleared, which, of course, is impossible.

Two English commercial millionaires have just passed away—Mr. George Moore, the lace merchant and draper, who was killed by runaway horses, a few weeks ago—and has left a fortune of £400,000, of which £119,700 is given in charitable bequests; and Sir Titus Salt, who introduced the alpaca manufacture into this country, and established on the river Aire, near Bradford, an industrial settlement of over 4,000 people, called Saltaire, which he endowed with chapels, schools, baths and wash-houses, hospital, infirmary, alms-house, and a fine club and institute, with a large library, lecture-hall, and chess and billiard rooms. He is said to have spent altogether many hundred thousand pounds in charitable and benevolent objects. J. H. F.

OVERCHARGE OF DUTIES.

ABSTRACT OF THE REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS, AND TEXT OF THE BILL—CORRECTION OF STATUTORY ERRORS AND REMOVAL OF CONFLICTS IN BOTH THE LAWS AND DECISIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The following are the report and bill on remedies for overcharge of duties on tonnage and imports:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill to provide remedies for overcharge of duties on tonnage and imports, report the following facts in relation thereto:

The bill is a copy, with one or two verbal corrections, of a bill agreed upon by the Judiciary Committee of this House in January, 1875, and reported therefrom to the House on the 15th of that month; and a recent decision of the Supreme Court, and a conflict between sections 2,931 and 3,011 of the Revised Statutes, make its immediate enactment into a law a duty to importers and to the Government. It modifies existing laws in the following particulars:

I. By requiring Collectors of Customs to inform importers by mail, whenever the Post Office address has been left with the Collector, of the date of the ascertainment and liquidation of entries from which the 10 days within which a notice of dissatisfaction therewith begins to run.

II. By relieving the importer from the labor of sending on each protest a separate appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury, as now required by section 2,931 of Revised Statutes. The regulations under this section now compel the importer to file a duplicate protest with the Collector, one copy of which is for the Treasury; and this should be sufficient. The committee see no necessity for requiring a new appeal to the Treasury on each entry.

III. By enabling the importer—if the Treasury sustain the Collector—to bring his suit in a Federal court. Now, the suit must be begun in a State court and removed, by certiorari, into a Federal court; and also by giving to the importer six months in which to begin his suit, instead of two months as now, and compelling him to include all his claims in that single suit, instead of multiplying suits, as must now be, (section 2,931,) on every entry.

IV. By requiring the Clerk of the court, on a final judgment, to transmit a copy thereof to the Treasury, and the Secretary to forthwith pay it in the kind of money that was exacted, with costs of court duly taxed.

V. By permitting an importer to make a protest by a duly authorized agent, evidence of whose agency must be filed with the Collector, and also the Post Office address of both to provide for evidence, or place of business outside the port of entry, and enabling the Secretary to do equity when satisfied that notice of liquidation was not received.

VI. The Supreme Court has decided in Barney vs. Schnieder (9 Wallace, 248) that on trials of a suit by an importer to recover excess of duties he could only use the copies of his protests and entries certified by Treasury officers, and that failure of those officers to procure them on legal notice, did not, under the statute, warrant the introduction of copies as evidence. This is a hardship and expense which should be and is remedied in the proposed bill.

VII. There is need that the rule of presumption declared by the Federal courts (United States vs. Ulman, 4; Benedict, 54,) in suits to recover excessive taxes, be made secure by statute, and that has been done at the end of the second section of the proposed bill.

VIII. For many years it was assumed by the Treasury that the Pretest law of March 3, 1857, (11 stat., 195,) repealed that of Feb. 26, 1845, (5 stat., 727.) The importers denied it, and finally, in October, 1875, the Supreme Court, in Barney vs. Watson, (92 United States Reports, 449,) so decided. This decision makes it needful that legislation be had as in the third section of the proposed bill, to save accrued rights and to enforce the decision. In addition, this section remedies a blunder at the time of the union in incorporating the law of 1845, (section 3,011,) and that of 1864. (section 2,931,) which conflict. paid on the 1st of March; but when, under these two sections, need protests be filed? Was not the California court correct in law and Secretary Boutwell right in equity?

Thus, embarrassment has been intensified by the late decision of the Supreme Court in Watson's case, which holds, as the importers claimed, that the law of 1845 was not repealed by that of 1857, as the Treasury thought it was.

To remedy this conflict of sections for the future, the committee recommend the very simple and clear provisions of law in the first two sections of the accompanying bill, and to save the rights of all importers who have protested either under section 2,931 or 3,011, the committee recommend the third section of the bill. This last enables importers to proceed to test the legality of the exactions made of them under the limitations and provisions of either. Under that of 3,011 they could, as the Supreme Court now decides, have sued down to 1864, and that right the accompanying bill declares shall not have been taken away, nor shall section 3,011 take away any rights under that of 2,931.

In order to secure a prompt collection of the revenue, the Federal law prohibit the interference of the judicial powers with the assessment and collection of any amount the executive inflicts. The citizen must first pay, and then sue to get it back if the court says the exaction was illegal. The Customs officers, of course, exact in case of doubt the highest rate, for their own protection, either when the article is novel or the law new, although in all State tax laws the citizen has the benefit of the doubt where the law-making power has spoken ambiguously. But the Government owes it to importers to make the remedies open to them clear, unmistakable, and speedy.

The following is the bill:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That on the future entry of any vessel, or of any merchandise, the decision of the Collector of Customs at the port of importation and entry, as to the rate and amount of duties, and the tax to be paid on the tonnage of such vessels or on such merchandise, and the dutiable costs and charges thereon, shall be final and conclusive against all persons interested therein, unless the owner, master, commander, or consignee of such vessel, in the case of duties levied on tonnage, or the owner, importer, consignee, or agent of the merchandise, in the case of duties levied on the merchandise or the costs and charges thereon, has given, or shall give, within ten days after the final liquidation of the duties and closing the account thereof on the books of the Custom-House, information thereof is to be communicated by the Collector, as is hereinafter required, if dissatisfied with such decision, a notice thereof in writing to the Collector, signed by the party or parties making entry, or his, her, or their duly constituted Agent or Attorney, as hereinafter directed, setting forth therein distinctly and specifically the grounds of objection thereto; and if every such importer, owner, master, or the Collector shall forthwith transmit the same to the Secretary of the Treasury, with a full report of the circumstances of the decision complained of, and such answer as can be given thereto by the complaint of the importer; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall, within 90 days after receiving such report, prepare and transmit by mail to the party making entry, or aforesaid, his decision thereon, and if in favor of the complainant, or if the Secretary of the Treasury shall for the period of 90 days, as aforesaid, not make and transmit a decision, then he shall immediately draw his warrant upon the Treasurer in favor of the party entitled to the over-payment, directing a refund of the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; but if the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury be adverse to the complainant, then such decision shall be forever final and conclusive, unless, within six months after the date of such decision, the party making entry, or his or their legal representatives, shall institute a suit at law against the Collector aforesaid in a District or Circuit Court of the United States for the district or circuit wherein the payment was made, setting forth all the particulars now required by section 3,011, of chapter 8 of the Revised Statutes, approved June 22, 1874. And if in said suit final judgment shall be rendered for the plaintiff in either of said courts, the Clerk of said court shall, within twenty days, provided no appeal shall have been taken, transmit a transcript thereof to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall immediately cause the judgment to be paid out of the Treasury, in the same description of money as was exacted of the plaintiff by the defendant, together with costs of court and attorneys' fees, as regulated by the highest court of the State wherein the said suit is brought. And each and every of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States shall have authority to enforce by writ of mandamus, the payment as aforesaid of every such final judgment.

SEC. 2. That whenever any before-mentioned protest shall not be signed with the signature of the party or parties making entry as aforesaid, but by an agent or attorney, then, in every such case, evidence in writing of such agency or appointment of such attorney, according to the law of the land, shall be filed with the Collector at or before the serving on him of said protest. And every party making entry of merchandise at any Custom-House, shall declare thereon his Post Office address, and to such address the Collector shall mail a notice of the date of the final liquidation of the entry aforesaid, and closing of the account thereof in the books of the Custom-house, stating the amount of balance, if any there be, due either side, and the date of receiving such notice in due course of mail by the party to whom it is addressed shall be held to be the date of such liquidation and closing for the purposes of protest, unless the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied that such notice was not sent or received, and in such case the time for making protest shall be extended by him to 10 days from the time when the party making entry was first informed of such liquidation and closing. And every suit begun as aforesaid by any party or parties shall contain each and every item of money claimed by said party to have been exacted from him, her or them by the defendant up to the date of the said suit, and which has not been included in some previous suit; and if any party shall, in the opinion of the court before which trial is had, unduly multiply causes of action, he shall, on final judgment therein in his favor, be entitled to recover therein costs against the defendant, but shall pay therein double costs if such judgment be in favor of the defendant. And, on the trial of every such suit, the respective officers of the Government shall, on due notice in writing served by the plaintiff on the defendant, or his attorney, produce before the court in which trial is had, the originals of all entries, and all other papers in their possession relating to the importation or importations in controversy which are pertinent to the issue, and in default thereof the plaintiff may read in evidence copies of such entries and papers. And on the trial of every such suit, the plaintiff, having given evidence to the satisfaction of the court of making entry of the importation in controversy, and the rate and amount of duty thereon exacted by the defendant and paid by the plaintiff, and of the protest aforesaid, shall be entitled to rest his cause; and it shall, therefore, be for the defendant to make it appear that the action complained of was warranted by law, and in every case where the statute relied upon by the defendant is, in the opinion of the court, ambiguous, and fairly capable of two conflicting interpretations as to the rate of duty imposed, the benefit of the doubt shall be given to the plaintiff.

SEC. 3. That nothing in any law of Congress shall take away or be construed to take away or impair the right of any person or persons who have on or before the passage of this act paid money as and for duties under protest, according to the requirements and provisions of the act of Congress, approved Feb. 26, 1845, or its revision contained in section 3,011 of the Revised Statutes, chapter 8, approved June 22, 1874, to any Collector of Customs, or other officer acting as such, in order to obtain merchandise imported by him or them, or the 14th section of an act approved June 13, 1864, or its revision in section 2,931 of the Revised Statutes, which duties were not authorized wholly or in part by law, to maintain an action at law against the persons exacting said money, to ascertain and try the legality of such exaction and payment of duties according to the limitations and provisions of either of the said acts of Congress.

SEC. 4. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

A BANK CASHIER IN TROUBLE.

THE NATIONAL BANK OF FISHKILL—AN ALLEGED DEFICIENCY OF SEVERAL THOUSAND DOLLARS—BONDS IN TRUST USED TO MEET OVERDRAFTS—THE BANK OFFICERS RETICENT.

FISHKILL VILLAGE, Friday, Jan. 12, 1877.

This quiet little village is anxiously and deeply interested in the sudden and unlooked-for exposé of irregularities in the accounts of Alexander Bartow, Cashier of the National Bank of Fishkill. The first rumor was that the deficiency amounted to $30,000, another $60,000, another $90,000. Another report stated that the money was paid over the counter to one man who has been living a fast life. None of the rumors or reports could be traced to a reliable foundation, and I sought an interview with Dr. Lewis H. White, President of the bank. At first Dr. White positively declined to be interviewed, but finally said, in substance, that the latter part of last week rumors were rife that Mr. Bartow's standing was jeopardized. On Monday of this week the Doctor was away, but when he returned at night the rumors were stronger than ever, and came from such sources that he found it to be a duty to act promptly. The next morning (Tuesday) he walked into the bank and said abruptly: "Mr. Bartow, your services as Cashier of this bank are no longer required." Mr. Bartow looked up from his books with apparent great surprise, and exclaimed, "What for?" Dr. White then charged him with "irregularities" in his accounts, whereupon Mr. Bartow assured the President that everything would be found all right, and left the bank. Dr. White, in further conversation, stated that the amount of deficiency has not yet been ascertained—in fact, he said it was utterly impossible to give any idea of it as yet. The money paid out was paid on overdrafts. When Dr. White was asked who made the overdrafts he declined to say, but intimated that several persons whose line of discount had been overstrained for some time, and Mr. Bartow knew it. There were no means at present of getting at the amount of deficiency. It may or may not reach $50,000. Whatever it turns out to be, the people here have the utmost confidence in the solvency of the bank. They do not look about the matter, and that is that Mr. Bartow has sold bonds that were placed in trust in the bank for safe keeping.

One man this morning, who had $5,000 in bonds deposited in the institution, said that since the developments he had asked Mr. Bartow where they were, and was told that he had sent them to New-York and paid the money in bank, and that the bank was good for them. There are, no doubt, several other cases like this, amounting in all, perhaps, to $15,000 or $20,000, all of which will probably be lost by the owners. It is stated on pretty good authority that no bonds sold by the bank's customers placed in trust in the bank, but has also sold bonds put in the bank in the trust by his own security men who were on his own bond of $30,000. The story that the Savings Bank of this village is involved in the difficulties of the National Bank is not true. A run on the bank, if one came, would cause it no difficulty, as the temporary moneyed resources of the bank are ample.

Mr. Alexander Bartow has been connected with the National Bank for over 20 years. He was not appointed Cashier until 1860. His character as a man and a good citizen has never before been questioned. He is Warden of the Episcopal Church, and in the everyday walks of life was looked upon as a model for others to pattern after. This morning he made the following statement to me: The capital of the National Bank of Fishkill is $200,000, and there is a surplus of $30,000. We have $200,000 of bonds in Washington worth $225,000, on which there is a circulation of $180,000. The deficiency is in trouble ranging from $20,000 to $60,000. I caused by overdrafts. Some of the bonds that were put in the bank in trust were used—say $50,000. They were hypothecated to keep these overdrafts up, and when the overdrafts are paid the bonds will be paid. I consider that three-quarters of the overdrafts are good, and the most confidence in the men who made these overdrafts. I cannot give you their names. I have seen some of them since this trouble commenced, and they have all told me that they will stand by me. I owned a little house down the street, but it is mortgaged. My wife has 10 shares of Lake Shore, but no office there now to help me out. I never speculated in my life. All the bonds in trust to which I refer were hypothecated in New-York. I trusted men who never betrayed me before. The Directors thought the credit of these men were not good, and I thought different, and there is where I was wrong. That is all there is of it. I shall stay here and redeem this wrong as far as I can.

All the morning the bank has been besieged by customers and others. Many of the callers who had left bonds there for safe keeping made a demand for the same, but the officers of the bank informed them that they could not pay anything over the counter until this matter is settled and the full result known, and that will probably not transpire for several days. One man who came out of the bank this morning said he had $8,700 in bonds in the bank, and they are gone. One of the stockholders of the bank is of the opinion that the deficiencies will amount to $100,000 or over.

CRIMINAL CASES AT RONDOUT.

RONDOUT, Jan. 12.—The case of John G. Babcock and others against William Libbey, the surviving partner of A. T. Stewart, for $45,000 damages for a breach of contract, which was on the calendar of the Circuit Court for the present term, has been, on account of the absence in Europe of a witness named Rogers, put over to June 19, when Judge Westbrook will hold a special term to try it. Heavy damage suits against the Citizens' Steam-boat Company, growing out of the Sunnyside disaster, have gone over till the next term. The trial of William J. Conroy, a noted burglar, and Silas Keyser will begin on Monday. Conroy was indicted for arson in firing the house of August Guppies on the 21 of November last, and also for murder in attempting to kill Guppies' family by blowing up the house at the same time. Keyser was indicted as an accessory.

THE POUGHKEEPSIE BRIDGE.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Jan. 12.—At the annual meeting here to-day of the Poughkeepsie Bridge Company the following Directors were elected: A. B. Stone, of New-York City; H. G. Eastman, of Poughkeepsie; George Innis, of Poughkeepsie; George F. Wilson, of Providence, R. I.; John G. Clark, of Boston, Mass.; Albert Thompson, of Boston, Mass.; Charles L. Perkins, of New-York City; E. L. Bowles, of New-York City; William L. Thompson, of New-York City; Homer Ramsdell, of Newburg, N. Y.; J. H. Appleton, of Springfield, Mass.; F. M. Allyn, of Hartford, Conn.; John F. Winslow, of Poughkeepsie.

REPORTED BUSINESS FAILURE.

BOSTON, Jan. 12.—The recent failure of Huddell & Seitzsinger, in Philadelphia, has caused some commotion here, where their liabilities are heavy. There are claims against the firm of nearly $600,000 held by Boston banks and firms.

LAW REPORTS.

TWEED'S APPEAL DISMISSED.

THE GENERAL TERM, SUPREME COURT, AFFIRMS THE JUDGMENT IN THE $6,000,000 SUIT—THE QUESTION OF THE JURORS' QUALIFICATIONS—CHIEF JUSTICE DAVIS ON ACUTE AND ABSURD TECHNICALITIES.

The General Term of the Supreme Court yesterday rendered a decision in the case of the People of the State of New-York against William M. Tweed, which came up on appeal from the judgment entered on the verdict for over $6,000,000, and from the order of the court denying a motion for a new trial on account of insufficient evidence and excessive damages. The judgment of the court below is affirmed by the General Term. Chief Justice Davis delivered the opinion of the court, Judges Brady and Daniels concurring. The Chief Justice begins by referring to the questions of the qualification of the jurors in the case. In this connection he awards very high praise to the opinions of Judge Westbrook, which are adopted as the opinions of the General Term. The Chief Justice then proceeds to consider the question whether, under the stipulation between the counsel to try suit No. 1—the $6,000,000 suit—with the special jury impaneled for suit No. 2, or the $1,000,000 suit, the questions that arose on such impaneling were properly before the court for consideration. It is held that the language of the stipulation is broad enough to cover all the exceptions to which Tweed was then entitled. As to the challenge to the array of the special jury, the General Term concurs in Judge Westbrook's opinion given at the time of the impaneling of the jury. The stipulation is also held to cover the several challenges to individual jurors, but the court say: "It is a serious question whether the court can or ought to be bound by any stipulation between the parties, which seeks to bring with that jury into this action any alleged errors in examining and impaneling them in respect to another action. No challenge has been made to the jurors, or any of them in this action; no evidence has been given by either of them upon the question of his qualification to sit in this case, and no assignment of perjury could be sustained upon the evidence given by any juror during his examination in the former case; and we are strongly inclined to the opinion that the exceptions taken upon the rulings on the challenges in action No. 2, are not properly before us for consideration." Chief Justice Davis says, however, the court have examined them, and hold that, so far as the questions arise upon challenges to the favor, the findings of the court below are not the subjects of exception, and are not reviewable. The court find no ground whatever for disturbing the verdict on any of the exceptions as to challenges for principal cause. Chief Justice Davis then proceeds as follows:

"The exceptions taken during the progress of the trial are too numerous to be noticed in detail. The gist of the action was an alleged conspiracy between the defendant Tweed and one Watson to defraud the City and County of New-York of large sums of money. The evidence has been given in such exceptions is not to be restricted by narrow and technical rules. Whatever tends to prove the conspiracy, and its objects, and purposes, and, if sufficient evidence be given to carry the case to the jury upon the question of conspiracy, whatever declarations or acts of either party that had a tendency to prove its objects and purposes or accomplishment, are always admissible. In nearly, if not every instance, the testimony objected to in the progress of the trial, tended to establish one of these propositions with more or less directness and force; and if some portions of the evidence can be said to have been immaterial and incompetent, it cannot be said to have been legally prejudicial to the defendant. The case against him was made out upon an abundance of clear and undisputed evidence, entirely sufficient to establish the right of the plaintiffs to recover. More evidence than was necessary, seems to us, to have been given, and some was received that might, without impropriety, have been excluded. But it should be recollected in considering this case that no substantial defense whatever was made or proved; no contradiction of any material fact bearing upon the cause of action was made by evidence, nor was any explanation of facts given to those evidence produced on the part of the defendant, in regard to such cause of action. The contest was simply one of legal obstructions, consisting of all the acute and sometimes absurd technicalities that the ingenuity of counsel could place in the path of justice. Such a defense deserved no favor at the hands of the court, and only but to succeed on appeal, unless it appears clearly that substantial rights of the defendant have been injuriously affected by the decisions of the trial court. We are not able to see that such injury was done by any of the rulings, in respect to the evidence objected to. In passing upon the numerous requests to charge, in the case, we have seen no error prejudicial to the defendant. On the contrary, the rulings on such requests and the charge were, in our opinion, far more favorable to the defendant than he was entitled to by law; and the verdict is in consequence, for a very considerably less amount than the jury might otherwise have given. The rule adopted in the measure of damages was conceded to, (for the purpose of avoiding all questions,) by the learned counsel for the respondent. It was altogether more favorable to the defendant than strict law required. There is no necessity, therefore, of considering it further.

The motion for a new trial on the minutes of the court was made in these general terms, "for insufficient evidence and for excessive damages." The court denied the motion. It is very clear that the damages were not excessive, if the plaintiffs were entitled to recover at all. What was meant by insufficiency of evidence does not appear; but if it was intended by that phrase to mean that there was not sufficient proof of the alleged conspiracy, and that the conspirators effected their fraudulent purpose and obtained the money of the City, it is enough to say that there was evidence sufficient to require the submission of this question to the jury, and so far as any point to the contrary may be considered, the verdict of the jury is conclusive. The order and judgment appealed from should therefore be affirmed with costs.

An order was made by the court, upon motion of the plaintiffs' counsel, for an additional allowance. The court granted such additional allowance, and fixed the same at $60,000. An appeal is taken from this order. The sum allowed is a large one, and in ordinary actions would be deemed extravagantly large, and it would be the duty of the court to reduce the amount. But in this case it is apparent that the plaintiffs and the City, for whose benefit the action is brought, have been subjected to enormous expenses in bringing such action, and in preparing for and trying the same. Contests upon some of the questions arising in the progress of the case have already been carried through all the courts to the court of last resort. To obtain the necessary evidence against the defendant, in order to establish his connection with the frauds and the amount received by him, extraordinary expenses have been incurred in the employment of accountants and experts for the examination of books of account, involving long periods of time and great labor. A number of eminent counsel were necessarily employed, and the services were expended in the progress of the trial, and all these facts were before the court. We do not feel at liberty to say that the allowance can, under such peculiar circumstances, be regarded as an abuse of the discretion of the court. It can work no prejudice as a precedent, for it is altogether improbable that such a case as this will ever arise in the litigation of the City. And besides, the total amount of such allowances in all cases has now been limited by statute. Our first inclination was to reduce the amount of this allowance; but further consideration has led us to the conclusion that it is not too large, and probably is not large enough fairly to indemnify the plaintiffs for the expenses to which they have been subjected in this action by the frauds and crimes of the defendant. We think that that order should also be affirmed."

THE TRIAL OF THE FERRYMEN.

The trial of George W. West, ferry-master, and Jacob A. Van Volckenberg, ticket-collector, in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at the Courtlandt street ferry, charged with being implicated in an extensive conspiracy to defraud the company, was resumed before Judge Sutherland yesterday, in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions. Mr. Charles W. Brooks, counsel for the Pennsylvania Railroad, with whom is associated Senator Leon Abbett, of New-Jersey, examined a number of the employes of the Company, who testified to the counting of all persons passing through the ferry-house during the hour of duty of the prisoners, the subsequent counting of the tickets at the main office in Philadelphia, showing an average discrepancy of 349 on three successive occasions. Mr. Henry W. Gwinner, Auditor of Passenger Receipts of the Pennsylvania Railroad, was next examined by Mr. Brooks, and gave a clear and comprehensive description of the working of the railroad, especially in relation to the issuing of passes and the instructions in regard to employes passing over the ferries. The witnesses for the prosecution were cross-examined by Mr. Mott, and the prosecution announced the close of their case. The defense will commence on Monday.

DAMAGES FOR THE FALL OF AN AWNING.

A decision was rendered by the Supreme Court, General Term, yesterday, in the case of William H. Hume against the Mayor, &c. It appears that the plaintiff, on Feb. 22, 1867, was severely injured by the fall of a wooden awning under which he was standing. The awning had been weakened by the pressure of a heavy fall of snow. Hume sued the City to recover damages, claiming that the awning was an unlawful street obstruction, and that the City was liable for allowing it to remain. At Trial Term he recovered a judgment for $2,000. The General Term yesterday, however, reversed this judgment. Judge Daniels, who delivered the opinion of the General Term, holds that, as neither the City nor any of its officers had any agency in creating the imperfect structure, nor any actual or constructive notice of its imperfectness, they are not liable.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The following cases were argued to-day:

No. 155—Mutual Life Insurance Company of New-York vs. Harris; and No. 156—Same vs. Same, Trustee.—Appeal from the Circuit Court for the District of Maryland.—In these cases the defendant in error and the widow of the insured both claimed to be paid the amount of a policy of insurance on the life of John S. Bany, issued by the company. Harris claimed as Trustee for Brune, and the widow claimed that Brune had obtained the title asserted by a fraudulent arrangement which ignored her rights. She sued and recovered in New-York, and the insurance company sought by this action to enjoin Harris and Brune from recovering in Maryland. The court decided against the company on the ground that the pending litigation in another State was no bar to proceedings in a court of law on a legal instrument. This decision is the error assigned. Henry E. Davis for appellant; J. M. Harris for appellee.

No. 159—Stanton D. Palmer vs. Embrey, Adminis trator.—Error to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. This was an action to recover for services of Robert J. Atkinson, deceased, formerly Third Auditor, rendered in prosecuting a claim before the Third Auditor, his successor in office. The judgment was for the Administrator, and the ground of review is that the compensation claimed was a contingent fee upon his success in collecting a claim against the United States, and that such a claim is inhibited by law, and will not be recovered. It is contended that where a man in the exercise of his professional services undertakes to work out a result for his client, not through his influence, but by professional labor and skill, there is no reason for holding the labor to be under the interdict of the law more than any other class of labor. Durant & Homer for plaintiff; E. London and P. L. Merriman for defendant.

On motion of Mr. E. N. Dickerson, E. B. Barnum, Esq., of Brooklyn, N. Y., was admitted to practice as an attorney and counselor of this court.

No. 695.—The Missouri Valley Life Insurance Company, plaintiff in error, vs. Augusta S. Smith.—This cause was submitted on printed arguments of T. A. Hurd, of counsel for the plaintiff in error, and by Mr. J. W. English, for the defendant in error, under the twentieth rule.

No. 878.—S. Heydenfeldt, plaintiff in error, vs. The Daney Gold and Silver Mining Company.—This cause was submitted on printed arguments by Mr. W. E. F. Deal, of counsel for the plaintiff in error, and by Mr. C. E. Delong for the defendant in error, under the twentieth rule.

No. 159.—Joseph. W. Stanton et al., plaintiffs in error, vs. James Hembry, Administrator, &c.—The argument of this cause was continued to-day. Reverdy Landee and Mr. A. L. Merriman, of counsel for the defendant in error, and concluded by Mr. Thomas J. Durant, for the plaintiff in error.

No. 160.—H. W. Fuller and J. W. Barnum, appellants, vs. Enoch S. Yentzer et. al., and No. 162.—H. W. Fuller and J. W. Darnum, appellants, vs. H. E. Goodrich.—The arguments of these causes was commenced by E. B. Barnum, of counsel for the appellants, and continued by Mr. W. B. Scales, for the appellees. Adjourned until Monday.

COURT NOTES.

Judge Donohue is expected to render a decision in the habeas corpus proceeding of Dr. Phelps to-day.

In Part III. of the Supreme Court yesterday, Oliver W. West recovered a judgment for $911 56 against Joshua and Laura Nickerson for professional services.

The Supreme Court, General Term, yesterday, affirmed the judgment in favor of the City in its suit to set aside the lease of the dock property at the Battery, made by the Dock Department to the North Shore and Staten Island Ferry Company.

On the 2d December Frank Fulton, of No. 54 West street, stole a gold watch and chain from Ulrich Tjarks, and a silver watch from Charles Konneman, both residing in the same house. In Part I. of the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, Fulton pleaded guilty, and Judge Gildersleeve sentenced him to two years and six months in State Prison.

On the 3d inst., while William Bennett, of No. 153 Sixth avenue, was drinking with a truck-driver named William Eagan, of No. 81 Mulberry street, in a saloon at Twenty-fourth street and Sixth avenue, he robbed him of his watch. Eagan, who was charged with the theft, pleaded guilty, yesterday, in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions, and Judge Gildersleeve sentenced him to three years in State Prison.

John Delahanty, a car-driver on the Third Avenue Line, who stole clothing and jewelry from several of his fellow-boarders at McKeever's lodging-house, No. 1,189 Second avenue, was tried before Judge Gildersleeve, in Part I., of the General Sessions, yesterday, and shown by Assistant District Attorney Lyon to have been an incorrigible thief. The jury found Delahanty guilty, and he was sentenced to five years in State Prison.

In Part I. of the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, Thomas Moore, alias James Owens, of No. 28 Laight street, who entered the picture store at No. 329 Hudson street, with intent to steal, and Stephen Coppinger, of No. 35 Lewis street, who broke into the apartments of Albert Cappelle, No. 97 Division street, with a like criminal intent, were guilty. Judge Gildersleeve sentenced Coppinger to five years and Moore to 18 months in State Prison.

On the 6th inst., as Mrs. Mary M. Clark, of Caldwell, New-Jersey, was walking through Nineteenth street, Charles Jones, a painter, out of work, snatched her pocket-book containing $16. The thief was arrested and indicted, and on being called up for trial by Assistant District Attorney Lyon, in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, pleaded guilty. Judge Gildersleeve sentenced Jones to two years and six months in the State Prison.

Catharine Clarke, a well-known thief, hired a room at the residence of Mrs. Mary Ann Evans, No. 353 Sixth avenue, and after a week's stay succeeded in stealing over $100 worth of clothing, which was found secreted in her bedroom. She was promptly arrested in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday, and having been recognized by Assistant District Attorney Lyon as an incorrigible thief, was sentenced by Judge Gildersleeve to four years in State Prison.

Peter Andrews, aged 25, a married man, living at No. 78 Mott street, who gave his occupation as "a member of the theatrical profession," was called up by Assistant District Attorney Lyon yesterday, in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions, to answer an indictment charging him with having committed an atrocious outrage on the person of a girl 9 years of age, living with her parents at No. 75 Mulberry street. On being arraigned, the scoundrel pleaded guilty, and Judge Gildersleeve sentenced him to three years in State Prison.

An old man named Isaac A. Biggs was arraigned before Justice Otterbourg yesterday upon a charge of conspiracy to defraud. On Dec. 30, Biggs, accompanied by a man named Sweet, entered the store of Freeman & Dayton, Fulton Market, and the former purchased goods valued at $8, for which he tendered a check for $40 on the National State Bank of Elizabeth, signed by M. M. Williams. Sweet was known to the firm, who accepted the check. The check proved to be worthless, and Biggs was promptly arrested. Sweet is still looking for Sweet. Several other firms have also been victimized by the prisoner.

The General Term of the Supreme Court, yesterday, rendered a decision in the case of the People ex rel. the Tradesmen's National Bank against the Commissioners of Taxes. The case arose out of the imposition of a tax on the capital stock of the bank, which amounts to $1,000,000, and is divided into shares of $40 each, par value. The market value of each share is $56. By statute, a reduction in the tax is made for capital invested in real estate, and ment, by any defect of State covernment or administration, the question which we confront would not arise, and it was not provided for. Perhaps, if it had been anticipated it could not have been provided for in express terms, without so exciting the jealousy of States as to embarrass the adoption of the Constitution. In early debates in Congress we find many arguments against the authority of Congress to reject the votes of a State, none, I believe, against the authority of the President of the Senate, for the power to determine whether they should reject them was never entertained or considered.

Regarding this question in the light of precedent and experience; recalling the facts of the history of the States in rebellion, their Governments, the organized machinery of revolution, passing through all the phases of civil war and reconstruction, the proposition that the power to determine their action to the general Government is vested absolutely in the President of the Senate in the absence of express words seems to me incredible. Does any one suppose if such a proposition had been submitted to the convention that framed the Constitution it would have been seriously considered? In my judgment this power is neither ministerial nor judicial, but political, and in the absence of express provision, is vested in the Congress of the United States. The resolution I have offered accordingly provides that the decision of the justices shall be adopted by Congress. Their decision could not be enforced by any sanction known to the law, but is an appeal to honor and good faith in the interest of peace and good government. Upon the other questions I shall only express the opinion that the certificate of returns, when regular upon its face, makes a prima facie case which it requires the affirmative action of both houses to overrule, and that when there are double returns, the prima facie case to which that rule applies the government de facto. I hold these opinions with profound respect for those who differ, and I shall be glad to support any proposition which shall seem more just and feasible than that I have ventured to submit.

THE REVISION OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

The Senate then resumed consideration of the House bill to perfect the revision of the Statutes of the United States.

Mr. HAMLIN, of Maine, submitted an amendment setting forth in detail the fees to be allowed to weighmasters, gangers, and explained that it was for the purpose of making the Revised Statutes agree with the law as originally passed. Although the table of fees had been omitted from the Revised Statutes, the Treasury Department had continued to pay the fees as prescribed by the original act. The law already provided that weighers and gaugers at Belfast, New-York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New-Orleans, and San Francisco, should be paid an annual salary, and the fees were to be paid to such officers at minor ports.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill was read a third time and passed.

The Senate then, at 2:45 P. M., on motion of Mr. CONKLING, went into executive session, and when the doors were reopened adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The committees were called for reports of a private nature, when a number of bills were referred, and one authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to invest in United States bonds the unexpended balance of the money appropriated for the bands of L'Anse and Vieux de Sert Indians, was passed.

THE RIGHT TO COMPEL THE PRODUCTION OF TELEGRAMS.

Mr. KNOTT, of Kentucky, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, made a report on the question of the right of the House to compel the production of telegrams by officers of telegraph companies. The report was made on the case of the recusant witness, Barnes, formerly New-Orleans manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company, and was an assertion of such right on the part of the House. It was read by Mr. KNOTT from the Clerk's desk. The reading consumed nearly an hour, and resolutions were adopted directing that E. W. Barnes again be brought before the bar of the House, and that the Sneaker demand whether he is willing to produce certain telegrams, and that if he shall manifest his willingness he shall be allowed to do so without delay, and, on so doing, shall be set at liberty.

The witness was then brought before the bar, and the Speaker demanded whether he was willing to produce certain telegrams mentioned in the subpœna of the Congressional Committee.

Witness—When I left New-Orleans I was necessarily superseded, being under heavy bonds and unwilling to be responsible for the money and business when not personally present; I am, therefore, not at present in control of anything or any messages in the New-Orleans office; should I come into possession of the messages again, and should there prove to be any such messages there as are described in the subpœna, I am willing to produce them.

The SPEAKER decided that the witness was still in the custody of the Sergeant at Arms, as the answer of the witness was not categorical. After some discussion as to whether the witness was in custody of the Sergeant at Arms or in custody of the House, Mr. CAULFIELD, of Illinois, said that he was apprised that the witness had a further answer to submit, and asked consent that he should be allowed to do so.

Consent being given, witness submitted the following answer: "I intended my answer to be such as the resolutions seemed to require; I thought it proper, in candor, to inform the House as to my present circumstances; I am entirely willing to produce the messages if I can do so."

Mr. WOOD, of New-York, suggested that that was all the answer the House could demand, and that there was nothing to do but to remand the witness to the custody of the Sergeant at Arms until he had produced the messages.

The witness having expressed the desire to further amend his answer, consent was given to him to do so.

Mr. WATTERSON, of Kentucky, said that the witness desired to explain his modified answer, and asked that a few moments be given to the counsel of the witness in order to make such explanation, but the House refused to grant the permission, and the witness declined to make any modification.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, thought that the witness should not be allowed to escape on the plea that he had not now the messages in his charge. He had them in his charge at the time the subpœna was served upon him. The offense went back to the beginning, and he should be committed for refusing to produce the papers when they were in his possession.

Mr. KNOTT, of Kentucky, offered a resolution declaring that the answer of the witness, E. W. Barnes, was not sufficient, and that said Barnes was in contempt of the authority of the House in refusing to produce certain telegrams demanded of him, and remanding him to the custody of the Sergeant at Arms till he shall purge himself of this contempt, or until he shall be discharged by order of the House. The resolution was adopted—yeas 131, nays 72; and Mr. Barnes was remanded to the custody of the Sergeant at Arms.

POWERS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. KNOTT, of Kentucky, from the Committee to Ascertain the Privileges of the House in the Counting of the Electoral Vote, made a report from the committee, recommending the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved—First—That the Constitution of the United States does not confer on the President of the Senate the power to examine and ascertain votes to be be counted as Electoral votes for President and Vice President.

Second—That the only power which the Constitution confers on the President of the Senate in regard to the Electoral votes for President and Vice President, is to receive the sealed lists transmitted to him by the several Electoral Colleges, to keep the same safely, and open all certificates, or those purporting to be such, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Third—That the Constitution does confer on the Senate and House of Representatives the power to examine and ascertain the votes to be counted as Electoral votes.

Fourth—That in the execution of that power, in respect to the counting of the Electoral votes, the House has at least equal power with the Senate.

Fifth—That in the counting of the Electoral votes, no vote can be counted against the judgment and determination of the majority of the two Houses.

Sixth—That the committee have leave to sit again, and report hereafter further matter for the consideration of the House.

The report, together with the minority report submitted by Mr. Burshard, of Illinois, was ordered to be printed, and Mr. KNOTT gave notice that he would call the resolutions up for action on Wednesday next.

Mr. KNOTT also asked that two additional members should be appointed on the Committee to Ascertain the Rights and Privileges of the House of Representatives on the Counting of the Electoral Vote, which was granted, and the Speaker subsequently appointed Messrs. Field, of New-York, and Lawrence, of Ohio, as such additional members.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE RIVERS AND HARBORS.

The Speaker laid before the House a Message from the President, stating how the money appropriated by the River and Harbor bill has been expended.

After a speech by Mr. Reagan, of Texas, criticising the action of the President in regard to that bill, the Message was referred.

THE SOUTH CAROLINA TESTIMONY.

Consent was given to print the testimony taken by the Committee on the Election in South Carolina, and the House then, at 4:40 o'clock, adjourned until Monday.

INSPECTORS OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

The General Term of the Supreme Court yesterday rendered decisions in the suits brought by Jacob J. Banta against Theodore S. Kent and Lewis Kneisel. The actions involved the right to the possession of the office of Inspector of Weights and Measures. It appears that in 1873 Mayor Havemeyer sent to the Board of Aldermen the names of four men as appointees to the offices of Inspectors. Two of these were Banta and Kent, and their appointment was confirmed by the board. One of the Aldermen then moved for the confirmation of the other two appointees. Objection was made that only two could be appointed since there were only two offices to be filled. In spite of this, however, the appointment of the other two was also confirmed. All four qualified and entered upon the discharge of their duties, Banta and Kent being assigned to the First District. Some months afterward the Mayor undertook to remove Banta, but failed to comply with the statute in such matters in neglecting to obtain the Governor's approval. The Mayor subsequently sent in the name of Lewis Kneisel to the board as an Inspector of Weights and Measures in the place of Banta, removed. Kneisel's appointment having been ratified, Banta brought an action against Kent and another against Kneisel, seeking to oust these persons as intruders in the First District. The cases were referred to ex-Judge Spencer as Referee, and he reported against the claims of all three to the office. The General Term affirms the judgment as against Kneisel, but dismisses the appeal as against Kent on the ground that the appeal was irregular

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE ADVENTURES OF TOM SAWYER. By MARK TWAIN. Illustrated. The American Publishing Company. 1876.

Shades of the venerable Mr. Day, of the instructive Mrs. Barbauld, of the persuasive Miss Edgeworth! Had you the power of sitting to-day beside the reviewer's desk, and were called upon to pass judgment on the books written and printed for the boys and girls of to-day, would you not have groaned and moaned over their perusal? If such superlatively good children as Harry and Lucy could have existed, or even such mondescript grips as Sandford and Merton had abnormal being, this other question presents itself to our mind: "How would these precious children have enjoyed Mark Twain's Tom Sawyer?" In all books written for the amusement of children there are two distinct phases of appreciation. What the parent thinks of the book is one thing; what the child thinks of it is another. It is fortunate when both parent and child agree in their conclusions. Such double appreciation may, in most instances, simply be one in regard to the fitness of the book on the part of the parent. A course of reading entirely devoted to juvenile works must be to an adult a tax on time and patience. It is only once in many years that such a charming book as Little Alice in Wonderland is produced, which old and young could read with thorough enjoyment. If, thirty years ago, Tom Sawyer had been placed in a careful father's hands to read, the probabilities would have been that he would have hesitated before giving the book to his boy—not that Mr. Clemens' book is exceptional in character, or differs in the least, save in its cleverness, from a host of similar books on like topics which are universally read by children to-day. It is the judgment of the book-givers which has undoubtedly undergone a change, while youthful minds, being free from warp, twist, or dogma, have remained ever the same. Returning then to these purely intellectual monstrosities, mostly the pen-and-ink offspring of authors and authoresses who never had any real flesh and blood creations of their own, there can be no doubt that had Sandford or Merton ever for a single moment dipped inside of Tom Sawyer's pages, astronomy and physics, with all the musty old farrago of Greek and Latin history, would have been thrown to the dogs. Despite tasseled caps, starched collars, and all the proprieties, these children would have laughed uproariously over Tom Sawyer's "cat and the pain-killer," and certain new ideas might have had birth in their brains. Perhaps, had these children actually lived in our times, Sandford might have been a Western steam-boat captain, or Merton a filibuster. Tom Sawyer is likely to inculcate the idea that there are certain lofty aspirations which Plutarch never ascribed to his more prosaic heroes. Books for children in former bygone periods were mostly constructed in one monotonous key. A child was supposed to be a vessel which was to be constantly filled up. Facts and morals had to be taken like bitter draughts or acrid pills. In order that they should be absorbed like medicines it was perhaps a kindly thinker who disguised these facts and morals. The real education swallowed in those doses by the children we are inclined to think was in small proportion to the quantity administered. Was it not good old Peter Parley who in this country first broke loose from conventional trammels, and made American children truly happy? We have certainly gone far beyond Mr. Goodrich's manner. There has come an amount of ugly realism into children's story-books, the advantages of which we are very much in doubt about. We draw our pictures, utterly indifferent as to the subjects. Now, it is perfectly true that many boys do not adopt drawing-room manners. Perhaps it is better that little paragons—pocket Crichtons—are so rare. Still, courage, frankness, truthfulness, and self-reliance are to be inculcated in our lads. Since association is everything, it is not desirable that in real life we should familiarize our children with those of their age who are lawless or dare-devils. Granting that the natural is the true, and the true is the best, and that we may describe things as they are for adult readers, it is proper that we should discriminate a great deal more as to the choice of subjects in books intended for children. To-day a majority of the heroes in such books have longings to be pirates, want to run away with vessels, and millions of our American boys read and delight in such stories. In olden times the Pirate's Own Book with its death's-head and cross-bones on the back, had no concealment about it. It is true, edition after edition was sold. There it was. You saw it palpably. There was no disguise about it. If a father or mother objected to their child's reading the Pirate's Own Book, a pair of tongs and a convenient fireplace ended the whole matter. To-day the trouble is this: That there is a decidedly sanguinary tendency in juvenile books. No matter how innocent, quiet, or tame may be the title of a child's book, there is no guarantee that the volume your curly-headed little boy may be devouring may not contain a series of adventures recalling Capt. Kidd's horrors. In the short preface of Tom Sawyer, Mr. Clemens writes, "Although my book is intended mainly for the entertainment of boys and girls, I hope it will not be shunned by men and women on that account." We have before expressed the idea that a truly clever child's book is one in which both the man and the boy can find pleasure. No child's book can be perfectly acceptable otherwise. Is Tom Sawyer amusing? It is incomparably so. It is the story of a Western boy, born and bred on the banks of one of the big rivers, and there is exactly that wild village life which has schooled many a man to self-reliance and energy. Mr. Clemens has a remarkable memory for those peculiarities of American boy-talk which the grown man may have forgotten, but which return to him not unpleasantly when once the proper key is sounded. There is one scene of a quarrel, with a dialogue, between Tom and a city boy which is perfect of its kind. Certain chapters in Tom's life, where his love for the school-girls is told, make us believe that for an urchin who had just lost his milk-teeth the affections out West have an awakening even earlier than in Oriental climes. In fact, Tom is a preternaturally precocious urchin. One admirable character in the book, and touched with the hand of a master, is that of Huckleberry Finn. There is a reality about this boy which is striking. An honest old aunt, who adores her scapegrace nephew, is a homely picture worked with exceeding grace. Mr. Clemens must have had just such a lovable old aunt. An ugly murder in the book, over-minutely described and too fully illustrated, which Tom and Huck, see, of course, in a graveyard, leads, somehow or other, to the discovery of a cave, in which treasures are concealed, and to which Tom and Huck fall heirs. There is no cant about Mr. Clemens. A description of a Sunday-school in Tom Sawyer is true to the letter. Matters are not told as they are fancied to be, but as they actually are. Mr. Walters is the Superintendent of the village Sunday-school, and this is Mr. Clemens' idea about him and his actions:

"When a Sunday-school Superintendent makes his customary speech, a hymn-book in the hand is as necessary as the inevitable sheet of music in the hands of a singer, who stands forward on the platform and sings a solo at a concert, though why is a mystery, for neither the hymn nor the sheet of music is ever referred to by the sufferer. This superintendent was a slim specimen of 35, with a sandy goatee, and short, sandy hair; he wore a stiff standing collar, whose upper edge almost reached his ears, and whose sharp points curved forward abreast the corners of his mouth—a fence that compelled a straight look out ahead, and a turning of the whole body when a side view was required; his chin was propped on his spreading cravat, which was as broad and as long as a bank-note, and had fringed ends; his boots were turned sharply up, in the fashion of the day, like sleigh-runners—as indeed practically and absolutely they were. The young men by sitting with their toes pressed against a wall for hours together. Mr. Walters was very earnest of mien and very sincere and earnest at heart, and held sacred things and places in such reverence and so separated them from wordly matters that unconsciously to himself his Sunday-school voice had acquired a peculiar intonation which was wholly absent on week days."

Have any readers ever seen a Sunday-school "show off"? If they have, it was done exactly as Mr. Clemens tells it:

"Mr. Walters fell to 'showing off,' with all sorts of official brisklings and activities, giving orders, delivering judgments, discharging directions here, there, everywhere that he could find a target. The librarian 'showed off,' running hither and thither with his arms full of books, and making a deal of the splutter and fuss that insect authority delights in. The young lady teachers 'showed off,' bending sweetly over pupils that were lately being boxed, lifting pretty, warning fingers, at bad little boys, and patting good ones lovingly. The young gentlemen teachers 'showed off,' with small scoldings and other little displays of authority, and fine attention to discipline—and most of the teachers, of both sexes, found business up at the library, by the pulpit; and it was business that frequently was to be done over again, two or three times, (with much seeming vexation.) The little girls 'showed off' in various ways, and the little boys 'showed off' with such diligence that the air was thick with paper wads and the murmur of scufflings; and, above it all the great man sat, and beamed a majestic judicial smile upon all the house, and warmed himself in the sun of his own grandeur—for he was 'showing off' too."

Tom, like all boys, gets good and bad by fits and starts, and becomes a member of the order of the Cadets of Temperance, "being attracted by the showy character of their regalia." Tom swears to abstain from smoking, chewing, and profanity, in order to wear the uniform of the Cadets of Temperance on the occasion of the expected death of a rural Judge, when the regalia is to be sported at his funeral. But as the Judge don't die soon enough, Tom, disgusted with waiting, throws off his regalia and relapses again.

"He handed in his resignation at once, and that night the lodge suffered a relapse and died. Tom resolved that he would never trust a man like that again. The funeral was a fine thing. The cadets paraded in a style calculated to kill the late member with envy. Tom was a free boy again, however; there was something in that. He could drink and swear now, but found, to his surprise, that he did not want to. The simple fact that he could, took the desire away and the charm of it."

If Mr. Clemens has been wanting in continuity in his longer sketches, and that sustained inventive power necessary in dovetailing incidents, Tom, as a story, though slightly disjointed, has this defect less apparent. As a humorist, Mr. Clemens has a great deal of fun in him, of the true American kind, which crops out all over the book. Mr. Clemens has an audience both here and in England, and doubtless his friends across the water will re-echo the hearty laughs which the reading of Tom Sawyer will cause on this side of the world. We are rather inclined to treat books intended for boys and girls, written by men of accredited talent and reputation, in a serious manner. Early impressions are the lasting ones. It is exactly such a clever book as Tom Sawyer which is sure to leave its stamp on younger minds. We like, then, the true boyish fun of Tom and Huck, and have a foible for the mischief these children engage in. We have not the least objection that rough boys be the heroes of a story-book. Restless spirits of energy only require judicious training in order to bring them into proper use. "If your son wants to be a pirate," says Mr. Emerson somewhere, "send him to sea. The boy may make a good sailor, a mate, maybe a Captain." Without advocating the utter suppression of that wild disposition which is natural in many a fine lad, we think our American boys require no extra promptings. Both East and West our little people are getting to be men and women before their time. In the books to be placed, then, into children's hands for purposes of recreation, we have a preference for those of a milder type than Tom Sawyer. Excitements derived from reading should be administered with a certain degree of circumspection. A sprinkling of salt in mental food is both natural and wholesome; any cravings for the contents of the castors, the cayenne and the mustard, by children, should not be gratified. With less, then, of Injun Joe and "revenge," and "slitting women's ears," and the shadow of the gallows, which throws an unnecessarily sinister tinge over the story, (if the book really is intended for boys and girls,) we should have liked Tom Sawyer better.

HOW BROWN MARRIED OFF HIS DAUGHTERS.

From the Dubuque (Iowa) Telegraph.

"Brown, I don't know how it is that your girls all marry off as soon as they get old enough, while none of mine can marry."

"Oh, that's simple enough. I marry my girls off on the buckwheat straw principle."

"But what is that principle? I never heard of it before."

"Well, I used to raise a good deal of buckwheat, and it puzzled me to know how to get rid of the straw. Nothing would eat it, and it was a great bother to me. At last I thought of a plan. I stacked my buckwheat straw nicely and built a high rail-fence around it. My cattle, of course, concluded that it was something good, and at once tore down the fence and began to eat the straw. I repaired them away and put up the fence a few times, but the more I drove them away the more anxious they became to eat the straw, and eat it they did, every bit of it. As I said, I marry my girls off on the same principle. When a young man that I don't like begins calling on my girls I encourage him in every way I can. I tell him to come often and stay as late as he pleases, and I take pains to hint to the girls that I think they'd better set their caps for him. It works first rate. He don't make many calls, for the girls treat him as coolly as they can. But when a young fellow that I like comes around, a man that I think would suit me for a son-in-law, I don't let him make many calls before I give him to understand that he isn't wanted around my house. I tell the girls, too, that they shall not have anything to do with him, and give them orders never to speak to him again. The plan always works first rate. The young folks begin to pitch into each other, and the next thing I know they are engaged to be married. When I see that they are determined to marry I always give in, and pretend to make the best of it. That's the way I manage it."

THE COWENHOVEN HEIRS.

A motion was made yesterday, in the Supreme Court, Special Term, Brooklyn, in the case of the Cowenhoven heirs—Maria L. Strong and others—against the City of Brooklyn, by counsel for the plaintiffs, that the judgment of the Court of Appeals be made the judgment of the Supreme Court. The action was to recover a large tract of land on Atlantic avenue, from Fifth to Classon avenues, embracing a portion of the highway which was formerly occupied by the Brooklyn and Jamaica Railroad for depot purposes. When the railroad company abandoned the depot they sold it to the City of Brooklyn for a nominal sum. The Cowenhoven heirs claimed that the land reverted to the estate. Corporation Counsel De Witt opposed the motion, and made an application for a stay of proceedings, pending the decision of the writ of ejectment. To allow the writ of ejectment to be operative would permit the plaintiffs to close the entire fronts of many stores, disturb the pavements, and sever the water mains.

Justice Gilbert signed the judgment, and counsel then proceeded to tax the costs. A stay of proceedings was subsequently allowed, in order to allow the Corporation Counsel to make an argument for delay until the Commissioners appointed by the Supreme Court report.

PROPERTY TAXED TWICE AND THEN SOLD.

The case of the People ex rel. George Law against the Commissioners of Taxes was decided by the Supreme Court, General Term, yesterday. It appears that Mr. Law had paid taxes for several years on property in Mott street, running through to Worth street. He found, however, that the property, described as being in Worth street, had been sold for non-payment of taxes. The property had evidently been taxed twice, once as being on Mott street, and the second time as being on Worth street. Mr. Law brought an action to set aside the tax sale, but the General Term, while admitting the injustice of the sale for non-payment of taxes, holds that Mr. Law has made a mistake in not suing the City, which is the real party in interest. Chief Justice Davis, who writes the opinion, thinks the Common Council should anticipate such an action by directing the canceling of the tax sale, and refunding to the purchaser his money

FRIDAY, Jan. 12—P. M.

The speculation in Western Union constituted the most prominent feature in the dealings on the Stock Exchange to-day, the transactions in that stock amounting to 38,300 out of a total business of 76,235 shares. The halt yesterday in the upward movement in these shares has proved to have been only temporary, as to-day the bulls, again taking heart of grace, by vigorous purchasing pushed up the price from 73⅜ at the opening to 74⅜, the improvement being well maintained to the close. If good faith is maintained among the members of the pool it is but reasonable to expect that they will succeed in putting the stock to still higher figures, but the antecedents of some of the parties to the combination for a rise are well calculated to excite distrust on this very point, and the outside public who may feel inclined to buy on the strength of the confident predictions of an advance might possibly exercise a wise discretion in taking this element of doubt into account. Illinois Central was again erratic, with wide and frequent fluctuations. The price opened at 62½, fell off to 60½, and closed at 61⅛. There were again some transactions in the stock on sellers' option at a concession from the regular price. Lake Shore and Michigan Central were firm on slight fluctuations. The St. Paul shares in the early dealings recorded a decline, but afterward recovered. The coal stocks were firm, but at slightly lower quotations. Investment shares were steady.

The entire business amounted to 76,235 shares, which embraced 38,300 Western Union, 12,700 Lake Shore, 8,450 St. Paul, 6,200 Michigan Central, 2,000 Illinois Central, and 1,700 Ohio and Mississippi.

There was a good demand for money to-day, and the rates for call loans ranged from 5 to 7 ℘ cent., closing at the intermediate figure. The market works close considering the large outflow of money of late for interest and dividends. Prime mercantile paper was quoted at 5 to 7 ℘ cent. The national bank notes received at Washington for redemption to-day amounted to

It is reported from Washington that the Senate Committee on the Presidential question has agreed on a "plan." Whether the agreement is unanimous or not is not known, and what support it gets is based on the inference that no measure could be passed, the result of which would be known beforehand. The bill said to have been presented by the Senate Committee has but one essential provision, which is to refer all double certificates to a tribunal to be made up by appointing five Senators and five Representatives, and from these dropping one by lot, and then adding to the remaining nine the four Judges of the Supreme Court having the longest term of service. There is no reason to doubt that this will make an impartial tribunal, so far as political prejudices go. It would not secure either Senators or Representatives without bias, but the question as to whether the Republicans or the Democrats had a majority would probably be decided by lot. Perhaps, however, a simpler way to settle the matter would be for Mr. HAYES and Mr. TILDEN to be blindfolded on the portico of the Capitol, and "draw cuts" for the Presidency. The principle would be the same, or so nearly the same, that the difference is not worth discussing. As to the interposition of the Judges of the Supreme Court in the dispute, it does not seem to us easy to justify it. It would not materially add to the respect likely to be felt for the decision which might be arrived at, and it might seriously injure the court. The objections which we point out below to the court as a whole, acting on this question, apply equally to the action of a part of its number. It would be idle, however, to express any conclusive opinion on the measure until its exact provisions are more fully known.

Another speech was made in the Senate yesterday in favor of bringing in the Supreme Court as an arbiter in the Presidential dispute. Senator BOOTH'S argument is described as able and eloquent, and doubtless it was both, for the California Senator, though not the most practical of men, is earnest and sincere in temper, a thoughtful student, and an effective speaker. But we do not think his effort is likely to have had much weight with the Senate, because that body has already declared, by its vote on Mr. EDMUNDS' constitutional amendment, that a majority of its members, of both parties, is firmly opposed to placing such purely political duties upon the Supreme Court. And this feeling is, beyond question, a safe and prudent one. The field for the court is the adjudication of actual cases, brought before it in the regular course of litigation. So long as it holds to this, it will have little opportunity and less temptation to depart from the high standard it has always maintained. What is equally important, and even more so, the country would have no occasion to suspect the court of such departure, and that the court should have the confidence of the country is nearly as necessary as that it should deserve it. We have had at least two impressive lessons as to how the Supreme Court is regarded when it enters, even necessarily, on questions which excite deep party feeling, and these ought to be enough.

Conflicting accounts are given in Washington as to what the President will do with the bill abolishing the Police Commission of that city. There may be reasons for not promptly signing such a measure, but the power of the commission to command respect is gone completely. The testimony of the Chief, given Thursday, as to Commissioner MURTAGH'S conduct was enough to ruin the reputation of the force. If it is true, the Commissioner is even a more disgusting person than he has been heretofore supposed to be. If it is not true, the chief executive officer of the force is a perjurer. For some time the country has rested in the belief that the local government of the capital was, if not efficient, at least not scandalous; but this last exposure is a rude awakening from that illusion, so far as one important part of the Government is concerned.

The breaking in of a considerable part of the glass in the roof of the Grand Central Depot yesterday was an accident which is likely to make considerable impression on the public. The roof, though of great span, is of such fine proportions, and the mechanism from which its strength is derived is so plainly in sight, that passengers using the depot have generally taken great comfort in a sense of its security and permanence. But the accident yesterday was not so extraordinary, or so unlikely to occur frequently, that the public will be easily reassured regarding it. Half-melted snow, frozen into more or less solid ice and again loosened by a thaw, is something to which the roof seems to be exposed at any time in Winter. The "proper precautions" which the company is reported to be about taking ought not only to be very thorough, but they ought to be made public as soon and as fully as possible. A feeling of safety among those who travel is not as necessary as safety itself, but it is worth all reasonable trouble to establish it.

Corporation Counsel WHITNEY has made short work with the quibbles of the Police Commissioners intrusted with the duty of cleaning the streets. The Street-cleaning Bureau, apparently affected with the prevailing mania for hair-splitting, became possessed with the extraordinary notion that the snow could not be removed from the streets because snow is clean, and the appropriation for the service referred to relates, by implication, to dirt. Mr. WHITNEY shows that no such interpretation of the law was ever made before, and that the Board of Police have ample authority to remove snow and ice, or "anything else" which is a hindrance to street travel. He says if the statute does not authorize the removal of snow and ice, it does not authorize the removal of ordinary street dirt. The Commissioners, having their timorous fears of impeachment for misappropriation of funds thus removed, have ordered that the streets be cleaned. The work will be begun at once, and we may hope that we have heard the last of this flimsy pretext for securing a special appropriation for removing "clean snow."

A fine field for municipal jobbery is being prepared in the two new wards. Street openings by the score are petitioned for, and, in one or two cases, the Commissioners of Estimate and Assessment have already been appointed. The Commissioners appointed by Judge DONOHUE on Wednesday on the opening of One Hundred and Thirty-eighth street are a very fair sample of the kind of men to whose tender mercies property-owners are delivered over under our new Ring. Mr. JACOB BLUMENTHAL holds, we believe, a minor position in the Surrogate's court, and is a prominent Tammany politician. Mr. HENRY LEWIS is a brother of Alderman LEWIS, and is understood to be deeply interested in up-town real-estate speculations. Mr. MEYER BUTZEL is the law partner of Alderman PURROY, one of KELLY'S most active and officious henchmen, and whose public duties have usually been discharged with a single eye to the future of his speculative ventures in the annexed district. It is quite possible that adjoining property-owners may find little reason to complain of the allowances made by this very neat combination of political intriguers, though it is quite possible that in this and other fields of effort their labors may prove rather expensive for that more numerous body who have to pay taxes and assessments.

The Express approves of the bill prepared by Mr. EATON, and introduced in the Assembly by Mr. COWDIN, providing for a "conference" on the question of City salaries and cognate questions. That affords another excellent reason why the business of reducing the proportions of Municipal pay-rolls should be set about in a less cumbrous and more direct fashion. The bill introduced last year, in conformity with Controller GREEN'S memorial, incurred the most bitter hostility from Tammany Hall, as well as the opposition of Republicans who were in sympathy with the plans of KELLY and his supporters. No better argument could be adduced why that bill should be revived, with such modifications as circumstances may demand. The Express thinks that it placed the Controller's salary at too high a figure. It ought to be very easy to satisfy Mr. KELLY and his organ on that score.

PLEDGING THE PUBLIC CREDIT.

If there were any efficacy in the declarations of party platforms, the subsidy system might be classed among the extinct forces of American politics. Both parties have again and again assailed the abuses that have grown out of it, and have deprecated its renewal in any form. The present House of Representatives has given expression to the feeling, and has justified it by a reference to the exigencies of the country. On the 15th of December, 1875, on the motion of Mr. HOLMAN, and by a vote of 223 to 33, the House adopted this resolution:

"That in the judgment of this House, in the present condition of the financial affairs of the Government, no subsidies in money, bonds, public lands, indorsements, or by pledge of the public credit, should be granted by Congress to associations or corporations engaged or proposing to engage in public or private enterprises, and that all appropriations from the public Treasury ought to be limited at this time to such amounts only as shall be imperatively demanded by the public service."

Nevertheless, the House Committee on Pacific Railroads have now unanimously recommended for passage the bill binding the United States to pay interest on the bonds of the Texas Pacific Railroad and its branches, to an amount exceeding one hundred millions of dollars.

The Texas Pacific scheme is, perhaps, the most outrageous job now before the country. It failed last session partly because Congress was in no mood to entertain so scandalous an attack upon the Treasury; partly because the efforts of Mr. SCOTT and his agents in support of the measure were more or less neutralized by the efforts of Mr. HUNTINGTON and his lobby in the interest of the Southern Pacific. The two great schemers have joined hands. The pretense that a second transcontinental railroad is required as a check upon the monopolizing tendencies of the Central and Union Pacific Roads, is abandoned by the original promoters of the Texas Pacific. The influence of the Central Pacific appears in the person of Mr. HUNTINGTON, and two great and hitherto antagonistic interests are in league to obtain an indefinite amount for the construction of the main line, for the construction also of four branch roads at its eastern end, and for the purchase of such roads as may be made parts of these branches. There is not the remotest prospect of the latter earning their expenses, and their acquisition, by construction or purchase, entails the acquisition of worthless property for the enrichment of various "rings," and at the same time multiplies the local interests in support of the whole scheme. The scheme itself is a fraud, and the financial burdens which its enactment would fasten upon the country are far in excess of those connected with the present transcontinental highway.

There were reasons for rendering liberal aid to the Union and Central Pacific routes which cannot apply either to the Texas and Southern or the Northern Pacific. The struggle in which the nation was engaged gave to the project an importance which, for the time, overshadowed other considerations. Congress thought less of the cost than of the result. Subsequent experience has shown that, as an ordinary business enterprise, the line on which the country lavished lands and credit might have been profitably built. The bonuses were needed, because the undertaking was an experiment. Its success has demonstrated the folly of spending more public money, in any shape, for the construction of competing lines. If there is business for them, the money may be obtained to build them; if there is not, money loaned to them would be lost. On this ground, the succor given to the Texas Pacific and the Northern Pacific has been confined to munificent donations of land, in pursuance of a policy which the Republican and Democratic Parties both insist shall now be abandoned. The application of the Texas Pacific for further help is, therefore, objectionable from every point of view. It is an attempt to reopen a system of national expenditures on a scale more extravagant than that which was applied to the Union and Central Companies, in spite of the warning which the bad faith of these companies has given to the American people. And, as regards the contemplated branches, it facilitates endless corruption and jobbery, and establishes a precedent by which the South may retrieve its shattered fortunes at the expense of the nation.

The bill provides for a Government guarantee of gold interest for fifty years, at the rate of $40,000 per mile of the main line of the Texas and Pacific Road, some 1,800 miles in length, of which about 1,200 remain to be built. As the portion already constructed could not have cost, under proper management, more than $20,000 per mile, equipment included, the margin for stealing is wide enough upon that portion of the road; while the fact that all that remains to be built will, on an average, cost still less indicates the magnitude of the plunder for which the confederated speculators are working. Whether, under the bill as it reads, the subsidy is applicable to aught but the road yet unbuilt, is a question which the vagueness of the terms employed renders suspicious, to say the least. Nor is the pretense that the bonds to be issued shall be regulated by the actual cost of the particular section covered by them more satisfactory. We know how matters of this kind are managed, and under the direction of Messrs. SCOTT and HUNTINGTON there will be no difficulty in adjusting them to the emergency. Five thousand of the forty thousand dollars per mile are to be retained by the Treasury as in part security for the interest to be paid on account of the whole amount. Thus the difference between the highest estimated cost of construction and equipment—say, $20,000 per mile—and the amount of bonds available, with the Government guarantee, may be put down at $15,000 per mile—a veritable gold mine for Messrs. SCOTT and HUNTINGTON and their associates, whether they succeed in getting a subsidy for the entire 1,800 miles, or for the 1,200 miles yet to be built.

The bill provides, in addition, for a Government guarantee of interest for the same period, at the rate of thirty-five thousand dollars per mile, on account of the branch roads, whose total length is estimated at 1,200 miles. There are four such roads—one to connect the eastern terminus of the main line at Shreveport with New-Orleans, a second to connect Shreveport with Vicksburg, a third to run from Jefferson, in Texas, to Memphis; the fourth to run from a point in the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad. The third and fourth of these projects are mere jobs, for the benefit of private parties, some of them influential local politicians. None of them can be said to be necessary, and certainly none forms any integral part of a Southern transcontinental road. Their introduction into the scheme is intended to secure for it more widely-diffused Southern support in Congress; and they are so many signs of the Southern disposition to beg, borrow, or steal all that can be got out of the national Treasury.

THE DELAY OF RUSSIA.

There seems little question that the preparations of Russia for the approaching contest have been slower than was expected, and that she has been by no means urgent in forcing a decision from the conference on the questions at issue. The mobilization has gone on slowly, though it is now being extended to other portions of the Empire. The administration of the Army shows some of those defects which appeared in the French military administration at the commencement of the Franco-German war. There is, indeed, an Army of over 800,000 on the rolls, but it is found that often, when mobilized, the regiments show by no means their complement. The Russian sanitary management is always bad, and it is reported that in the crowded camps on the Pruth the old scourges of typhoid and typhus have appeared again. This may be credited when it is remembered that, in their campaign of 1828-9 against the Turks, the Russians lost more from disease than by the enemy. It is possible, too, that, as the war approaches, the Muscovite military authorities see the truth of VON MOLTKE'S warning that they have undertaken a heavy task in attempting to open a campaign on the Danube against the Turks. The Turkish positions are very strong, and two difficult lines must be carried—those of the Danube and the Balkans, with all their fortified places—before the way would be even opened to Adrianople. The Winter, also, in Eastern Europe has been, like that here, characterized by deep snows and steady cold. A campaign on the plains of the Lower Danube or in the passes of the Balkans at such a season would be almost impossible. There are also unsettled questions with the European powers, and probably some uncertainty still exists as to the future course of Austria and Germany.

Austro-Hungary has shown herself very quarrelsome toward Servia, and the Hungarian and Vienna press are openly in sympathy with Turkey. The St. Petersburg Gazette almost pathetically calls for a more explicit statement by Prince BISMARCK of the purposes of Germany toward Russia, saying, "Germany and Russia united could defy all Europe." To this an official German journal replies that this statement may be true, but that the days of crusades are past, and, quoting BISMARCK'S well-known words, that "Germany would not risk the legs of one of her hardy Pomeranian rifleman for any question, except a vital one to herself;" that the condition of the Christians under Turkey, was nothing to her except as a philosophical or humanitarian question. All things make it prudent for Russia to advance slowly, and the delays of the conference are in her interest. Of the other powers, France is still more in sympathy with Turkey than with her opponent, and England itself is uncertain, though each day tending more to neutrality in case of war.

The Russian popular excitement continues, as well as the warlike preparations. The unusual spectacle has been seen of a sort of radical or communal display and procession by the students of St. Petersburg, under a red flag, and the Pan-Slavic communal movement spreads in the upper classes. The question of sending forth privateers, the Government employing American men and vessels, has been seriously discussed, in view of the possibility of England's uniting with Turkey. The ports on the Black Sea are being strongly fortified, and torpedoes have been placed in the channels of many of them. Many large bodies of troops have been concentrated near these places. On the Bug, the Dneiper, and the Pruth are also many corps, amounting, it is believed, to more than 200,000 men, and ready to move early in January. To aid these will be considerable forces from Roumania, (the modern name for the Principalities,) from Bulgaria, and from Montenegro and Bosnia.

Even if the Czar be in earnest in his efforts for peace, these preparations and the expectations aroused through all the Slavonic peoples make it impossible for him to retreat. His crown would not be on his head a month if he yielded now. There is no sign, either, of Turkey's yielding. The organ of the new Vizier—The Truth—has said: "We will submit to no injustice, and recoil before no war." Having refused occupation, there remains to the Sultan but one alternative—war.

THE LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

The first authoritative report of Mr. S. J. KIMBALL, the chief of the Life-Saving Service, to the Secretary of the Treasury, which has just been made public, presents a creditable record of the results of efficient organization and of capable, vigilant, and intelligent management. To this service is intrusted the humane and perilous task of guarding the exposed portions of our coast, and of rendering assistance to stranded and shipwrecked vessels. The great extent of the coast of the United States, and the dangerous character of many portions of it, lead to frequent disasters to vessels, and render this service of peculiar importance and difficulty. It is plain from the nature of the case that the most thorough organization and watchful oversight are necessary to secure and preserve the efficiency of a service of this description, and that it now possesses these is evident from a perusal of his report. The chief of the service gives a concise and graphic history of its origin and growth, and especially of the measures which have resulted in raising it to its present creditable state of efficiency, and concludes with some practical recommendations which we hope will receive the favorable consideration of Congress. How efficient the service has become may be judged from the fact that, out of 3,230 lives imperiled by shipwreck upon the range of coast coming within the protection of this service, since 1871, when the establishment came under its present control, but 41 were lost. On the New-Jersey and Long Island coasts alone 512 persons are known to have perished in the twenty years preceding 1871—an average of over 25 a year, and many more, of whose loss no report or record was made, are believed to have met the same fate. Since 1871 the number of lives lost on the same coasts has been but 16. And these latter figures leave nothing for conjecture, but embrace all of the lives lost by shipwreck on those coasts during the last five years. We do not wonder that the writer of the report gives way to an honest enthusiasm in calling attention to this splendid record. Certainly no duty could be imagined which would be more congenial to a generous nature than the rescue of his fellows from the perils of shipwreck.

The report gives an amusing, but humiliating, picture of the condition of the service prior to 1871. The first step taken by Congress toward aiding stranded vessels was the appropriation of $10,000, in 1848, for the purchase of surf-boats and other apparatus, which was followed by similar appropriations in subsequent years. The expenditure of these appropriations was doubtless productive of much good, but the failure to provide proper custodians for the boats and apparatus led to rather strange results. The boats, in many cases, were either allowed to go to ruin, or were utilized for purposes hardly consistent with the humane intentions of Congress. In one case the life-boat came to be "regarded by the citizens of the town as a sort of public peregrinating make-shift, being carted about from place to place as wanted, and made to do duty alternately as a trough for mixing mortar and a tub for scalding hogs!" A few years subsequently Congress made provision for the employment of superintendents and station-keepers, but, through lack of proper organization and control, the service failed to become thoroughly efficient. It would scarcely be supposed that the petty positions of these station-keepers, whose salaries are only $200 per annum, would have become political spoils. The sacred character of their duties ought to have protected them from the hand of the politician. But there are no bounds to party rapacity, and we are not surprised to read that prior to the reorganization of the service in 1871, "few of the keepers were really competent for their positions. Politics had had more influence in their appointment than qualification for the duties required of them. Even in the selection of crews for stations where they were employed, fitness was a secondary considera-tion." It is to the lasting credit of Mr. BOUTWELL—who, whatever his deficiencies as a statesman or financier, was one of the most capable and courageous administrators ever at the head of the Treasury—that he fully supported the efforts made by Mr. KIMBALL for the rescue of the service from the slough of inefficiency into which it had fallen. It will, doubtless, astonish those who have derided examinations as a test for fitness for the civil service to learn that the improvement which has taken place in the character of the station-keepers and crews has been brought about by the application of a rigid system of examination. By this we do not mean a mere testing of book knowledge, but the application of practical tests, which measured, as all examinations should, the fitness of the candidates for the duties required of them. But it would be unfair to ascribe the entire improvement of the service to the introduction of examinations. Its splendid record for the last few years is, in the language of the report, "the legitimate fruit of organization," and, we may add, of the singleness of purpose, ability, and enthusiasm which have animated its chief and kindled a like spirit in his assistants.

Two recommendations of the report are worthy of special attention—that the compensation of the station-keepers be increased to something better than the miserable pittance of $200 now paid them for their hazardous services, and that the life-saving service be erected into a separate and responsible branch of the public service. It is now only a division of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the work of its head is only that of an upper clerk, whose salary, we believe, is but $2,500 a year. We can only say that the Government is much better served than its parsimony deserves.

HARRIS.

If there was one man more than another whom ANDREW JOHNSON held in detestation it was ISHAM G. HARRIS, rebel Governor of Tennessee. The honest but choleric Tennesseean might be in one of his sunniest of moods, but the name of HARRIS was sufficient to goad him into fury. While he was President of the United States, a casual visitor at the White House happened to refer jocosely to some of HARRIS' undignified escapades. Instantly the President's face darkened, his eyes snapped, and he cried out "HARRIS!" almost with a bellow of rage; and then delivered himself of a few expressions of his scorn and contempt for the fugitive ex-Governor, each word being a concentration of bitterness and loathing. This was not the result of a personal quarrel. Much as JOHNSON was swayed by considerations of private pique or judgment, his grievance against HARRIS had its origin in higher motives. He knew HARRIS to be a conspirator, a traitor of the sneaking kind, and a plunderer of the State Treasury. While JOHNSON, BROWNLOW, and MAYNARD were upholding in Tennessee the cause of the Republic, this man HARRIS was plotting to carry the State into the rebel Confederacy. The people rejected, by a decided majority, a proposition to call a convention to consider the expediency of seceding from the Union. HARRIS and his fellow-conspirators secretly sent a committee to the rebel capital, at Montgomery, and the "league" which these men made with the rebel leaders, was ratified by HARRIS' Legislature in secret session. While this plot was in process of execution, the President's call for troops was issued. HARRIS impudently replied: "Tennessee will not furnish a single man for coercion, but fifty thousand, if necessary, for the defense of our rights and those of our Southern brethren."

Within a year after uttering this bombast, HARRIS fled ignominiously into Georgia carrying with him whatever booty he could lay his hands on. The capture of Fort Donelson, in February, 1862, destroyed the last rebel hope in Nashville. The people of that region were mightily afraid of gun-boats. The rivers were their lines of weakness, and every plan of defense was made with a view to repel the "Yankee gun-boats." HARRIS had a regiment of picked men for the purpose of skewering the invaders whenever they should land. The much-vaunted pikes were left in Nashville when HARRIS and his Government "lit out," as the Union forces drew near the city. But HARRIS took care to carry off with him the cash in the State Treasury, the school funds, and other valuables. Honest JOHN B. FLOYD, Secretary of War under BUCHANAN, and then in command of the rebel troops at Nashville, was a worthy coadjutor of HARRIS; and when the discomfited rebels ran away they "looted" the Bank of Tennessee, a State banking concern at Nashville. Then, cutting down the costly and beautiful suspension bridge across the Cumberland, HARRIS, FLOYD, the rebel Legislature, and the rest of the pack, fled into the fastnesses of the Confederacy, bearing their spoils with them. The destruction of the bridge was an act of wanton idiocy, and was a severe loss to the people of the region. Many of them, among them the family of the rebel General, ZOLLICOFFER, had their sole property in bridge stock. The Union troops were not impeded in their march by this piece of vandalism. And so HARRIS took flight, pursued by the scoffs and lampoons of the people whose trusts he had betrayed.

HARRIS was not merely a secessionist. He was a conspirator and a plunderer. If he were an honest believer in the doctrines then in vogue, and had adopted honorable means in support of them, he would not now be held up to execration. ANDREW JOHNSON'S abhorrence was for HARRIS as a man who had betrayed the people of Tennessee, and who, after disregarding the popular will concerning a proposed ordinance of secession, broke into the depositories of public funds and carried off their contents. The action of the Harris Government, on leaving Nashville, was not warfare, it was burglary. HARRIS had taken an oath to maintain and defend the laws and interests of the State. When personal danger approached, he seized the State funds and ran away. But perjury and robbery were part of the rebel system of finance. Terrorism was also part of their system of politics. Until the arrival of the Union troops delivered Nashville, the Harris Government maintained a reign of terror. To be suspected of Unionism was to be near death; and while HARRIS was dragooning the State into secession, the lives of such Union men as BAILIE PEYTON were constantly in danger. It is not surprising that JOHNSON, who, with all his faults, was honest and incorruptible, loathed HARRIS as "the head devil" of the wicked plot. And this is the man who has been chosen by the Democracy of Tennessee to the United States Senate. He is not only an unrepentant and irreconcilable rebel, but a plunderer, who should be outlawed from honest politics. He was put on the Tilden Electoral ticket last Summer, but the commotion caused by reopening his infamous record compelled him to resign. He is good enough to represent Tennessee Democrats in the Senate—a type of the Reform Democracy. And a Memphis Democratic paper, the Appeal, says enlogistically of him that he ought to be thus honored because "his life was consecrated to Tennessee in a great emergency."

THE PASSENGER-METER.

Thoughtless people sometimes imagine that the object of a street railway company is to transport passengers. In view of the scorn and contempt which the companies show toward the passengers whom they crowd into their noisome cars, it is strange that so absurd an opinion should ever have gained currency. The true end and aim of a street railway company is to prevent conductors from stealing, and the devices by which they have striven to compass this end have been numerous and ingenious.

For a time it was supposed that the bell-punch necessarily rendered a conductor honest. It ought, however, to have been obvious at the start that the bell-punch would be worthless except when supplemented by the presence of a "spotter." If the conductor chose to pocket a fare without ringing the bell-punch, no passenger, except a professional "spotter," dreamed of lodging a complaint against him. Just as soon, therefore, as the "spotters" became known the value of the bell-punch vanished. Had the companies, after hanging the bell-punch around the conductor's neck, taken the simple precaution to fasten a small, but acute and watchful, "spotter" to his left wrist by means of a handcuff, the device would have been successful, so long as the "spotter" remained incorruptible. This expedient, however, was never tried, and by degrees the conductors formed the habit of collecting the fares of a car-full of passengers, and then retiring to the rear platform and executing a fantasia on the bell-punch, so brief as to be little better than a hollow mockery. Thus, the bell-punch proved a failure, and the time is not far distant when its responsive music will no longer wake at the touch of the conductor's fingers, and it will hang mute and forgotten in the window of the pawnbroker.

On one of the East Side railroads the place of the discarded bell-punch has already been taken by a new and efficient machine, modeled upon the plan of the familiar domestic gas-meter. As every one knows, the gas-meter is a recording instrument which is designed to show how much gas ought, in the opinion of the gas company, to be consumed by any one household within a given time. That it never fails to accomplish this end is a matter of universal notoriety, although the precise manner in which it works is a profound secret, known only to the gas companies. Rash men frequently try to comprehend the action of the gas-meter, but the effort ends only in failure and despair. Our insane asylums are full of men whose intellects have been overthrown in this vain strife with the mysterious meter. The only fact in regard to it which the public fully comprehends is, that just in proportion as the quantity of gas burned is reduced, the figures shown by the meter increase. Thus, men have been reduced from affluence to poverty, merely by cutting off the gas from their houses and burning kerosene—an act which never fails to stimulate the gas-meter to tremendous feats of addition and multiplication, upon which subsequent gas-bills of enormous proportions are based. From the point of view of the companies, the meter is a perfect success, since in no instance has it ever failed to record a greater quantity of gas than has actually been consumed.

The passenger-meter which has just been placed on the Second avenue cars possesses in a high degree the distinguishing merits of the gas-meter. It consists of a turnstile placed at the door of the car, through which every passenger must pass on entering. The turnstile is connected with an iron box furnished with a dial-plate, resembling, to some extent, that of the gas-meter. Whenever any one enters the car the turnstile revolves, and a new figure is added to the sum displayed on the dial-plate. Were this all that the passenger-meter is capable of doing, its superiority to the gas-meter would not be apparent; but in point of fact the record of the entrance of passengers is only a part of its work. Whenever a passenger leaves the car, he increases by one the sum of the figures on the dial, and whenever the conductor passes from the platform to the interior of the car, or returns to his post of observation, the active meter charges him with another passenger. Thus in any possible event the meter will always charge the conductor with twice as many passengers as he has actually carried, and it may be safely asserted that the average gas-meter rarely surpasses this feat.

There is also evidence that in imitation of the gas-meter, the passenger-meter works with its greatest celerity when the car to which it is attached is not in use. The other day the dial on one of the Second avenue cars, at the hour of 9 o'clock A. M., asserted that 18,006 passengers had already entered the car. The shameless mendacity of this assertion was worthy of the boldest gas-meter, and the haggard face of the conductor showed that he perfectly understood that the passenger-meter was ruining him. Now there can be no doubt that in the silence of the previous night, while that car was locked up in the depot, the meter had been registering imaginary passengers with frightful rapidity. From 12 o'clock at midnight to 6 o'clock the next morning, it must have falsely charged the conductor with at least 17,500 passengers at five cents each. He knew that when his day's work was ended he would be called upon to account for these fares. It was no wonder that, with this terrible catastrophe impending over him, he became utterly reckless, and occasionally whirled the turnstile, charging himself with a dozen more imaginary passengers, and grimly smiling at the vastness of his ruin.

It is very certain that the companies which adopt the passenger-meter will lose no more money; but it is equally certain that there will be an alarming increase of insanity and suicide among the conductors. In fact, no man will be able to hold the position unless he is a millionaire, and even in that case an unusually active meter will sometimes bankrupt him. Its vast superiority to the bell-punch is so evident that there is little doubt that, in a very short time, it will supersede the latter on all the street-cars in the City, and gain as wide a notoriety as now belongs to the gas-meter.

BUSINESS IN ALBANY.

SKIRMISHING IN THE HOUSE—NEW BILLS INTRODUCED—THE CANALS AND THE PRISONS—THE APPROPRIATION FOR THE CENSUS—SHORT SESSION OF THE SENATE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Friday, Jan. 12, 1877.

The session of the Assembly to-day was distinguished by some lively skirmishing over a few trivial appointments and on the usual resolution to adjourn until Monday evening. Such matters are always fruitful of talk. Mr. Alvord was opposed to these weekly adjournments, as he always has been, and when the customary motion was made he delivered himself vigorously in opposition. Thereupon some new and young members eagerly embraced the opportunity to talk on a matter so favorable for airing their eloquence. The youthful Mr. Purdy delivered himself of a speech highly imaginative and ornate, in which he referred to Mr. Alvord as the "cloud-capped sage of Onondaga," and got some other equally neat figures of speech. The old members heard these youthful aspirants through, in opposition to the resolution, and then adopted it.

Some new bills were introduced. The Beach Pneumatic Railroad Company comes up again for another extension of its charter. On this occasion it is for three years. There is nothing left of this corporation except the charter, which has, perhaps, a money value of say three or four thousand dollars. So long as it can be kept alive the corporation has an asset, and like Micawber, is waiting for something to turn up.

Mr. Baker, as Chairman of the Canal Committee, introduced the bill referred to yesterday, relating to the office of Superintendent of Public Works, and it was referred to his committee. The salary has been cut down to $6,500, and the sureties are fixed at $25,000. It seems that there are some too economical gentlemen who insist that the salary of this important office should be fixed at $5,000. As the person who fills it has entire and almost absolute control of the whole canal system of the State, the probability of finding any man competent for the position willing to take it for anything less than at least $10,000 a year is very remote. It may be said positively that the Senate will not confirm any weak nomination. A thoroughly competent man will have to be found, and he must be paid a reasonable salary.

The companion bill to the above—that relating to the office of Superintendent of State Prisons—will be introduced in the Senate by Mr. Wellman on Monday. The salary of this office is fixed in the bill as now drawn at $10,000. Mr. Pilsbury will of course be nominated for the office. In all the qualities requisite for this office, in experience, ability, and intimate acquaintance with the government of penal institutions, he stands head and shoulders above any other man in the State.

Mr. Lang introduced a bill to protect farmers and others against the swindling schemes of the men who sell bogus patent rights. It is a copy of a Pennsylvania statute, and provides that where a promissory note is given in payment for a patent right, the words "given for a patent right" shall be written across the face of the note; and such note, in the hands of any purchaser or holder, shall be subject to the same defenses as in the hands of the original owner or holder.

The bill making an appropriation of $30,000 for the completion of the tabulation, &c., of the last State census was favorably reported from the Ways and Means Committee, and Mr. Husted rose to ask that it have its third reading without delay, when Mr. Alvord got in before him and interposed a vigorous objection. He declares he will fight the bill to the last. Shortly after, Mr. Fish offered a resolution, which was adopted, calling upon the Secretary of State for a statement of all the moneys thus far expended in the tabulation and printing of the census, and a comparison with the expenditures made for the same purpose in 1865. This will give Mr. Bigelow an opportunity to show whether the clerks who should have been engaged on the census returns were really employed, as alleged, in getting out campaign documents. Mr. Bigelow intimates his intent to "speak his mind" in his reply to the resolution.

Mr. Mitchell introduced his Gas Companies bill, referred to yesterday. About 70 or 80 bills have thus far been introduced. Nearly all are of a local character.

The Senate held a 10 minutes' session, and adjourned to Monday evening at 8 o'clock. Senator Gerard introduced a bill amending an act of last year relating to religious societies, and providing that, when a church that has been endowed becomes extinct, the endowment fund shall go to those surviving members, or their heirs, who hold to the religious faith of the church at the time of its organization. The bill is intended to prevent the misappropriation of endowment money in the interest of what the donor would call heresy—a thing that has frequently happened through changes in the organization and religious sentiments of churches.

THE ASHTABULA BRIDGE.

TESTIMONY OF ENGINEERS AS TO THE DEFECTIVE CONSTRUCTION OF THE BRIDGE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ASHTABULA, Jan. 12.—The testimony before the Coroner's jury to-day is very important, as showing further than has thus far been done the fatal deficiency in the bridge. Two prominent engineers have been upon the stand, and agree in the opinion that the bridge was not built after a good pattern; that it was too heavy in some parts and not heavy enough in others. The testimony which was taken to-day in regard to the Howe truss pattern not being suitable for an iron bridge, exactly confirms the opinion of one of the most prominent bridge-builders of the West, who informed your correspondent that, while the Howe truss was perhaps the best pattern for a wooden bridge, it was not safe for an iron one.

THE GEORGIA GOVERNOR.

INAUGURATION OF COLQUITT—THE REPRESENTATIVE OF TERRORISM AND THE SHAM REFORMER SYMPATHIZE.

ATLANTA, Jan. 12.—Gov. Alfred H. Colquitt was inaugurated before an immense audience at 12 o'clock to-day. A large part of his address was devoted to urging economy in the State administration, so as to relieve the burdens of the people. The portion on Federal matters was enthusiastically applauded, and is as follows:

"In the grand popular majority of the recent Gubernatorial election is to be read the overwhelming interest that Georgians feel in the great issues now convulsing the country, and their determined purpose to keep in alignment with the patriotic millions of our Northern friends who are seeking by the peaceful instrumentality of lawful suffrage to re-establish good government under the undisputed supremacy of the Federal Constitution. I but speak my own deep-felt sentiment, and echo the public voice of Georgia, when I say that in all the complications of national politics now so replete with fevered interest, we stand in immovable sympathy with the elected exponent of constitutional liberty, retrenchment, and reform. We will adhere to him and his colaborers with the fidelity due to the champion of a righteous cause in every patriotic endeavor they may make to secure the honest and unmistakable will of a large majority of the American people, constitutionally expressed at the polls."

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 12.—Horace P. Smith, the Eastern Railroad messenger, accused of stealing $6,000 from the company, was arrested last night at his house in Pittsfield, and sent back to Boston by this morning's train.

WINTER LIFE IN PARIS.

THE BOULEVARD AT CHRISTMAS TIME.

ITALIAN CHESTNUT-ROASTERS—HOW NAPOLEON III. ENCOURAGED INDUSTRY—WONDERFUL DOLLS FOR THE CHILDREN—THE LATEST SCANDAL.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Monday, Dec. 25, 1876.

The reappearance of the wooden booths or baraques along the boulevards indicates the approach of another New Year's Day, though one would hardly fancy it from the temperature or the sort of weather that we are now having. Thus far there has been no snow, very little rain, and no really cold weather. December has been like November with its fogs and dismal skies, and the year has very nearly reached its end without bringing us the usual signs of Winter. But there are two signs not mentioned in the almanacs which are noted by the Parisians: one is the appearance of marrons or Italian chestnuts, and the other the raising of the baraques along the boulevards. In previous years I have given an idea of the chestnut-roasting business in Paris, stating the quantity of marrons consumed, and the number of persons to whom the business furnishes employment. Nearly all the marron-roasters come from Nice and Savoy, and they make their appearance here after the first frosts, or about the 15th of October, setting up their iron ovens at the different street corners. For the privilege they pay the city from 12 to 50 francs per season, but some of the better places are in shop doors, the owners charging a small rent besides that demanded by the city. From early morning until after midnight, the industrious Savoyards are seen at their post, and on cold nights numbers of the homeless, or of vagabonds, stop to warm their fingers by the fire that is kept constantly alight. Ladies frequently buy a package of chestnuts to put in their muffs, the heat remaining in them for a long time.

The baraques were devised by Napoleon III., for the purpose of encouraging habits of industry among the laboring classes. Under the Monarchy there were annual fairs at certain localities, generally in the out-streets of the city, where they were little frequented by the people having money to purchase, but the Emperor allowed the ouvriers to string their booths along the whole length of the new boulevards, which were turned into a grand bazaar during the holidays. The shopkeepers made a great outcry, but to no effect, and every working man who could manufacture any article at home during his leisure hours had the privilege of selling it in his booth from Christmas to New Year's Day. The booths themselves were made by the city and rented, generally for one franc a day, though those about the Grand Hotel brought as high as five, and when two or three men went in together to take a booth to be kept by the wives and children, the cost per diem was only a few sous. When the Republic came the ouvriers no longer had any one to protect their interests, and this whole matter fell into the bourgeois class. The baraques owned by the city were sold at auction, and bought by the shopkeepers, of course, and the privileges were put up at auction. The good localities, therefore, are all beyond the reach of the ouvriers, and are taken by the shopkeepers, and in order to find anything really made by artisans in their chambers, by over-work at home while their idle companions are playing dominoes in the cabarets, one has to go to the Boulevard Bonne Nouvelle, or, perchance, to the Porte Saint Denis. In the booths along the main boulevards, one finds the refuse of the shops, sold at a price a little above the usual rates. It is a great pity that the Republic did not carry out the original idea in this matter, for the motive was good, and the results excellent. It was the Emperor's delight to accord baraques to ouvriers with large families, who were reported as industrious, honest men, and he took good care to see that their stock was disposed of before the order came to close this yearly fair.

Last year the weather was horribly bad, and the sales were comparatively small. The baraques were put up in the midst of a furious snow-storm, and for four or five days they were deserted on account of the wind, snow, and rain which beat about them incessantly. This year, however, the weather is exceptionally fine, and the consequence is a larger crowd of persons upon the boulevards than I have seen for at least 12 months. Yesterday the spectacle was really astounding, and up to a late hour at night the main thoroughfares of the city were nearly impassable. I took a turn about the boulevards, but saw only a few things that were new, but only a limited number of booths, generally those devoted to gingerbread and oranges, were ready for opening. One of the new toys was a baby doll which cried on being pressed, and having attached to it a rubber bottle, from which real milk oozed when it was placed in the doll's open mouth. To-day many a little girl is going about the streets nursing her doll with a bottle, while her little brother struts by her side girt with a sword, or carrying a miniature chassepot slung across his shoulders. Last night there was midnight mass in all the churches; réveillon was served in families and in all the restaurants; Christmas trees were abundant in many quarters, and to-day the carnival masquerade begins. For a week we shall have innumerable mask and fancy-dress balls, but the grand balls at the Opera do not begin until Jan. 13. For the first, M. Halanzier has engaged Johann Strauss to lead the orchestra, or, at least, when his own music is played, for the bâton will be alternately held by him and by O. Métra, the regular leader of the band.

During the past few weeks we have had a number of shocking scandals, involving the reputations of prominent men, some of which could only be recounted in Latin, and none of which could be published in any journal using the English language. The press seems to take delight in retailing these shocking affairs, and each party has had its chance. One day it is the Monarchical press which starts in full cry after the Radical Deputy, Rouvier, accused of outraging public morals; the next it is the Radical press which shows up the Comte de Germiny, a Legitimist, a man of large fortune, and a pillar of the Ultramontane Party, caught in flagrante delicto, it is said, by the Police charged to watch over the public morals. M. de Germiny is the son of the late M. De Germiny, Governor of the Bank of France, who died leaving a very large fortune. The family had the impudence to go about offering thousands of francs to the journalists to say nothing about the affair, and as the fact was known, every paper had to speak of it or remain under the suspicion of having been bribed. Count de Germiny was brought before the Tribunal on Saturday, and during the trial it was suggested that the police des mœurs, had shown too much zeal; that they had imagined the most of the affair; and that it was physically impossible for them to see what they pretended to have seen from the positions designated by them. For this reason judgment was deferred for one week for the purpose of making a thorough examination of the locality. But a more disgraceful scandal was that unjustly and maliciously created about the Marquis de Castillane, one of the youngest of the Deputies, who was accused by popular rumor of having cheated at cards in one of the clubs. Naturally, inquiries were set on foot, and meanwhile, last week, M. De Castillane went into the country to pass the holidays. A friend telegraphed him about the rumors, and he came back to Paris, post haste, with his uncle, and went at once to all the journals which gave the rumors without giving the name. At the club where the affair is said to have happened, the officers declared that the Marquis had not been in for a month, and had never done anything wrong in any way. The report was traced to a Prussian correspondent, who, when called to account, said that he had it from a prominent Republican Deputy. The Marquis immediate ly sent him a challenge, but he denied the paternity of the report, and M. De Castillane is still seeking for some one responsible for this outrageous story. A year ago the Marquis lost a very considerable sum at the Jockey Club, after having dropped some forty thousand dollars in his other clubs. As he could not pay within 24 hours, he called upon his mother, and she declined to pay the sum unless he would give up his resignation. Mme. De Castillane wrote the resignation herself upon the same sheet with her check, and the Marquis was forced to sign it in order to meet his obligations. This was only creditable to him, and it is hard to see how any blame could be attached to him. Since then nothing has occurred, and it is probable that he has been traduced by some of his political enemies. Unfortunately, in French politics, it is too frequently the habit to go upon the principle of Beaumarchais: "Calomnies! Calomnies! il enrestera toujours quelque chose."

SUFFERING AT SEA

A SCHOONER DISABLED AND ONE OF THE CREW DROWNED—THE CAPTAIN REMAINS WITH HIS VESSEL.

The steamer California, of the Anchor Line, from Glasgow, arrived at this port yesterday, having among her passengers the wife and child of Capt. Woodman, of the schooner Island Belle, which was found lying in distress about 170 miles southeast of St. John's, Newfoundland, in latitude 45° 40' north, longitude 50° west. The Island Belle left St. John's on Dec. 3 last, bound for Boston, with a cargo of salmon. After the vessel had been out about nine days the mate suddenly died, and was buried at sea. Six days afterward, while the schooner lay some nine miles off Halifax, she encountered a terrific gale, during which the sails were blown to shreds, the boats were smashed in pieces, and the vessel was left utterly at the mercy of the tempest. While she was in this helpless condition several days passed without any ship coming in sight. The greater part of the provisions which had been stored in the forward deck house had been swept overboard in the gale, and the crew were obliged to live entirely on soup made from salt beef. Their suffering was increased a few days later by the exhaustion of the supply of coal and water. The cargo was composed of salmon, and was, of course, of no use for food, as it would have increased the thirst from which everybody on board the unfortunate vessel was suffering. For over two weeks the vessel was tossed about by the waves, when at last, on the thirty-fourth day out, a sail was sighted bearing down upon the disabled schooner. In the midst of the general joy at the prospect of speedy assistance, it was discovered that a white sailor, who, with two colored sailors, had formed the crew, was missing. Every part of the vessel was carefully searched, but all efforts to find him proved unsuccessful, and his comrades were forced to the conclusion that he had drowned himself, being unable to longer endure his sufferings. A signal of distress had meanwhile been hoisted and was recognized by the distant ship, which, when within hailing distance, proved to be the California. The boats of the latter were immediately lowered, and as soon as the condition of the schooner was ascertained, word was sent to the California, and provisions, coal and water were transferred to the schooner. The hull of the vessel was found to be in a sound condition, although her rigging had been almost entirely destroyed by the storm. The Captain's wife and child, both of whom had become ill from exposure and lack of proper nourishment, were taken on board the steamer. The Captain and crew, with a passenger who had taken the mate's position, determined to remain on the schooner and attempt to make their way back to St. John's. As the wind blew favorably and the Captain persisted in his determination to undertake the task of getting back to that port, the steamer finally left the vessel and continued on her way to this port. Immediately after the arrival of the steamer, Mrs. Woodman disembarked with her child and proceeded to the Stevens House, No. 17 Broadway, whence she left last evening for Boston by the 9 o'clock train.

The Island Belle was a second class schooner, registering 196 tons, and was built in 1867 at Camden, Me. She measured 100 feet in length, 28 feet breadth of beam, and 8 feet depth of hold. She was consigned to White & Case, of Rockland, Me.

DEATH OF M. FRANCOIS BULVOZ.

This distinguished French writer, according to a dispatch from Paris, is dead. He was born near Geneva, Switzerland, in 1803, and finished his studies in Paris. His first connection with literature was in the capacity of overseer of a printing office, and soon afterward he attained some note as a translator of English works. In 1831 he founded the Revue des Deux-Mondes, a periodical that was destined to earn a world-wide reputation. M. Buloz gathered among the contributors of the Revue the most brilliant writers of the day. In 1867, M. Buloz added to the Revue the Annuaire des Deux-Mondes, which became a most complete summary of the history of the world for each year. M. Buloz succeeded Mr. Taylor in the capacity of Royal Commissioner in connection with the Comédie-Française in 1832, but after the Revolution of 1848 he was removed from the position. The works that bear the name of M. Buloz, distinctly, are limited collections of letters and memoirs. He was appointed a Commander of the Order of Christ of Portugal. He was aided in the editorial work of the Revue, for some years, by his son Louis Buloz, but the promising career of this young man was prematurely ended by death in 1869.

SUING A POLICE JUSTICE.

John Jackson, a colored man, assaulted Charles Sommers, a white man, with a razor and inflicted severe wounds on the latter. For this Jackson was committed by Police Justice Duffy on a charge of assault with intent to kill. After being confined in the Tombs for five months Jackson was put on trial at the General Sessions and was acquitted on the ground that he had merely used the razor in self-defense. Jackson then began an action for false imprisonment against Justice Duffy, claiming $5,000 damages. The case was brought before Judge Joseph F. Daly, in Chambers of the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday, on a motion by Col. George F. Hart, the defendant's counsel, to compel the plaintiff's attorney to receive a pleading which he had refused to receive, claiming it had been sent in bad faith. Judge Daly granted the motion with costs.

SEIZURE OF CIGARS.

Inspectors Hagan and McCord yesterday seized several boxes, containing altogether 672 cigars, on board the Havana steam-ship City of New-York. Smugglers are said to have been driving a very good business on the vessels of the Cuban lines, but the Custom-house authorities have recently made numerous seizures, and are keeping a close watch upon all suspicious persons.

THE PENNSYLVANIA COAL TRADE.

The following statistics of the trade are supplied by the Pottsville (Penn.) Miner's Journal:

The quantity sent for the year beginning Dec. 1, was 338,000 tons, against 289,532 for the corresponding period of last year—increase, 55,468 tons. The quantity sent from all the regions for the week was, anthracite, 138,008 tons; bituminous, 22,633 tons—total, 160,641 tons, against 156,555 tons anthracite and 28,806 tons bituminous—total 185,161 tons for the same week of last year; decrease of anthracite, 18,547 tons; decrease of bituminous, 6,173 tons, total decrease 24,720 tons. REBEL FELICITATIONS.

A MEMPHIS DEMOCRATIC PAPER ON THE ELECTION OF ISHAM G. HARRIS TO THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

From the Memphis (Tenn.) Appeal, Jan. 10.

In the election of Gov. Harris to the Senate, we have an illustration of the truth of Henry Clay's favorite expression, that "Truth is omnipotent and public justice certain." Gov. Harris was guilty of the great crime of having been true to the Southern people; of having obeyed their behests as expressed at the ballot-box and his own inclination by acting a conspicuous part in the rebellion. For this he was pronounced a doomed man. The apostates, craven enough to appease Radical hate by sacrificing the leaders of the rebellion, commenced a war upon him. These perfidious creatures selected him as a scapegoat, piled upon him all their sins committed as rebels, and turned him into the political wilderness. They told him that he had "failed," lost everything, and must be sacrificed to appease Radical vengeance, and to give treacherous Conservatism a show. So long as they thought him politically dead they beshmed his name as the poodle does the maimed lion. But Gov. Harris had learned the great lesson of knowing how to wait. Conscious of the purity of his life and the integrity of his purposes, he treated with lofty disdain the calumnies inspired by Radical hate and the enmity of rebel renegades. He had the philosophy to bide his time, and his vindication came yesterday in his triumphant election to the Senate. "The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner." Gov. Harris is now stronger with the people of Tennessee than at any former period of his long, eventful, and peculiar career. They paid him yesterday a fitting tribute to the faith he has so sternly kept with the South, with himself, and his own fame. With a courage which no wrong could destroy, with a spirit which no opposition could break, and with a sublime faith in the triumph of truth and justice which nothing could appall, Gov. Harris has pursued the even tenor of his way amid the slanders of the Radical vermin and the hate of rebel apostates, relying upon the verdict of the people. His confidence was not misplaced.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

A fire broke out yesterday morning in the grocery store of Isaac Davis, in Brockport, N. Y., caused by the explosion of a kerosene lamp, destroying the building, together with the adjoining house and the flour store of Richards & Son. The fire then caught in Harmon's marble shop across the street, and extended to Cowan & Van Zandt's cigar store and the old Methodist Church, all of which were totally consumed. The express office, Post Office, Allen & Kingsbury's bank, and the Getty House were damaged. The loss is estimated at over $40,000.

The new saw and grist mill belonging to James Bratton, and the Union Church building at Easton, Ohio, were totally destroyed by fire Thursday night. Loss on the mill, $10,000; on the church, $1,500; no insurance. The fire is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary.

A fire on Water street, Omro, Wis., Thursday night, destroyed seven buildings, containing stocks of dry goods, boots and shoes, &c. Loss, $25,000; insurance, $14,000.

The tobacco barn of Mrs. Gilbert Filer, at Warehouse Point, Conn., was burned last night with its contents, consisting of leaf tobacco. The loss is estimated at $2,000.

An unoccupied double dwelling-house at Providence, R. I., owned by Mrs. Mary Crane, was destroyed by fire yesterday morning. The loss is $4,000; insured for $3,500.

THE INDIAN TROUBLES.

CHEYENNE, Jan. 12.—Gen. Crook, accompanied by Lieut. Schuyler, leaves here to-morrow for Red Cloud, where he will remain some time. He has unbounded faith in the successful working of the plans of enlistment of friendly Sioux and scouts. An instance of their valor is found in the fact that in the last campaign against the Cheyennes, wherein the Snakes and Pawnees had followed their circular trails for several days, the Sioux darted out in a direct line and struck the village at once, the surprise proving so complete that many Cheyennes fled without even a moccasin on foot with the thermometer several degrees below zero; many must have perished. Major Mason, commanding at Camp Johnson, accompanied by a number of Spotted Tail's scouts, has started with sufficient intimation to warrant the hope that Crazy Horse will come in.

SERIOUS RIOT IN A REFORM SCHOOL.

WORCESTER, Jan. 12.—A serious riot took place at the Westboro' State Reform School this evening. About 100 boys were engaged in the uprising, and the signal was given by shutting off the gas in the school rooms. The fight was a desperate one for a few minutes, every article of furniture in two of the rooms being completely demolished. The officers succeeded in keeping the rioters in the rooms until help was summoned and then subdued them by the free use of water from the hydrant. None of the officers or men were seriously hurt and none of the boys escaped.

FIVE OYSTER-BOATS SUNK.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 19.—Five oyster-schooners, while being towed out from Eastern Bay to-day by steam-tugs, were cut through by the ice and sunk. The crews were all rescued and taken to Annapolis. It is stated that from 60 to 70 oyster vessels are still ice-bound in Eastern Bay, and the crews are suffering for food and in great destitution. They will be relieved to-morrow.

RECEPTION GIVEN BY MR. AND MRS. BLAINE.

AUGUSTA, Jan. 12.—A very large and brilliant reception was given this evening by Mr. and Mrs. Blaine to the members of the Legislature and State Government and private citizens, including prominent men of both parties from all sections of the State. Between 600 and 700 persons were present.

ICE GORGE IN THE OHIO.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 12.—The ice in the river started again about midnight, but soon gorged again. The steamer Andes was sunk. No other boats were injured. The weather is colder, and if is thus confining no further movement of the ice is expected. The Andes was valued at $24,000. No insurance.

AN EX-PENSION AGENT IN TROUBLE.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 12.—In the United States Court yesterday, ex-Pension Agent H. C. Bennett was convicted of embezzlement. His counsel gave notice of a motion for a new trial.

THE BARATARIA CANAL.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 12.—Capt. John Cowden, of the Barataria Canal Company, is here, and has secured the services of Prof. Ferchat to make a preliminary survey for the canal.

IS ANOTHER BAR'L OPEN?

The Cleveland (Ohio) Herald says: "To the question, Who provided the $8,000 sent to Oregon for the purchase of an Electoral vote? must now be added another, Who paid the expenses of the 8th of January 'demonstrations of Democratic sentiment?' We understand the delegations which went to Columbus traveled on tickets furnished by the men who 'carried the bag' for the Democratic organization in each locality, instead of every man walking up to the ticket office and purchasing on his own account. It is said by those who claim to know the facts, that no subscription was taken up in advance to furnish the several paymasters with the money, and that no reimbursement was asked after the affair. Who furnished the funds?"

THE EMMA MINE CASE.

The Emma Mine case was up before Judge Wallace in the United States Circuit Court again yesterday, but nothing of interest was developed, the entire day being taken up in reading depositions taken some time since in London. The case was adjourned until Monday, 22d inst., in consequence of Judge Wallace having to hold court in Albany during the coming week.

THE BENNETT-MAY AFFAIR.

THE TRUTH AT LAST.

A PLAIN NARRATIVE—THE FACTS FINALLY DISCOVERED—BUT ONE SHOT FIRED, AND NOBODY INJURED—MR. BENNETT DECLARES HIMSELF "SATISFIED," AND THE DUEL STOPPED.

Many people have been wondering during the last four or five days why the gentlemen who recently made an armed incursion into the peaceful States of Maryland and Delaware should persist in maintaining such a guarded silence in reference to the affair. Those best informed, however, hold the opinion that, sooner or later, some one of those on the ground would tell the whole truth in regard to the matter. The justice of such a belief has now been verified. The statement that no blood was shed need not, and probably will not, excite any surprise. The stories to the effect that the principals were men of undoubted courage, and were bound to have each other's blood; that each was a "dead shot," and that both of them meant "business," are apparently sheer fabrications. The so-called duel was a farce from the beginning, and it is idle for the friends of either party to attempt to put a different aspect upon it. Had either of the principals shot the other the fact would have been known in less than 24 hours after the occurrence, and no one would have been so quick to spread the news as the duelists themselves, who would have thus merited the belief, at all events, that they were really in earnest, and desired to hurt one another. But neither of them was touched by a bullet, and to create the impression that something serious was really intended, a profound and mysterious reticence has been kept up.

The facts in the case have finally been divulged, and are as follows: The Bennett party left New-York last Sunday evening on the 9:30 train going South. There were six in all, i. e., Bennett, Howland Robbins, his second; Dr. Charles Phelps, the surgeon; Carroll Livingstone, Lawrence Jerome, and a valet. Upon their arrival at Philadelphia Mr. Jerome and Mr. Livingstone left the train and went to the Continental Hotel, where they engaged four or five rooms. The remainder of the party went on to the place selected for the duel, arriving at Marydell about 2 o'clock. They were quickly joined by Mr. May's party, which had arrived by way of Dover. A walk of 20 minutes across the fields brought them to the State line between Maryland and Delaware, at a point on the farm of Mr. Nathaniel McGinnis. Here the ground was measured off, and, that neither might be hit by a wad, twenty paces—and long ones too—were measured off. The usual preliminaries were then gone through with, and the pistols were discharged almost simultaneously. As before stated neither man received a scratch. Mr. Bennett then said that he was "satisfied," and proposed that they leave the field. Being the challenging party, he had a right to make such a proposition, and Mr. May had no alternative but to accept. There was no shaking hands and no reconciliation. It is perhaps unnecessary to state that the ground was precipitately abandoned. But one exchange of shots, and not three, was had, and from the moment the party reached the field until they left, the time did not exceed 10 minutes. These facts are given upon the most undoubted authority.

On the way home Mr. Bennett seemed greatly annoyed lest the members of his party should think he had acted unwisely, and he was repeatedly heard asking if he had done right, or if his friends blamed him. The trip from Clayton to Wilmington on the special train was a joyous one. A casual observer would never have supposed for a moment that the gentlemen had really been engaged in the serious business of shooting at each other, unless indeed, it was with blank cartridges. The stories in circulation for the last two days, that Mr. May had been wounded, and that Mr. Bennett had married Mr. May's sister and sailed, via Boston, for Europe, or by way of Philadelphia for the same destination, are pure inventions, and have absolutely no foundation in fact.

At the various clubs in the City the duel still continues to be the topic of conversation, and there is no disguising it that at least one of the principals has lost caste very decidedly. The facts in regard to the duel as here given are already known to many gentlemen, especially among the members of the Union Club, and the comments indulged in are by no means flattering to the duelists.

It was rumored yesterday that Mr. Bennett paid a visit to the Herald building on Wednesday. The report came from a good authority, but its truth was denied in the Herald office. Although no real proof of the matter can be procured, it is certain that Mr. Bennett is either now at the house of a friend in this City, or snugly stowed away in his own residence. The statement made in a morning journal yesterday that he married Miss May in Philadelphia on Tuesday, and immediately sailed with his bride on the steam-ship Illinois for Europe, is emphatically denied by his friends. One of the most intimate of these declared last night that Miss May has been lying sick for several weeks, and has not yet learned of the difficulty between her brother and Mr. Bennett. The same gentleman also said that Mr. Bennett certainly would not go to Europe at this time, but would wait and see the trouble all out. A friend of the proprietor of the Herald told a TIMES reporter last night that Mr. Bennett left his home at 10 o'clock on Wednesday morning, as soon as he heard that Dr. Phelps had been called before the Grand Jury. The informant thought Mr. Bennett had not gone far, but would watch the attempt to indict him and Mr. May, and if it succeeded would start for California, where he has never been, and which place he has often spoken of visiting.

ANOTHER WITNESS BEFORE THE GRAND JURY.

The investigation by the Grand Jury into the Bennett-May encounter was continued yesterday with no more satisfactory result than had been arrived at on any of the previous days. It was expected that Dr. May, father of Mr. Frederick May, Mr. Lawrence Jerome, Albert Vogel, Mr. Bennett's valet, and others would be in attendance; but the only one of the witnesses subpœnaed who put in an appearance was Mr. John Chisholm, Superintendent of the Union Club, who was subjected to an examination of ten minutes duration. It appears that Mr. Chisholm knew nothing whatever of the alleged duel or the preparations for that event, and was, therefore, unable to give the Grand Jury an iota of information on the subject of their inquiry. No indictment, of course, has been found against any of the principals or participants in the so-called duel, nor is it likely that any will be for the present. No active measures will be taken to secure the attendance of those persons who are supposed to know anything of the affair until after the legal issue in the case of Dr. Phelps has been decided by the Supreme Court. Should Judge Donohue order the release of Dr. Phelps, and thereby nullify the action of Judge Gildersleeve, it will be useless for the District Attorney to summon others supposed to be in a position to give any information on the subject, as they of course, would follow the example of the Doctor, conscious of being sustained in that course by the Supreme Court. If, on the other hand, the action of Judge Gildersleeve should be affirmed, and the recusant witness confined for contempt, it would probably have the effect of eliciting sufficient testimony to warrant the finding of indictments against the principals.

WAS DR. PHELPS ABSENT WITHOUT LEAVE.

The following resolution was adopted at the meeting of the Police Board yesterday:

Resolved, That the Superintendent be directed to inquire and report whether Surgeon Charles Phelps has been absent without leave, or neglected to attend members of the force on the sick list as required by the rules of the department, since Jan. 1, 1877.

Capt. Eakins, anticipating this action on the part of the board, reported yesterday that he had, upon investigation, been unable to discover any neglect of duty on the part of Surgeon Phelps. Dr. Henry, Chief Surgeon of the department, reported that Dr. Phelps made no application to him for a leave of absence. The penalty for neglect of duty or absence without leave is dismissal from the department.

MR. BENNETT'S REPORTED FLIGHT.

THE STORY OF HIS HAVING SAILED FROM PHILADELPHIA NOT CONFIRMED—WHAT THE AGENT OF THE LINE SAYS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 12.—The statement that Mr. James Gordon Bennett has sailed with Miss May, for Europe, from this City, in the American Line steam-ship Illinois, lacks confirmation. The parties who arrived at the dock just previous to the steamer's leaving are represented to be Mr. and Mrs. Saunders, Mr. Benner, the passenger agent of the line, stated to your correspondent to-day that he is acquainted with Mr. Bennett, and that he was aboard the Illinois when she sailed, but did not see the gentleman. Capt. Morse, Captain of the line, who knows Bennett well, assured me that Mr. Bennett was not on the Illinois. The cabins Nos. 3 and 5 assigned them are nearly amidship and rather inferior quarters, and for this trip are used by officers of the steamer, as they usually are during the Winter. Capt. Shackford, the commander of the Illinois, is acquainted with Mr. Bennett, and Capt. Morse does not think that officer would make himself liable to arrest for aiding the escape of a fugitive from justice by carrying Bennett away from this country. While admitting that it would be characteristic of Bennett to attempt the trip, they do not think he is on the vessel.

Reliable information received from Dover, from parties who saw Mr. May after the duel, and which statement is confirmed by ex-Senator Saulsbury, says Mr. May did not appear in the least injured, but stopped over night at the hotel, and seemed as well as the two gentlemen who were with him.

NOTICE TO DUELISTS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

While the horrible details of the sanguinary conflict at Slaughter Gap are fresh in the minds of your readers, permit me to call the attention of intending duelists to the manifold advantages of "Patent Parisian Powder" and the "Pulverized Bullet" over ordinary ammunition.

"Patent Parisian," otherwise known as "Safety Dueling," has been used in countless "affairs of honor" in Europe and elsewhere, and so far it has given entire satisfaction. The sharpest eye will fail to distinguish between "Patent Parisian" and genuine gunpowder. P. P. makes quite as much noise, and twice as much smoke, but its strength is proportioned to the length of the barrel in which it is used. Accompanying each package of this convenient compound is a scale showing how much is to be used per inch, and accurate instructions for loading. Real leaden bullets can be safely used with P. P., as its explosive force gives the leaden messenger an initial velocity which only amounts to a gentle start. The propelling force being entirely exhausted by the time the bullet oozes from the muzzle, the deadly missile drops peacefully at the feet of the man who fired it. Dose to be repeated, as prescribed by the code, until honor is satisfied.

With the "Pulverized Bullet" full charges of real powder can be used. The bullet is made of charcoal dust, mixed with a thin solution of gum arabic. The outside is coated with black-lead in such a manner that it exactly resembles the genuine article. The force of the powder, of course, reduces this improved projectile to harmless dust before it leaves the muzzle of the murderous weapon. Absolute safety is guaranteed to combatants, seconds, surgeons, and outside spectators.

With "Patent Parisian Powder" and the "Pulverized Bullet" the awful carnage which recently reddened the snows of Slaughter Gap with the best blood of New-York and Baltimore might have been averted.

CATERPILLARS IN HAWAII.

The Honolulu Gazette of Dec. 13, says: "We are informed that in Waialua and Waianae the late rains have brought out innumerable hordes of peelua, which have eaten the young grass off so short that the pasturage is in a worse condition than during the drought. Before the large increase of the nyanah, the district in which Honolulu is situated was every year subjected to the same plague, whereas now, not a caterpillar is ever seen in this region. We believe this bird will effectually destroy the peelua and many other forms of insect life whenever it becomes numerous, and will on that account prove a valuable aid to agriculture here."

PERSISTENT and conscientious effort, animated by an honest purpose, rarely fails of success. An illustration may be found in B. T. BABBITT, the prince of soap manufacturers. He has recently invented a "toilet soap of special adaptability to children, who have soft, tender skins. This soap is the purest and best of all in use, for none but the finest vegetable oils are used; and these give a natural fragrance to the article more delicate than artificial scents.—Advertisement.

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

A HALF ACRE OF BROKEN GLASS.

THE GLASS PLATES OF THE ROOF OF THE GRAND CENTRAL DEPOT SHATTERED BY A SNOW-SLIDE—A GREAT NOISE AND NOBODY HURT.

Shortly before 12 o'clock yesterday forenoon the snow and ice that had accumulated on the long strip of corrugated iron roofing forming the upper part of the roof of the east side of the Grand Central Depot, having become loosened by the warmth of the sun, slid off, and fell with a tremendous crash upon the plates of glass forming the next section below. The fall was about six feet, and the plates, although half an inch thick, were shattered for about two-thirds of the length of the building. Showers of broken glass and snow fell into the interior of the edifice, but fortunately without injuring any one, as that portion of the depot was almost deserted at the time. The horses of two of the Fourth avenue cars, which were awaiting the arrival of the 12 o'clock train, however, were severely cut by the falling fragments, and the roof of one of the cars was slightly damaged. The drivers, who were in the cars at the time, were not injured. Had the slide occurred a few minutes later a large number of persons would undoubtedly have been hurt, as the New-Haven and Hartford train was due at 12 o'clock, and would have been run directly under that portion of the roof which was broken by the falling snow. When it did arrive it was run into the depot on one of the centre tracks, and no delay was experienced by the passengers, most of whom left the building without knowing that anything unusual had occurred. The noise made by the slide was tremendous and lasted for several seconds, causing considerable excitement and no little trepidation among the passengers in the different waiting-rooms, some of whom imagined that the whole building was falling to pieces. The officers and clerks of the several roads, who were in the upper part of the building facing Vanderbilt avenue, were also considerably exercised, and many of them rushed into the long corridor running along the inner side of the structure, from the windows of which a full view of the interior of the depot could be obtained. It was positively asserted by a number of persons that they felt the whole building shake and quiver during the fall of the snow, but the writer of this article who happened to be in the edifice at the time, and who was engaged in writing a letter, could not perceive any movement whatever. When he first heard the noise he fancied it was caused by the escape of steam at very high pressure, and consequently paid no attention to it, and did not cease writing. Had the building been shaken he must certainly have noticed it. Immediately after the occurrence a force of men was put to work to clear away the broken glass and snow, and in less than an hour the tracks were cleared. Fearing, however, that some of the cracked plates might fall, no trains were allowed to be run on the tracks under the broken part of the roof, and measures were at once taken to have the unsafe plates removed. The roof will be repaired without delay, and the proper precautions will be taken to prevent the recurrence of a similar accident. The glass plates of which the broken section of the roof was formed were 10 feet long by two feet wide, and half an inch in thickness. Two hundred and thirty-two of these plates were broken. Plates of this size are worth 35 cents per square foot, or $7 apiece. It is estimated that it will cost nearly $2,000 to repair the damage done yesterday.

UNLOADING THE AMERIQUE.

THE WORK PROGRESSING SLOWLY—ONLY ONE-THIRD OF THE CARGO REMOVED—THE OPINION GENERAL THAT THE VESSEL WILL NEVER FLOAT AGAIN.

The work of unloading the French steamer Amérique is not carried on so rapidly by any means as it could be if she were at her pier in this City. A company of twenty-four stevedores, in charge of Mr. Frank West, are getting the cargo out as fast as possible, but care is taken not to expose any of it to sudden storms by leaving it unprotected near the shore. Lighters are assisting in the work, although goods are removed from the seaward side very slowly, in consequence of the roughness of the water and the attendant risk of breakage. At the beach yesterday morning, when the tide was out, persons who visited the steamer were able to walk out to her side, and approached close enough to the vessel to touch her side without wetting their feet. The novelty of a large vessel high and dry on shore still continues to attract great numbers of visitors, who come from places miles away by sleighs and wagons to see the Amérique. The general opinion among seafaring men is that she will never float again, and in some way or another the report has become current that she is in a feeling of indifference on the part of the owners, said to be caused by the unfortunate reputation of the steam-ship, as to whether the vessel is ever got off again or not. An attaché of the Transatlantic Company expressed the opinion, unofficially, that, if she could be got off, she would never be sent from this port again. The steamer Jesse Hoyt yesterday afternoon arrived from Sandy Hook with a very heavy cargo from the Amérique, composed principally of champagne and hides, which had been brought from Seabright in 13 cars. On the Southern Railroad pier may be seen the life-car in which Mr. and Mrs. Cornell Jewett were removed from the Amérique to the shore on Sunday morning. It is a metallic boat, with a rounded sheet-iron cover, and a close-fi ting hatch, and is furnished with two rings by which it can be suspended from a hawser. Its inclosed occupants must remain in a reclining position while being transferred, as its depth, from roof to keel, is not more than two and one-half feet. It was reported that but one-third of the Amérique's cargo had been removed yesterday morning, and that it would probably be a week before all of it could be placed in store in this City. The Jesse Hoyt does not make regular connections with the Southern Railroad, in consequence of the ice which obstructs the navigation of the Bay, passengers for points on the railroad being conveyed to Branchport by the Central Railroad and then transferred.

THE MAIL ROBBERIES.

INVESTIGATION BEFORE UNITED STATES COMMISSIONER SHIELDS—ONE OF THE PRISONERS TESTIFIES AGAINST HIS COMPANIONS.

The investigation into the recent mail robbery case was resumed before United States Commissioner Shields yesterday. The first witness called by United States District Attorney Foster was Mr. John Watson, of Philadelphia. He is in the insurance business, and testified that he recognized a package of insurance policies and premiums which was taken from the mail-pouch returned from Montreal last Wednesday, whither it had been sent by the thieves after its contents had been rifled, as one sent by himself from Philadelphia, addressed to Benjamin A. Stevens. His testimony was corroborated by one of his clerks, who had placed the package in the Post Office. Anthony Yeomau, General Superintendent of the Post Office Department, testified to having received and receipted for the pouch referred to on its return from Canada. It seemed that two pouches were stolen at one time, and both were sent to the Dominion, one addressed to J. A. Thorn, Montreal, and the other to a man in Toronto. The latter has not yet been returned. Mr. Smith Bohen, broker, of No. 226 North Fifth street, Philadelphia, identified a check for $165, which he had mailed in Philadelphia, Dec. 23, addressed to Col. J. H. Jones. Robert A. Pinkerton, a detective, testified to having searched the apartments of the woman Mary Jane Collins, at No. 111 Prince street, and found there several articles of wearing apparel belonging to the prisoners Crawford and Kelly. The defense endeavored to prove that Miss Collins' apartments were open to any one who chose to come in, and that Kelly and Crawford had left these articles there without her knowledge.

James Crawford, one of the defendants, was placed on the stand. He could not identify the mail-bag as one of those he had seen in Kelly's possession, but swore that on the 29th of December, he saw him take a similar one, doubtless the same, to the office of the American Express Company and ship it to Montreal.

The case was then adjourned until Monday next at 3 o'clock P. M.

STEAMERS OVERDUE.

No tidings have yet been received in this City of the iron steam-ship Colombo, of the Wilson Line between Hull and New-York. She is now overdue 28 days. Messrs. C. & L. Wright, agents of the line, are still hopeful that the vessel has not met with serious accident, and incline to the belief that some part of the machinery has become disabled, and that she is proceeding under sail. The partial derangement of machinery might shorten or exhaust the supply of coal, and thus greatly lengthen the time of her trip. That she has not been spoken is accounted for by the possibility that she has encountered adverse gales, which carried her out of the course of westward-bound vessels. The steam-ship Anglia, of the Inman Line, which was out 31 days, was heard from on Wednesday, when she put into Halifax out of coal and disabled by an accident to her cylinder. The Augnst Andre, consigned to Funch, Edye & Co., from Antwerp, Dec. 17, for this port, with a general cargo, now a week overdue, had not arrived yesterday, but her consignees were hopeful of her safety.

CO-OPERATIVE EMPLOYMENT BUREAU.

The Co-operative Employment Bureau of the Bowery Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, No. 134 Bowery, since beginning operations in May, 1872, have met and counseled 12,000 men on the subject of work, and provided 3,700 with situations. They now propose to revise their list of unemployed men, for the purpose of placing before employers a more complete list of employes. With this view, they extend to unemployed men the privilege of registering their names, with a view to employment, any day between 9 and 11 A. M. Reliable references required from every applicant. No charge made, except the expense of postage in writing for references. Men whose names are on the register can renew their certificates by application between the above hours. It is also proposed, for the convenience of employers, to publish a list of trades and callings represented by the applicants on their books. Correspondence from employers of labor is solicited from all parts of the country.

COUNTERFEIT COINS.

THE COMPOSITION OF THE LATEST SPURIOUS SILVER MONEY — SPECIMENS OF DEBASED GOLD PIECES AT THE SUB-TREASURY.

A great many complaints have been heard recently of the inconvenient and uncomfortable abundance of counterfeit silver coins in circulation. Dining-saloon keepers, car conductors, the corner grocery man, and even the usually careless bar-keeper, have all become suspicious, and will not even accept without scrutiny the fairest and most genuine-looking pieces of silver. To ring a coin does not appear to be a sufficient test to these careful worthies, for they have found out that deceit has been so ingenious that the true ring has been obtained in some of the basest counterfeits. All silver coins are eyed "with care," and the conductor refuses to "punch in the pressnce of the passenger" until he is convinced beyond a doubt that the quarter or half dollar he presents is really a good thing to make change for. Inquiry was made yesterday at the Sub-Treasury in this City as to the quality and quantity of counterfeits known to be in circulation. Mr. J. F. Tandy, chief coin detector, who has held his position for many years, and is now one of the most competent judges of coin in the country, was referred to for information. Mr. Tandy says that there are a great many spurious coins in actual circulation, the ingenuity of counterfeiters who formerly studied to produce imitations of paper currency having evidently been turned to the manufacture of metal tokens. A great many good coins have been mistaken for bad ones owing to the imperfect work done at some of the mints in the haste to supply the demand made when the paper currency was withdrawn. Many coins are found with the edges between the milled rim and the outer ring on the face beveled off as if by machinery. This appearance is doubtless caused in many instances by a careful paring of the coin for the small amount of silver obtained, but the quality of the silver is not of sufficient fineness to make such a practice a very lucrative one. The counterfeiters have devoted themselves almost exclusively to the production of imitations of half-dollars and quarter-dollars. No false dimes that were at all likely to deceive have yet been seen. Several specimens of the half-dollars found at the Sub-Treasury were shown. In appearance they were very good, the impression being considered excellent by Mr. Tandy. In weight they were light, when compared with genuine coins. Submitted to the test of the scales, the genuine coin weighed 192.9 grains; the counterfeit, 142 grains. The test of the crucible showed the spurious coin to be composed of antimony, lead, and zinc, which really makes a fine imitation of a well-made silver coin.

Most of the counterfeit coins are dated back, the gleam of newness not having yet been given to imitate. Even with experts the difficulty of detecting these light coins among piles of silver of thousands of dollars is acknowledged to be very great. The counterfeits are evidently not all made by the same persons, as they are by no means of uniform excellence of workmanship. A number of debased gold coins were shown that had recently been detected. A $20 piece, with an exterior fair to look upon, and apparently as "good as gold," was pronounced a vexatious fraud, worth but $6. It had been carefully split, hollowed out, and filled with platinum. When submitted to the scale test it weighed all that the law demanded. Its spuriousness had been detected by the eye of an experienced handler of coin, and its "true inwardness" exposed by a slight chipping of the edges, where the parts had been pressed together. A quarter-eagle that had come from the Bank of England had been served in the same way, and when broken it was found to be packed with charges of platinum deftly fitted to the cavity made by the abstraction of the gold, its edges carefully remilled, and it had undoubtedly changed hands repeatedly, before its wickedness had been detected. A California counterfeiter has recently invented a new way for mining gold that may have proved more profitable than hunting for nuggets in the mountain streams, although it can hardly be as comfortable a means of securing a livelihood. From San Francisco was shown a $20 piece, bent and broken, from which projected the ends of several copper wires. A hole had been made in the milled edge of the coin, and from this opening, which was quite small, several wires, reaching almost across the inside of the coin. The gold had been abstracted, and its place filled up by copper wire. The weight of the coin was reduced, and by the use of scales this detect could have been detected at once. But apparently the coin was good, and only the ready eye of an expert could detect the marks of tampering on the edge, or understand the meaning of the raised lines on the surface, where the drill had approached too near the edge and the wire had crowded the gold when it was driven into the aperture.

CARING FOR THE DESTITUTE.

Few persons are aware of the great destitution now prevailing among persons who formerly earned a comfortable living as bank clerks, bookkeepers, clerks in stores of various kinds, tradesmen, and mechanics, and fewer still know what an immense work St. John's Guild is doing for these persons. They are visited at their homes by the volunteer visitors of the guild, and supplies are sent to them according to their needs. The destitution of this class of persons is now appalling. Their earnings have been swept away. They can get no employment. They are too proud to beg until the last gasp comes, and so they drag out a miserable existence in fireless rooms, feeding on crusts and water, and hoping against hope for better days to come, until the visitor of the guild makes his appearance. There are nearly 6,000 families now on the books of the guild. The number of new applicants during the past week was over 2,500. One day 900 families were helped at a cost of over $1,000. A week's work comprises the donation of 25,000 packages of groceries and 16,000 loaves of bread to the poor, and several thousand garments. Now there is great need of new and cast-off clothing, bedding, &c., and it is hoped that people will search their closets and send what they can to the guild. The ladies of St. John's Guild are at work daily in making up garments for the poor, at the rooms of the Volunteer Visitors, No. 42 East Fourteenth street, where they will be glad to welcome any helpers.

THE LATE LUCILLE WESTERN.

The remains of Miss Lucille Western, the actress, who died at the Pierrepont House, Montague street, Brooklyn, on Wednesday evening, were removed to Oakes' undertaking establishment on Washington street early yesterday morning. The body was then encased in a splendid rosewood casket, silver mounted, and lined with white satin. The plate on the lid bore the inscription, "Pauline Lucille Western. Born Jan. 8, 1833, in New-Orleans; died Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 11, 1877." The deceased actress' remains were taken on the 10 o'clock train last night to Malden, Mass., where her mother, Mrs. Jane English, resides. The body was accompanied by A. G. Cambridge, A. E. Samuels, and Mr. Gillett. Miss Western owned a handsome country seat at Malden, and her remains will be interred in the family burying-ground at that place. The daughter of the late Helen Western, sister of the deceased, died last New-Year's Day, and was buried in that plot. Lucille Western was much attached to her niece, whose name was Sally S. Hobbitzell, and always referred to her as "our Sally." The funeral of Miss Western will take place to-morrow.

FESTIVAL AT THE ITALIAN SCHOOL.

The annual festival of the Italian School was held last Thursday evening at the school building, in Leonard street, Mr. C. L. Brace, Secretary of the Children's Aid Society, in the chair. The following distinguished gentlemen were seated upon the platform: The Italian Minister, Baron Blanc; the Italian Vice Consul, Chevalier de Luca; Prof. Botta, Mr. E. P. Fabbri, Mr. Albinola, and others. The exercises consisted of singing by the children of the Italian School, music by a band composed of young men formerly pupils of the school, under the direction of Prof. Conterno, and addresses by Chevalier de Luca, Prof. Botta, and the Italian Minister, Baron Blanc. An interesting feature of the occasion was the presentation by the Italian Minister of silver medals from the Italian Government, through the Department of Public Instruction in Italy, to Mr. Charles L. Brace, Signor A. E. Cerqua, Superintendent of the Italian School, and Mr. E. P. Fabbri. Medals in bronze of a similar kind were given to Prof. Conterno and several of the teachers. Smaller medals, struck in this country, were presented by Prof. Botta to the most deserving scholars. The rooms were decorated with the national colors and evergreens.

EXCESSIVE BANK TAXATION.

The petitions adopted on Thursday at the meeting of the Chamber of Commerce asking Congress and the Legislature of the State to remove the war taxes on banks and other corporate institutions, have been put in the hands of six canvassers, who will thoroughly ascertain the sentiments of the leading merchants, of whom about 4,000 are confidently expected to sign the prepared remonstrance.

THE SNOW IN THE STREETS.

THE STREETS STILL DIRTY.

CULPABLE NEGLIGENCE OF THE POLICE COMMISSIONERS—A DEMAND FOR THEIR REMOVAL FROM OFFICE.

The streets still remain in a dirty condition owing to the culpable negligence of the Police Commissioners. Yesterday Broadway presented the same appearance of dirt and disorder which has prevailed for so many days past, and although the difficulty of locomotion was somewhat lessened by the beating down of the snow in the centre of the roadway, the progress both of vehicles and foot passengers was necessarily slow and laborious. The only discernible attempt at street-cleaning has been made by private firms and individuals, who have hired laborers to clear the cross-walks near their places of business, and who have in some instances cleared away the snow and mud sufficiently for carriage-room in front of their stores. A. T. Stewart & Co., James McCreery & Co., and other merchants in the vicinity of Grace Church have set a good example in this respect. A few of the large hotels, including the Metropolitan and Astor House, have also attempted the same thing, though in the lower part of Broadway the constant crowd of vehicles greatly obstruct the work. Elsewhere, the portion of the street open for traffic is a narrow strip of roadway in the centre, from 20 to 30 feet in width, filled with a colored mixture of snow and dirt, which forms a constant obstruction to passing traffic. The rest of the street on either hand is occupied by a thick, impenetrable mass of frozen snow and mud from one to three feet in thickness, and which nothing but the pickaxe can render fit for removal. In Eighth street the piles of dirty snow form ramparts on either hand, with just space enough between for the passage of cars. In Bleecker street, small hills of mud and ice, covered with a thin coat of snow, infringe upon the tracks. Crosby street is in almost as bad a condition, and many of the side streets and cross-walks are on both sides of the town are no better off. That the Bowery is not so badly incumbered is due to the four railway tracks in its centre, but on its sides is to be found the same accumulation of composite beaten down almost to the consistency of ice. Third avenue, for the greater part of its length, is lined with these frozen banks of snow and dirt, which obstruct travel daily. Nothing could better demonstrate the necessity of a speedy removal of the snow within a day or two of its fall than these unsightly mud banks which form such an excrescence on most of the City streets. The Street-cleaning Bureau has 400 men and 500 carts in its employ, but there is as yet no sweeping up and cleaned Broadway, Fulton street, Wall street, Chambers, and other crowded streets within 48 hours, at the furthest, after the storm ceased. What the Commissioners have done with this force during the past 10 days is still a mystery. A few of the men have been employed keeping cross-walks open, and recently a feeble attempt was made to remove a small fraction of the snow from Fulton street, a part of Fifth avenue, and a few of other streets on the west side. Broadway, however, the main thoroughfare of the City, and the one whose blockade has been most harmful to business, has, so far as can be ascertained, been sedulously avoided by the Police Commissioners.

It was announced yesterday that the board, acting on the advice of the Corporation Counsel, had decided to abandon the extraordinary position taken by Commissioner Nichol, that they had nothing to do with snow and ice until filled into mud. It was also reported that they were about to clean Broadway and the adjacent streets last night. The board have a leisurely way of doing business, however, and last evening the job was put off until to-morrow. The business men along the street look with high favor on the excitement at what they term "the outrageous negligence and inefficency" of Messrs. Nichols, Smith, and their associates and if the latter postpone the work much longer it is to be feared that such a pressure will be brought upon the Mayor as will deprive the City of their valuable services. It is computed that $40,000 per day would be a low estimate of the actual net loss which has been caused to the merchants on lower Broadway alone by the persistent refusal of the Commissioners to act during the past fortnight. A merchant, whose opinion is a good reflex of that of most business men, said to a TIMES reporter yesterday, "Mayor Kelly ought to remove Smith, Nicholas, Erhardt, and the whole lot without another hour's delay. The business interests of New-York have suffered enough from the mulishness of these men. If the public officials of the City cannot set in an emergency without being driven to it, it is high time they were removed and others put in their places." This is the view held by the great majority of the public irrespective of party.

THE POLICE BOARD FORCED TO TAKE ACTION.

CORPORATION COUNSEL WHITNEY DEFINES THE LAW TO THE COMMISSIONERS—NO EXCUSE FOR THEIR NEGLECT TO CLEAN THE PUBLIC THOROUGHFARES—CAPT. GUNNER INSTRUCTED TO CLEAN BROADWAY, FULTON AND OTHER STREETS.

Corporation Counsel Whitney yesterday furnished an opinion to the Police Commissioners in which he clearly defines their right to apply any portion of the regular Street Cleaning Appropriation to the purpose of removing snow and ice from the streets of the City, the legality of the proceedings being based on the supposition that snow and ice when mixed with and tainted by ashes, garbage, &c., becomes ordinary street dirt. The board, without consulting its own counsel, Mr. MacLean, on the question, sought the advice of Mr. Whitney, on the 8th inst., and in his opinion he says:

"The duty of the Board to keep the streets clean is not confined to those portions of the year in which there are no snow and ice in the streets; the law makes it as much the duty of the board to keep the streets clean in the Summer and in the Winter time. Within a very short period after a snow-storm, the snow and ice in most of the streets mingle with the ordinary street dirt and render the streets far more unclean than they were during these periods of the year when there is no snowfall. Even in those streets in which the travel is comparatively slight, and in which, therefore, the snow and ice do not become thoroughly mixed with the ordinary street dirt, it becomes impossible to keep the streets free from such dirt without at the same time removing the snow and ice. I think the language used in this statute admits of but one interpretation, and that is, that while the duty of the Board of Police to keep the streets thoroughly clean at all periods of the year; and as they cannot be kept in that condition without the removal of snow and ice, it is as much the duty of the board to remove such snow and ice as it is the duty of the board to remove ordinary street dirt. This view of the law is confirmed by the other provisions contained in the said act of 1872, and by a consideration of what must have been the design of the Legislature in passing said statute. Section 2 of the act gave the Board of Police exclusive power and authority to supervise the execution of the agreement for cleaning the streets in this City made June 9, 1865, between the City and Brown, Devoe & Knapp, and also to declare the same canceled whenever said contractors or their successors in interest should fail to perform the agreements on their part. It is also provided that whenever the contract should be canceled the Board of Police should proceed to exercise the powers and perform the duties enjoined by said first section.

The Legislature, prior to the passage of the act of 1872 had passed laws authorizing various City officers to make contracts for cleaning the streets and removing snow and ice from certain streets in the City, and section 2 of said act, in addition to and in accordance with Brown, Devoe, & Knapp was so authorized by section 1 of chapter 646 of the Laws of 1865. Section 11 of chapter 853 of the Laws of 1873 authorizes certain officers, upon the failure of performance by said contractors, to declare that contract annulled, and to make a new contract for a term not exceeding five years, at an expense of not exceeding $750,000 per annum; and it was expressly provided that such contract should require the removal of the snow and ice from Broadway and the streets and avenues on which railroads are operated, without delay. And section 12 of said act authorized said officers, until such new contract should be made, to employ suitable persons, by contract or otherwise, to remove the snow and ice from Broadway. The act of 1872 was intended to supersede all provisions previously enacted in relation to the cleaning of the streets. It took away from the City all power, so far as any existed at the time of its passage, to contract for the cleaning of the streets including the removal of snow and ice, and devolved upon the Board of Police the exclusive power to keep the streets clean. Unless, therefore, this act gives the Board of Police the power to remove snow and ice, such power does not at the present time exist in any officer of the City. It can hardly be supposed that the Legislature could have intended to accomplish any such result. I do not think the fact that the Board of Estimate and Apportionment disallowed the amount estimated by the Board of Police as necessary to remove the snow and ice makes any difference in the matter. Under the charter of 1873, and subsequent laws, it is wholly discretionary with the Board of Estimate and Apportionment what sum they will allow for cleaning the streets, including the removal of snow and ice. It must be assumed that the Board of Estimate and Apportionment considered that the sum of $725,000, which they appropriated for cleaning streets, was all that was necessary to enable the Board of Police to discharge all the duties imposed upon it by law in relation to street-cleaning. I would, however, respectfully call the attention of the board of Police to the fact that the language used by the Board of Estimate in making the appropriation is as broad in its terms as that used in the act of 1872 authorizing the Board of Police to clean the streets. The Board of Police is not in any manner instructed in regard to the use to be made of the appropriation. The appropriation is entitled "for cleaning streets under the Police Department." The only authority, so far as I am aware, that the Board of Police has for cleaning the streets, is given by section 1 of the act of 1872. That section does not expressly authorize the removal of snow and ice but as above stated. I think it is to be construed as authorizing such removal. It it does authorize the removal of snow and ice, as there is no restriction in regard to the use of the appropriation, the board has as much right to use the appropriation for the removal of snow and ice as for the removal of anything else. If said section does not expressly authorize the removal of snow and ice it necessarily follows that the board has no power whatever in regard to the removal of those articles, and could not remove them even if the Board of Estimate had made a special appropriation for that purpose.

The mere making of an appropriation would not invest the board with any powers which it did not already possess by virtue of law. It is proper that I should add that the question of cleaning the streets, including the removal of snow and ice, to a certain extent, in the discretion of the Board of Police. Under the charter of 1873, the board cannot incur any expense in relation to this matter in excess of the annual appropriation. It follows, therefore, that although the statute makes it the duty of the Board of Police to keep the streets "at all times thoroughly clean," the degree of cleanliness which can be maintained by the board must, to some extent, depend upon the amount of money appropriated by the Board of Estimate for that purpose.

I think, therefore, the board has the right in determining what amount of snow and ice and ordinary dirt shall be removed at particular times, to take into consideration the sum of money subject to their control, and that it is the duty of the board to expend the entire appropriation for street-cleaning purposes during the year in such manner and at such times as will in its judgment be most for the public interest and convenience.

The above opinion was read at the meeting of the Commissioners yesterday morning, and being unanimously regarded as sufficient authority for decisive action, in accordance with the instructions therein given, the following preamble and resolution were adopted:

Whereas, The full opinion and advice of the Counsel to the Corporation has been this day received, to the effect that this board is authorized and required by law, in its discretion, to clean the streets of the City, including the removal of snow and ice, and that for such purpose the board is authorized, in its discretion, to expend, in the removal of snow and ice, any portion of the moneys appropriated for the expenses of street cleaning for the year 1877, it is, therefore,

Resolved, That the opinion be placed on file, and the Inspector of Street Cleaning be directed to take proper measures for the removal of snow and ice from the principal and most crowded thoroughfares under the direction of the Committee on Street Cleaning.

Capt. Gunner, who was immediately notified of the action taken, at once proceeded to carry out the instructions of the board by making the necessary preparations for cleaning Broadway, Fulton, Wall, Chambers, and other prominent streets.

DINNER TO EX-MAYOR WICKHAM.

HE REVIEWS THE PRESENT CONDITION OF OUR MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT — HE BLAMES THE LEGISLATURE FOR FASTENING BURDENS UPON THE CITY.

At the dinner given last evening to ex-Mayor William H. Wickham, at Delmonico's, Mr. Samuel D. Babcock presided, and among those present were Hon. Smith Ely, John Kelly, Rev. Dr. Adams, William E. Dodge, Commodore Nicholson, Hon. John T. Hoffman, Judge Brady, Chauncey M. Depew, David M. Stone, Elihu Root, Peter B. Olney, Prof. Chandler, Sinclair Tousey, Isaac H. Bailey, and Commissioners Nichols, Brennan, and Erhardt. The proceedings were begun by an address of the Chairman introducing the guest of the evening, ex-Mayor Wickham. Mr. Wickham, in responding, after a few introductory remarks, said:

"Whenever it has devolved upon me to appoint the heads of departments, I have been guided by a desire to select the best and most competent men, independent of all personal considerations, and in every instance the office has sought the man and not the man the office. And I feel therefore that I should be doing not only myself but them injustice if I did not, upon this occasion, share with my late associates any credit that may be due for the present improved condition of our municipal Government, and also avail myself of this public opportunity to return to them my hearty acknowledgments for the faithful manner in which they have discharged their varied trusts, and for the willing co-operation which they have always extended to me. But yet, with good and competent men in every department, actuated with an honest desire to give you an economical Government, and, if possible, to reduce the onerous taxation under which you now suffer, so long as the power is vested in the Legislature of the State to give unlimited authority to issue bonds for public improvements, not asked for or needed, to regulate salaries, and compel appropriations for various objects, there is no limit to the taxation that may be imposed upon you. A great portion of the heavy burden of debt under which this City now suffers has been imposed upon it, not at the desire or request of the citizens, but by schemes of plunder, planned by designing men here, and consummated at Albany. The Constitution wisely limits the power of the Legislature against the expenditure for public improvements in the State, and for these wholesome restraints, the Legislature in times, passed seems to have taken revenge by exercising an unlimited license in fastening burdens upon the City of New-York. May we not hope that the remedy for these evils is close at hand, and that the able commission who for nearly two years past have had the subject of a form of municipal Government under discussion, will soon make a report to the Legislature, a plan which will give permanent relief to our City, and secure to us the great boon of 'local self-government and home rule.'"

Addresses were also delivered by Mayor Ely, Judge Brady, and Isaac H. Bailey, after which the meeting adjourned.

HEROIC CONDUCT REWARDED.

The Police Board, at its meeting yesterday, adopted resolutions providing that highly honorable mention be made in the records of the department of the courage and forbearance of Patrolman John McDowell, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, in his arrest of George, alias James Flint, a thief and burglar, while engaged in the perpetration of a burglary at No. 315 Seventh avenue, at 2:45 A. M., on the 8th of January, 1877, and also ordered a medal of honor to be presented to the officer. This resolution will be published in general order to the department. It was also resolved that honorable mention be made on the records of the department of the efficient and successful conduct of Capt. William Murray, of the Fourth Precinct, in arresting the persons who committed the burglaries at Astoria, Long Island, on the night of Jan. 3, 1877, and that this resolution be engrossed on parchment and presented to Capt. Murray. Resolutions of a similar tenor were adopted in the case of Roundsman Byrnes and Patrolmen Walt and Murphy, for bravery displayed by them in rescuing imperiled persons from burning buildings.

A SUIT FOR FURNITURE.

Mrs. Paran Stevens brought an action in the Court of Common Pleas to recover $3,200 worth of furniture seized by ex-Sheriff Brennan on an execution against E. A. Stevens. The furniture was in the house at No. 230 Fifth avenue, which was owned by Paran Stevens, but leased to E. A. Stevens. The execution was issued in an action brought by Herter Brothers, who claimed that the furniture had been procured from them by E. A. Stevens under false representations. Before it was seized, however, it had been conveyed to Paran Stevens by a bill of sale. The defendant, in answer, alleged that the furniture remained in the possession of E. A. Stevens or his wife, and he was therefore bound after the order to take possession of it, notwithstanding any bill of sale which was not accompanied by actual change of possession. The complaint in the case was dismissed by reason of the plaintiff's failure to prove that any valuable consideration had been given for the sale of the furniture.

A RAILROAD COMPANY'S LIABILITY.

The case of Jason Weeks against the New-York, New-Haven and Hartford Railroad Company was decided by the Supreme Court, General Term, yesterday. Weeks, it appears, was travelling in one of the defendant's cars several years ago on his way from Maine to the West. The cars were unhitched at the Twenty-seventh Street Depot in this City, and were left without being guarded by any of the company's employes. While there a lot of rowdies entered the cars, and after almost choking Weeks, robbed him of $15.00 in bonds. He brought suit to recover their value, and at Trial Term obtained a verdict for $16,685 47. The defendants appealed, and the General Term yesterday reversed the judgment of the court below. Judge Daniels, who writes the opinion of the General Term, says that the company was not informed of any property carried by the passenger. The bonds were not delivered to their care and the company is therefore not liable. A new trial is ordered.

AN ALLEGED DISHONEST OFFICIAL.

Charles M. Garrigan, formerly agent of the New-York Transfer Company in Brooklyn, Long Island, absconded on the 1st inst., taking with him, it is said, $850 in cash and railroad tickets to the amount of $1,129. Garrigan had been in the employ of the New-Jersey Central Railroad and was esteemed a faithful official, and was strongly recommended as a person entirely trustworthy. He was but 11 months in his last situation, when he left for parts unknown. The case has been placed in the hands of Pinkerton's Detective Agency, and they are in hot pursuit of the fugitive. They found track of him at St. Louis, where they arrived but one hour after his taking his departure, and the belief is that he has left for the Black Hills. The absconding agent is a married man and the father of two children. The company will sustain no monetary loss through the dishonesty of their agent, as they hold securities sufficient to cover the amount of money stolen.

THE ASTORIA MASKED BURGLARS.

Patrick Coffee, alias "Whitey," a member of the Twenty-first street gang, who was arrested on Thursday morning by Capt. Murray, on suspicion of being one of the Astoria masked burglars, was arraigned before Recorder Parcell yesterday. District-Attorney Downing conducted the examination on the part of the people. The prisoner upon arraignment pleaded not guilty. Miss Hillier believed the prisoner was one of the men who robbed her father's house on the night of the 23d December. She, however, could not positively identify him. The prisoner admitted having served a term in the State Prison for attempted burglary, and a term on the Island for carrying burglar's tools. The prisoner is 23 years of age, a native of the United States, a bellet-maker by trade, and resides at No. 331 East Thirty-fourth street. He was fully committed to await the action of the Grand Jury.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

THE OREGON ELECTORAL VOTE.

FURTHER DEVELOPMENTS BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE—THAT EIGHT THOUSAND DOLLARS ACCOUNTED FOR—THE MONEY SENT TO OREGON IN ACCORDANCE WITH INSTRUCTIONS ISSUED BY MR. TILDEN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—At this morning's session of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, Conrad N. Jordan, Cashier of the Third National Bank, New-York City, was examined at length. He testified that the $8,000 which was sent to the firm of Ladd & Bush, in Oregon, on the 6th of December, was transmitted in accordance with instructions which had been received from Col. William T. Pelton, Secretary of the Democratic National Committee, and nephew of Mr. Samuel J. Tilden. Col. Pelton did not desire the transaction to be made public, and the witness thought at the time that the money was to be used for political purposes. The witness further testified that Mr. Samuel J. Tilden, the defeated candidate for the Presidency, was a Director of the bank in which he was employed, and owned $68,000 of its capital stock.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections continued their investigation of the Oregon Electoral case to-day. John Parker, one of the Electors appointed by Cronin, was examined by Mr. Kernan in regard to the proceedings on the 4th of December, when the Electoral College met. His testimony corroborated that of Messrs. Klippel (a defeated Democratic Elector) and Miller, one of Cronin's Electors. In answer to Mr. Morton, Mr. Bellinger, Chairman of the Democratic Central Committee of Oregon, told witness two hours before that he would be called upon to act with Cronin; had business with the Secretary of State, and that was why he was in Salem, Dec. 4.

Conrad N. Jordan was examined by Mr. Mitchell. He testified that he is Cashier of the Third National Bank of New-York; witness directed Messrs. Martin and Runyon to draw a draft on the 6th of December in favor of Messrs. Ladd & Bush, Salem, Oregon, for $8,000; don't know for what purpose the draft was drawn, but it was at the instance of Col. William T. Pelton, Secretary of the National Democratic Committee; Pelton came in on the morning of the 6th of December and asked if witness had any correspondence in Oregon, or if he knew of any way by which a check could be drawn in favor of Ladd & Bush; witness mentioned the firm of Martin & Runyon, saying he (witness) had no correspondence with Oregon. His testimony in regard to the drawing of a second check for $8,000 corroborated that of Mr. Dimon; this transaction was not an ordinary transaction; he would have gone to Charles Dimon direct, but Mr. Pelton requested him to find some other party; witness told Mr. Pelton that he thought the transaction had better not go upon the books of Messrs. Martin & Runyon; Col. Pelton did not request him to regard the transaction as confidential; had no knowledge of how the money was to be used; requested Mr. Runyon to keep the transaction a secret; told Runyon, before he came over, not to divulge his [witness'] name.

Mr. Morton—In the meantime had you seen Mr. Pelton? A.—(after a long pause) I think not, Sir. After thinking a moment witness said that, come to remember, he did see Mr. Pelton on the day Mr. Runyon called on him before coming to Washington. Mr. Pelton asked him to request Runyon to see a lawyer named Harrison, and said he [Pelton] would notify Harrison; inferred at the time Mr. Pelton asked him to fix up the draft of $8,000 that it was to be used for political purposes, but Mr. Pelton did not tell him so.

Senator Mitchell—Who are the Directors of the Third National Bank? Witness replied, giving the names, which includes that of Samuel J. Tilden. Mr. Mitchell asked the amount of capital stock of witness' bank, and witness answered $1,000,000.

Senator Mitchell—How much of that stock does Mr. Tilden own? A.—I must, as a bank officer, protest against such a question, but with the permission of the officers of the bank I will say that Mr. Tilden holds about $63,000 of the stock. In reply to Senator Morton witness said he did not ask Mr. Pelton for any collaterals; it was not a regular banking transaction, and no record was made on the books of the bank; Gov. Tilden has no office in witness' bank; saw Mr. Pelton last a few days ago; Mr. Pelton does not keep an account at the Third National Bank, but witness has had small business transactions with him; he [Mr. Pelton] is not a man of wealth in the opinion of witness; Mr. Pelton has borrowed money of witness, not exceeding $1,000, for a few days; never told witness what he wanted the money for; witness had no security for the return of this money; had an understanding with W. L. Scott, of the Democratic National Committee, that he would be responsible for Mr. Pelton to the extent of $20,000; Mr. Scott did not say what the money might be used for; knew in advancing the $8,000 to Mr. Pelton that he had a substantial backer behind him; Mr. Scott gave him this assurance on the night of the 5th of December, the night before the check was drawn. In answer to Senator Kernan, witness said: Gov. Tilden never attends a meeting of the bank Directors unless he is personally requested by witness. The witness was here discharged.

Gov. Grover was recalled, and was asked by Mr. Mitchell if he did not know a Dr. Johnson, or Major Johnson, residing this side of the Rocky Mountains, and witness said he did not remember having the acquaintance of a person of that name. Mr. Mitchell asked him if he did not, in November last, write a letter to a Doctor or Major Johnson, saying that it made no difference how they decided the vote in the Southern disputed States, for Oregon would give one vote for Tilden and Hendricks. The witness was confident that he wrote no such letter; possibly he had, but, if he had, he had entirely forgotten the fact.

Mr. Kernan—I want to ask Mr. Parker [one of Cronin's Electors] one question. Mr. Parker, did you have any arms on your person at the time the Electoral College met? A.—No, Sir.

Mr. Mitchell—I want to ask Dr. Watts [Republican Elector] a question. Doctor, did you have any arms on your person on that day? A.—I did not.

In answer to Senator Kernan Dr. Watts stated that he wrote a letter to Senator Mitchell last July, in which he stated the fact of his [Watt's] being the Postmaster of a fourth-class office, but he received no reply from Senator Mitchell, as the Senator had never received the letter from witness; witness stated that he examined the Constitution and came to the conclusion that he would be eligible to the office of Presidential Elector if he resigned his postmastership before the meeting of the Electoral College, and he is of the same opinion still; witness sometimes preaches and lectures, and during the last political campaign made 42 speeches.

Benjamin Simpson, Surveyor General of Oregon, was called and testified that Gov. Grover remarked to him during a conversation, which took place at his [Simpson's] office, at Salem, about the middle of November last, that he [Grover] had not decided what to do in the case of Mr. Watts; that he [Grover] had received two or three legal authorities relating to the Watts case from the East, but that they conflicted with authorities which Gov. Grover himself had looked up in connection with this same subject. In reply to Senator Kernan, witness stated that he was present at Salem on the day of the meeting of the Electoral College; he did not have a pistol on his person that day, but he had a pocket knife; he told Mr. Chadwick that he thought the giving of the Electoral certificates to Cronin was outrageous.

The committee here took a recess, and on re-assembling Senator Mitchell was, at his own request, sworn, and made a statement to the effect that he never received the letter which Dr. Watts this morning testified to having written to him last July; he never heard from any source that Watts was a Postmaster and therefore ineligible as a Presidential Elector until his arrival in San Francisco, seven or eight days after the election; he might or might not have known at some time that Watts had been appointed Postmaster at Lafayette, but if so he had forgotten it; changes in the small Oregon Post Offices were of frequent occurrence, and Watts, he now learns, was appointed on the recommendation of Senator Corbett, his predecessor.

At this point Mr. Jordan was recalled, and in answer to Senator Mitchell, testified: Had never acted as financial agent for Gov. Tilden; I deal with him as with any other customer of our bank: had not advanced any money on Gov. Tilden's order during the past year.

George A. Steele was recalled and examined by Mr. Mitchell: Was at Salem on the day the vote was counted; saw A. Bush, of the firm of Ladd & Bush, at the Capitol Building; saw him meet Bellinger in the hall leading to the Senate Chamber, and shortly after the State Treasurer came up to them; witness made the remark to Judge Denny, "What are they using money for?" Bellinger, Bush, and the State Treasurer went into the latter's office; the actions of Mr. Bush were suspicious, and that was why he made the remark about money being used. In reply to Senator Kernan, witness said: Mr. Bush came up the Capitol steps in a great hurry, between a walk and a run; was told that Mr. Bush had been sent for, but to his own knowledge don't know this to be a fact.

Senator Kernan—Well, now, from what you saw and heard there, do you, as a fair-minded man, think it just to say that money was used? A.—No; I do not; but there were other suspicious circumstances to warrant the conclusion. In reply to further questions by Mr. Kernan, witness said that, as Chairman of the State Republican Committee, he probably disbursed $3,000 to defray the expenses of the campaign. In reply to Senator Mitchell, witness said no money was sent to the State Republican Committee by the National Republican Committee, or by any person outside of the State, except ex-Attorney General Williams, who sent him $100. In answer to Senator Kernan, witness said: The money to defray the expenses of the campaign was raised by subscription in Oregon.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

THE PLAN AS PRINTED IN THE TIMES OF YESTERDAY UNDER DISCUSSION—SOME OBJECTIONS OFFERED TO IT—THE ANXIETY OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE—THE MEASURE BUT LITTLE MODIFIED SINCE ITS PUBLICATION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—The plan of counting the Electoral vote, as printed in THE TIMES of this morning, has been everywhere discussed this evening, but Congress not having been in session, and the members being separated, it is not easy to determine how widely the proposition of the Senate Committee meets with approval. There seems to be a disposition to think favorably of it, but to give the subject a second consideration before expressing an opinion. By some Republicans, the plan is objected to very earnestly, because it allows the element of uncertainty to come into the election, where they think there is now only certainty. One Democrat accepts the proposition jokingly, "because," he says, "we can beat you fellows on the draw." The casting of lots to determine who shall compose the committee is not very favorably regarded, and that part of the plan may be changed. The two committees were in session this afternoon when THE TIMES came, and there are reports of an immediate suspension of business for self-examination and inquiry as to the manner in which the plan leaked out. The anxiety of the committee concerning the publication is accounted for more by a certain pride in successful concealment than any necessity for secrecy. There will be some efforts made to deny the authenticity of the report published, but it may be affirmed that the statement made last night is substantially accurate in its essential features, and there is reason to believe the measure has been but little modified since the two committees came together. What may finally come out of the Joint Committee, of course, no one can say certainly, but it is not likely the Senate Committee will depart very widely from the measure on which they have bestowed so much care and labor.

The committees were together a long time to-day, and are endeavoring without doubt to perfect an agreement early next week, if there is to be any agreement at all. The bill to be reported, if one is agreed upon, will contain many details not yet published; but there can be no agreement which does not provide a special tribunal for the settlement of disputes, and the greatest difficulty met is in securing a perfectly fair and non-partisan body for that duty. The Committee on the Privileges of the House has been authorized to take testimony concerning the election, and they began to-day by examining Congressman Purman, of Florida, and Secretary Chandler. The subject of telegraphic dispatches seems to have been up, but no information of any importance was obtained by the committee. Mr. Chandler is willing every dispatch of his sent during the campaign shall be published. The committee undertook to inquire into communications made in Cabinet meetings, and Mr. Chandler refused, for the present at least, to answer. The committee have voted to keep its proceedings secret.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

Conflicting statements having recently been published in regard to the action of the Senate Committee in counting the Electoral votes, inquiry was made to-day in authoritative quarters, and it was positively ascertained that, although some of these publications contain detached portions of several of the many propositions which have been discussed, none of them embrace any complete plan that has been agreed to, or is likely to be agreed to, by either the Senate Committee or the House Committee. A member of the Joint Committee, besides authorizing the foregoing statement, says: "Various published propositions have been discussed freely by the committees, and portions of them may, perhaps, be agreed to, but only in connection with other and much more important propositions, which as yet have not even been hinted at in the public press." He added, "All publications up to the present time purporting to give the results of the committee's deliberations are unauthorized, and may mislead the public in regard to what is being done or is likely to be done. Neither committee has yet formally agreed upon any plan; their joint sessions are being held for the purpose of freely interchanging opinions, with a view of arriving, if possible, at some agreement, and there is hope that some satisfactory agreement will be reached." The committee were in joint session to-day for about seven hours continuously, except when the two branches separated once or twice for brief consultations.

The Special Committee on the Privileges, Powers, and Duties of the House is counting the Electoral vote held a long session to-day, and examined several witnesses, among them Secretary Chandler. He was asked whether he had sent any dispatches to Florida since the late election in relation to money, and he replied that he had not. Being asked whether he had sent a dispatch to Florida stating that troops would probably be sent there to keep the peace, he answered that he probably had. He was then asked whether he had sent it upon his motion or upon some one's else, and he declined to answer this question, basing his refusal on the ground that he is a Cabinet officer. The committee decided that he must answer, and gave him until next Wednesday to comply with their decision. The committee also examined Representative Purman, of Florida, and several other witnesses, but after having imposed an injunction of entire secrecy upon all the proceedings.

AFFAIRS IN LOUISIANA.

THE UNITED STATES SENATORIAL QUESTION—ANOTHER UNSUCCESSFUL BALLOT—HOW PINCHBACK IS TRYING TO REVENGE HIS DISAPPOINTMENTS — THE NICHOLLS CROWD INCREASED BY THREE RENEGADES—MATTERS IN LOUISIANA GROWING MORE AND MORE COMPLICATED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 13.—The Legislature met in joint session at the State-house to-day, and balloted for United States Senator for the short term, but without effecting an election. The three State Senators who were bid away in Pinchback's residence went over to the Nicholls Senate, so called, to-day. They were carried there by Pinchback, who accompanied them, and who, on the floor, made a personal speech denouncing the Republican Party as venal and corrupt. Pinchback is not a member of the Legislature, but he has been for some time an active candidate for the United States Senate, with little prospect of being elected. He can expect nothing from the Democrats, but to revenge his disappointments has thus used what influence he possesses to break the quorum of the regular Senate. The three seceding Republican Senators are Demas, Wheeler, and Hamlet, all colored. Hamlet comes from the Ouachita District, in which the democrats claimed that Mr. Meredith, a Democrat, was elected. Mr. Meredith took his seat in the Nicholls body, and died soon after. To be consistent, the Democrats cannot fill the Meredith vacancy by seating a Republican, and Hamlet is now nothing but the ghost of a Senator. One of the recent acts of the Nicholls Legislature so-called, was to pass an act revising the election laws, and to appoint a Board of Canvassers to canvass the late election returns from a Democratic standpoint. These canvassers are now at work canvassing and promulgating the returns for State officers. It is also understood that they will proceed to recount the Presidential Electoral vote, and so far as the Nicholls crowd can do, turn the State over to Tilden. The longer the recognition of Gov. Packard is delayed, the more complicated will political matters become in unhappy Louisiana.

NO CHANGE IN THE SITUATION—THE UNITED STATES SENATORIAL QUESTION.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 13.—At 10 o'clock this morning Gen. Augur stated that he had received no communication or information from Gov. Packard in reference to the affairs at Pinchback's house yesterday afternoon, although it was stated at the State-house last night that the whole correspondence would be laid before him. Gen. Augur stated that there had been no change in the situation or in orders in relation to the rival parties. Representative Delacoy did not say, as was reported, in the Republican Legislature yesterday, that he had been offered $10,000 to join the Democrats, but that such a story had been circulated, and he had no idea of going to that body.

At 1 o'clock no ballot for United States Senator had been had in the Republican Legislature. The Senate is still without a quorum. Senator Breaux, from Point Coupee and the Felicianas, who left the Republican Senate yesterday, was sworn into the Democratic body to-day. Representative Brown, of Vernon, also left the Republican House, and wrote a letter to the Democratic body, saying that, although he was returned as elected by the Returning Board, he did not believe he was elected, and would not ask for a seat.

The Democratic gathering had another ballot for United States Senator, but without a choice. Judge Shaw has opened the Superior Civil Court in the State-house building. He has the seal and minute-book of the court, while the Nicholls crowd holds the former court-room. The Times extra, referring to the Democratic body, says: "The United States Senatorial question perplexes the members not a little, and it seems to be generally understood that a daily joint ballot is but a mere form to conform to existing laws. Some of the "members" seem to think that instead of electing a Democrat they would gain more now by selecting a Liberal Republican. In connection with this subject, it is alleged that combinations are being effected whereby James F. Casey, or some prominent Republican with influence at Washington, will be selected. Caucuses of Republican and Democratic "members" are reported at which the matter has been freely discussed, and it is expected that in a few days all arrangements necessary will have been effected.

At 5 o'clock this morning Senators Demas, (colored,) Wheeler, and Hamlet, accompanied by Pinchback, entered the Democratic Senate so-called, and were greeted with cheers. After a short executive session the two former were admitted to seats and sworn in. Mr. Hamlet was granted permission to make a personal explanation, which he did not being elected as the Democrats claimed. He explained that he had withdrawn from the Republican Senate, and would not serve with it, after which Mr. Pinchback was granted permission to make a personal explanation. He said that the action of himself and these Senators was only decided upon after mature deliberation, and they intended to stand the hazard of the die. They had come there as Republicans, because they believed that the interests of the State were above those of party. He denounced the Republican Party of Louisiana in unmeasured terms, and said that Hayes, if inaugurated, could not afford to sell his administration with this blight upon the prosperity of the people. He accused ex-Gov. Kellogg of securing his election as Senator by corrupt means. The Democrats are jubilant to-night over the events of the day, while the absence of news of any recognition on the part of the general Government of the Packard Administration produces a widespread feeling of despondency in the Republican ranks.

The Republican Printing Company this evening served a notice on Gov. Packard to the effect that the publication of that paper would be suspended after to-morrow. Another ballot was had in the Republican Legislature to-day for United States Senator, with the same result as yesterday. The evening papers assert that three cases of small-pox were taken from the State-house last night and sent to the Charity Hospital, but the statement is denied at the State-house.

Six Sergeants at Arms of the Republican Senate, who were arrested last evening at Pinchback's residence, were sent to the parish prison in default of $1,000 bail. United States Marshal Pitkin left yesterday, and Collector Casey to-day, for Washington.

THE INVESTIGATIONS.

The Senate Sub-Committee commenced the examination of West Feliciana Parish to-day. James Morgan (colored) testified to a large number of acts of violence, and to the general intimidation of colored Republicans; that he was a Supervisor of Election, and saw colored men cry because they had to vote the Democratic ticket, and that the names of all who voted the Republican ticket were taken down by a white man at the poll he officiated at.

J. R. Tilletson (colored) testified that he was a Commissioner of Election at the Court-house poll, St. Francisville, and that the names of colored men voting the Republican ticket were taken down, and they were notified that they would be visited in a night or two; witness remonstrated against this conduct and was also threatened.

Julius Green (colored) swore he had been forced to resign as a Police juror, and that after his brother-in-law, Isaac Mitchell, was killed, he had abandoned his home and crops, and left the parish.

The Senate Committee resumed the examination of the Parish of East Feliciana. Judge Deering, of the Fifth District Court, testified relative to disorders in that district and to a disturbance in the court in October, 1875, when Henry Smith, (colored,) Sheriff, was shot and wounded, in consequence of said disorder witness had adjourned the court, and has never held a term there since; witness said that some whites there said that if Smith had appointed Tom Ware Deputy Sheriff there would have been no trouble, and that when he left several gentlemen offered to and did escort him to Port Hudson, for fear, as they said, that some violent men might molest him.

Henry Smith (colored) related that he was Sheriff of the parish, and had been assaulted and shot in the hip, and driven from the parish in 1875; he returned twice, and had to leave both times.

George F. Norwood testified that there were two elements among the whites in the parish, viz., bull-dozers and anti-bull-dozers; the former were victorious in the primary elections, and their candidates accepted the support of the latter, who continued their operations.

James De Gray was recalled, and corroborated the affidavit of John Pilant in reference to the attempted assassination of Supervisor Anderson.

C. A. Rigby (colored) testified he had left the parish through fear after his wife's brother, John Gair, was killed, and her sister, Babe Matthews, hung, as he had been a prominent Republican, and was notified that he must stop organizing Republican clubs; he had heard Babe Matthews was charged with poisoning Dr. Saunders' family, but thought the charge was trumped up.

Thomas S. Adams testified to seeing an armed body of negroes, numbering 40 or 50, in the woods near Clinton, in July, 1875, and reporting the fact to the citizens there; this was on the day that Ray and other parochial officers were driven away.

The House committee heard William Ward, (colored,) who stated that the pamphlet issued with his name attached, in regard to the troubles in Red River valley, was prepared by Judge Phillips, and that he had not read it then, but knows now many of the statements therein are untrue; he said the Colfax riot was the result of Gov. Kellogg commissioning two Sheriffs, who each summoned a posse and fought for the office.

Judge Hymon, of Jefferson, testified that after a long and intimate acquaintance with ex Gov. Wells, he knew nothing derogatory to his character.

Gov. Kellogg testified regarding the election, saying he received many telegrams after the election, several from Secretary Chandler and others, inquiring how the State had gone, but none from Secretary Chandler on the 8th of November, saying that Louisiana must be carried for the Republicans; he received dispatches from Senator Logan and others in Chicago, also from Senator Morton, and from San Francisco; he did not remember the replies he sent; he said that he might have received dispatches saying that Louisiana must be carried for the Republicans, but not from Secretary Chandler; he said he received one from San Francisco saying that the Republicans on the Pacific coast relied upon the Republicans here to see that votes cast through violence and fraud should not be counted against the Republicans on or about the 9th November thinks he received a dispatch from William E. Chandler saying: "Hewitt is coming; watch the count and be careful;" appointed Brady Supervisor from Ouachita Parish on the recommendation of Governor Packard and others; did not know he held a Federal office; said he issued at times commissions for Supervisors in certain parishes for persons other than the then Supervisors, to be used in case anything occurred to prevent Supervisors from acting; they were sometimes intimidated or otherwise induced to abandon their offices; it was to prevent this, that additional commissions were issued; denied any knowledge of intention on the part of Republicans to commit frauds in the election; said he had pardoned less criminals in proportion to the population of the two States than Gov. Tilden, of New-York.

O. H. Brewster, one of the Hayes Electors, was examined to-night before the Senate Committee. He stated that he was Surveyor General of the Land Office on the day of the Presidential election, and a few days afterward wrote out his resignation. About the 28th of November he received a reply from Washington accepting his resignation, to take effect on the 4th of November. On the day that the Electoral College met he, having some doubts about the legality of his voting, notified two or three of the members that he could not act unless he was appointed to fill his own vacancy. He was appointed afterward.

THE MISSISSIPPI ELECTION.

CASES OF INTIMIDATION—REPUBLICAN MEETINGS BROKEN UP BY DEMOCRATS—CITIZENS FORCIBLY KEPT FROM THE POLLS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—The investigation of the Mississippi election was taken up to-day by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, and Major Edward Howard, a special agent of the Post Office in Mississippi, was examined. He testified that he resides at Jackson, Miss.; he has traveled through various parts of that State within the past ten months, and he is satisfied from what he saw and heard that a large number of colored voters were intimidated for the purpose of keeping them from voting. One of the methods of intimidation practiced was to threaten to turn laboring men out of employment. If the Republicans attempted to hold a political meeting the Conservatives or Democrats created a disturbance, and broke up the meeting; the Republicans in all parts of the State told witness previous to the last election that unless they could be protected they would poll a small vote; Judge Percy, of Hinds County, Miss., in conversation with witness, remarked that the Conservatives in his county did not propose to allow the Republican Party ever to be heard up in that county again. This conversation took place before the election. Witness stated that, what would be called a farce in the North, was called an election in Mississippi; he had never met but two colored men in Mississippi who were Democrats; he saw no violence done any person previous to the election day; he has talked with a great number of colored people, and knows that a large majority of them would vote the Republican ticket if they were let alone. Witness stated that he knew of at least 100 voters who were registered at Tinnan's, a polling-place near Jackson, who on election day were kept from voting by not being able to get near the polls, on account of the boisterous crowd surrounding them; the Supervisor of Election delayed the voting as much as possible, by asking those who came up to vote numerous unnecessary questions. At this point, the committee adjourned until Monday.

TERROR AND FRAUD IN FLORIDA.

THE SYSTEMATIC ATTEMPT TO STEAL THE STATE—THREATS OF REFUSING EMPLOYMENT TO MEN WHO MIGHT VOTE THE REPUBLICAN TICKET CARRIED OUT RIGOROUSLY—TO VOTE THE DEMOCRATIC TICKET OR STARVE THE ALTERNATIVE—ELECTION OFFICERS BRIBED.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., Wednesday, Jan. 10, 1877.

The more the condition of affairs in this State is investigated, the more apparent the fact that a large number of legal voters were restrained from voting in November by the fear of personal injury or of the loss of employment. It has been clearly proved that a large number of tickets were marked by printed numbers, and distributed to colored men, with the assurance that if such numbered tickets were not voted they should lose their employment. Such tickets were found in all the ballot-boxes in this city, and at Fernandina; and leading Democrats were on hand to get the numbers when the tickets were counted out. The numbers used in different counties were all printed in the same type and with the same blue ink, showing that they had been prepared at head-quarters and distributed throughout the State. Many colored people refused to vote such tickets, and some of them lost their places. Others were saved from the consequences of their independence by the exposure and public discussion of the scheme.

The most effective means of dealing with the colored voters in places where they were not well led was to keep them from voting at all, on the ground that those who did not vote at all should have work and wages, or accommodations in renting lands and trading at the stores, while those who voted the Republican ticket should be starved out. Thousands did not vote, and counties which have heretofore had several hundred Republican votes sent in returns with less than a score. Even in cases in which they did vote they were often defrauded of the benefit of such votes by the Precinct Canvassers. There are but few white Republicans in the "oraoker" counties, and these have been intrusted with the leadership, as Supervisors, Inspectors, &c. In many cases these men, who had been known among the colored men as Republicans, acted with the Democrats, and voted the Democratic ticket. Why they did this is not known; but it is known that liberal offers were made to election officers to act with the Democrats, who refused the temptation. By these means the vote counted was increased as much, or more, than the vote cast had been decreased. In other words, it is pretty clear that the vote counted is at least 5,000 more than there are voters in the State; while at the same time the vote really cast was several thousand less.

The vote of the State, as returned, has increased nearly 33 per cent. since 1874, while the increase did not amount to more than 6 per cent. in any previous two years. It is not claimed by any one that the increase of emigration has been any larger in the last two years than in previous years since 1870. The increase has been in a few counties on the borders of Georgia, where there has been an immense influx of colored people, and on the St. John's River, where the Northern emigration has centred; but the increase of votes is not confined to these districts; but counties remote from all the currents of emigration, where the cracker and the freedman have hitherto held about equal sway, as well as the swamp districts in which no negro would think of penetrating since the fugitives from slavery have been free to leave them, and in which the cracker munches his clay in peace, show a most wonderful increase of voters since 1874—an increase so remarkable that it must have come of the little seed planted by hands from head-quarters. The crackers themselves are never known to plant anything.

But their determination to maintain a superiority over the negroes, and dread of an equality which no one else would ever think of by observation of the two classes, make them willing and efficient agents in carrying out the orders of the managers. A stranger seeking information of the conduct of elections, or looking after the reasons for the return of only a half dozen votes in a district where a hundred colored Republicans were known to be, was apt to meet with suggestions that would lead him to retrace his tracks, as in the case of Messrs. Webster and Hamblen, who started to Manatee County and were stopped at Sumterville by a shot-gun squad, who had their orders from Tallahassee. Persons not strangers, but understanding the situation, would not start on such an errand.

In Duval County, containing Jacksonville, one half of whose wealth and white population are northern in birth and family, it is shown that between one and two hundred numbered Democratic tickets were voted—voted by men who were influenced by threats and their own fears. If this is the case in such a county, where there are the most intelligent colored people and a powerful white support, it is easy to imagine what was the condition in counties where the races were nearly equally divided, and the color line so tightly drawn that not more than a dozen or two whites would dare to stand out against the pressure which was brought to bear in this canvass.

A. A. Allen, Sheriff of Baker County, examined before the Senate Committee, testified that after the Clerk and himself had been notified to meet with the Judge to canvass the returns on the sixth day after the election, the Clerk came to him privately and sought to induce him [Allen] to meet before that time with the Clerk and a Justice of the Peace and make a canvass. As he refused, the Clerk called in a Justice and made a canvass. The record is as follows:

The Clerk and Justice on Monday made a second canvass. After they had made the canvass they came to me and asked me to sign the returns. I refused to do it. Then Mr. Burnett approached me and told me that if I would sign the returns I should be so much money in pocket.

Q.—How much money? A.—A hundred and twenty-five dollars for my signature. I asked him who was going to pay the money. He said, "Come with me and I will show you the man." I went with him and he carried me to Mr. Hartridge.

Q.—Who is Mr. Hartridge? A.—He is a lawyer from this place, [Jacksonville,] I think. He was there in Sanderson at that time. When I met Hartridge, Hartridge asked me to sign the returns, and I told him I could not do it and would not do it. He says, "I will compensate you for your trouble if you will sign the returns." I asked him, "What do you call compensation?" He says, "Whatever is right; whatever you consider would be right for your services I am willing to pay you." I was insulted by his trying to bribe me, and used some pretty harsh language toward him, and that stopped right there.

Q.—Did you intend at any time to receive money for that signature. A.—No, Sir.

Q.—What was your object in going to Hartridge to inquire about it? A.—This object: Burnett, when he made the proposition to buy me, I did not understand exactly, and I wanted to know who was the man to pay the money. I saw what the meaning of it was, and I am too well known for any one to suppose that I can be bought and sold for a song.

Mr. Allen had taught school in the county for some years, and took no active part in politics; but it being observed that he voted the Republican ticket, all of his scholars but 13 were withdrawn. He then obtained the appointment of Sheriff.

Charles R. King, of Columbia City, was a Supervisor and Inspector, and by the testimony quite efficient on election day in aid of the Democratic ticket. The following colloquy explains his position and that of many of the election officers in precincts where the Democrats gained immensely, to the surprise of the voters who thought they thoroughly understood the complexion of the vote.

Q.—You were a Republican? A.—Yes, Sir; I am now.

Q.—Did you not act with the Democrats? A.—I would like to explain.

Q.—Did you not vote the Democratic ticket? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Were you not trusted by the Republicans up to that time as their friend? A.—Yes, Sir.

Republicans who acted with the Democrats and voted the Democratic ticket were almost invariably holding positions on the Election Boards as Republicans, and their conversions were so sudden as not to have been suspected until they were found engaged in the work of explaining the small return of Republican votes where it was known a much larger number had been cast.

In all the interior counties and towns the white Republicans are generally men of Southern birth, and not entitled to the term carpet-bagger. In nine cases out of ten where the white Republicans are from the North they are soldiers who settled in the State immediately or soon after the close of the war, and have been citizens of the State from eight to ten years. The evidence before the committee shows that the term is applied indiscriminately to whatever Northern persons not with the Republican Party. T. W. C. Moore, President of the First National Bank of this city, as a capitalist who took no part in politics, was treated with the highest consideration until just before the election, when he turned out in a Republican procession. He was then denounced as a carpet-bagger, and the Democratic business men all drew their deposits from the bank. Mr. John H. Abbott, a former resident of Malden, Mass., who settled in Jacksonville several years since, on account of his health, had a similar experience, with the addition that the front of his house was smeared over the Sunday night after the election, and a letter was left on the steps requiring him to take down a flag—the "Stars and Stripes" only—which hung from the portico. He was a capitalist before the election—afterward a carpet-bagger.

MINNESOTA'S ELECTORAL VOTE.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 13.—In the Senate to-day Mr. Wilkinson, Democrat, offered the following resolution: "That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the eligibility of the several Presidential Electors, and that said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers." The facts which gave rise to this resolution are that A. K. Finseth, one of the Electors, it is claimed is not legally a citizen of the United States; that he immigrated to the United States when 17 or 18 years of age, and supposing that the naturalization of his father naturalized the minor children, either never took out any naturalization papers at all or such only as are incomplete and insufficient to make him a citizen. The resolution created considerable excitement, but Mr. Finsett not being in the city, the truth of the allegation cannot be corroborated or contradicted.

A CONFERENCE AT MR. TILDEN'S HOUSE.

Gov. Tilden was waited upon last night at his residence by a number of politicians, to discuss the propriety of calling a national convention, to assemble in Washington during the counting of the Electoral vote on the 14th of February. The conference lasted to a late hour, and various subjects of a political nature were discussed. There was a difference of opinion among the gentlemen present about the advisability of issuing the call for the convention, some contending that such a large assemblage of private citizens would look like intimidation, and that no possible good could result from such an unusual proceeding. Gov. Tilden was reticent in expressing his opinion pro or con on the subject under debate. It was understood that nothing final was determined upon in consequence of the absence of Congressman Hewitt, who had not arrived in time from Washington to be present at the conference.

THE CAPITAL POLICE BOARD.

THE SPECIAL INVESTIGATION BY THE HOUSE COMMITTEE—TESTIMONY OF THE DETECTIVES.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—Detective McDevitt was cross-examined this afternoon by Judge Wilson, counsel for Murtagh, before the House Committee engaged in the special investigation of the Police Board of this District. The following questions were asked and answered:

Q.—Have you at any time in the city gambled within two years? A.—I decline to answer; that is my private business as a detective, and I do not propose to "give it away" to newspapers; it has nothing to do with the Whitthorne conspiracy case, and therefore I decline to answer.

Mr. Le Moyne, Chairman of the committee—It is the opinion of the committee that you should answer, unless it would tend to criminate you.

Detective McDevitt—It will only show why I went there, and will open a new investigation; I know the object of asking the question; it is to force my detective business before the public.

Judge Wilson said that the United States statutes decided that even if his answer did criminate him, he must answer. Mr. Le Moyne thought the witness should answer the question.

McDevitt—I still decline; counsel for the Republican wants to draw me out, so as to increase their subscription; if I answer it will lead to asking why I went and for whom I went.

Q.—You speak of the Whitthorne conspiracy. It takes more than one man to make a conspiracy. Name who was in it. A.—William A. Murtagh; I don't know who was behind him; you are trying to get away from the Whitthorne conspiracy to distract the public mind from it; I propose to keep you up to it.

Mr. Wilson—You will be kept up to it. Witness said he knew of gambling-houses, and gave the location of several of them.

Detective Miller was also examined, his testimony corroborating that of Major Richards and McDevitt, concerning Murtagh's alleged plot for inveigling Congressman Whitthorne into a house of ill-repute.

George O. Miller, another member of the detective force, was then examined. He testified that Major Richards informed him that Mr. Murtagh desired to have Congressman Whitthorne enticed into some disreputable house and then arrested; Richards privately told him to let it appear that he [Miller] was working to carry out this plan, as Murtagh was then superior officer, &c., but Miller declined and said to Richards that he was not willing even to appear to be engaged in such a business. He never spoke to Murtagh about the matter except once, when he saw Murtagh and Richards standing together, and Richards said, "There is Miller now." Murtagh smiled at Miller and said, "I want you to attend to that business." Miller inferred that he meant to business concerning Whitthorne. In reply to a question whether he knew of any attempt to use the police force for corrupt purposes, Miller testified that during the pendency of the suit of William McGarraban against Murtagh for libel in 1870, after the jury had been sworn in Murtagh met witness near the court-house and asked him if he knew any of the jurymen; witness replied that he thought not, but he had not yet seen a list; thereupon Murtagh said that if witness could reach any of them in his favor he would pay any expenses that might be incurred; subsequently he met Murtagh in company with Richards, and Murtagh asked him how matters were getting on; witness replied, "Smoothly;" he returned this answer because he did not wish to offend Murtagh, his superior officer; he, however, took no steps in the matter; never received any money from Murtagh, and never attempted to approach any juryman; he informed Major Richards of all this. On cross-examination Miller admitted that he had been in conference on the 1st of January in Col. Cook's office with Cook, Richards, McDevitt, and others on the subject of this investigation, and also admitted that, so far as he [Miller] was concerned, he had taken part in that conference with a view to "getting even with Murtagh," who had unjustly attacked him in his paper.

GOSSIP FROM LONDON.

THEATRICAL AND LITERARY NOTES.

THE OLD YEAR AND THE NEW—ENGLAND UNDER WATER—MANAGER HOLLINGSHEAD AND THE BROOKLYN DISASTER—SI SLOCUM AND THE OLYMPIC THEATRE—THE CHRISTMAS PANTOMIMES—NEW BOOKS AND NEW PUBLISHERS—"THE ENGLISH POLICY IN THE EAST"—STORY OF AN IMPERIAL CHRISTMAS TREE.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

LONDON, Sunday, Dec 31, 1876.

The old year is going out in a flood, except where it is taking its departure amid snow-drifts and blocked-up railways. England is under water from John O'Groat's to Land's End. Scotland has kept up the season-able character of the time with snow-storms that have half buried a couple of railway trains. During the last three months we have had every variety of temperature, but not one fine day. Is it surprising that drunkenness is on the increase? "Why, lor love yer honor," said a cab-driver to the writer yesterday, "we'd simply 'ave our werry souls washed out of us if we didn't check the rain with a drop o' gin now and then." While it is morally certain that drink is the curse of England, one can almost excuse the miserable wretches who succumb to the demon in weather like this. Two hundred men and women were brought before the magistrates in London the day after Christmas Day, and fined in various sums of money and periods of imprisonment for being drunk and disorderly. A brace of Her Majesty's servants of the Post Office were imprisoned for being incapably drunk in the streets while delivering the mails. A respectable old lady got drunk on Christmas Eve and was burned to death, while on the same festive occasion several fatal assaults are reported from the country. To complete the characteristic record of the season, the great Northern Railway has killed half-a-dozen holiday-seekers and maimed some twenty others. The incessant rain is spreading the small-pox which reappeared in London a few months ago. Several new hospitals have been opened to accommodate the increasing number of patients. Seventy-six people died under the affliction of this fell disorder last week. And thus the old year, which has brought financial disaster upon nearly every class of the community, goes out with a wail and a cry! The advent of the new monarch does not inspire one with much hope. He will come in armed to the teeth, emblematic of our boasted civilization. The new year will be attended by an army waiting the word of command. Our poets sing the glories of progress; our parsons preach good will to man and peace on earth; our educationalists boast of the splendid march of knowledge; but art and science, eloquence, poetry—all are turned in one direction. "Blood, Iago, blood." is the universal cry. All Europe is in arms. The inventor who can create the deadliest weapon is favored of Kings and Princes. The Minister who can intrigue most successfully in the building up of military alliances is popular with Courts and Cabinets. The poet who sings of war and glory is crowned with bays. The preacher who fans the flame of religious intolerance, even unto death, is listened to and applauded. The book that treats of Ottoman and Christian is most popular in the market. The orator whose words are flavored with gunpowder boasts of enthusiastic audiences. All Europe seems ready for a general dance of death, waiting in this last hour of 1876 to present the genius of 1877 with a naked sword—and yet Christianity has been civilizing the world for 1,800 years.

THE BROOKLYN FIRE AND THE THEATRES.

Mr. John Hollingshead, lessee of the Gaiety Theatre, has written to the Times, attacking the Lord Chamberlain for unnecessarily alarming the public by issuing a series of regulations suggested by the Brooklyn calamity, and publishing the orders to the world. He says the regulations should have been enforced first and published afterward. I am inclined to agree with Mr. Hollingshead, and the public will be benefited if his letter proves an incentive to official action. Mr. Hollingshead's theatre is notoriously unsafe. It has only one exit for stalls, boxes, and dress-circle, and, as they leave the theatre, the occupants of the best seats all meet at one point, some coming up and some going down stairs. A panic here would be certain death to hundreds. Apart from this drawback, the Gaiety is perhaps the prettiest and best-conducted theatre in London. It is the only house at which the regulation "no fees to attendants" is rigidly carried out. None of the theatres are doing great business. This period of the year is usually the harvest-time of managers, but they are nearly all complaining. They ascribe the comparatively thin houses to the weather, but they should set it down to the influence of the Brooklyn fire. So far as the weather goes, the mildness of the temperature is favorable to theatres. Mr. Hare, of the Court, tells me that "New Men and Old Acres" crowds his house nightly; but this theatre has now a regular constituency living on the under-ground railway, which lands them in warm, comfortable carriages at the very door, and carries them home again when the play is over. Not a single manager has had the sense to request Capt. Shaw, of the Fire Brigade, to inspect his house, point out its defects, and, said defects being remedied, procure a certificate to that effect and publish it. I wonder Mr. Hollingshead has not been equal to the emergency. His daughter, by the way, is going to leave the stage. She is a pretty young lady of 19. Without her father's consent she went into the profession and played small parts for a couple of years. She then obtained an engagement at the Court and made a distinguished success in Gilbert's unnatural play of "Broken Hearts." All the critics praised her. Even the new man on the Times gushed over the graceful young artiste. This was a year ago. Other pieces were produced, but Miss Bessie Hollingshead did not repeat her previous success. She had been overpraised. She grew discontented, and left the Court. It was a social and domestic triumph, however, to leave it for her father's theatre. She had become an actress in spite of him. It was delightful to receive an engagement at his hands for leading business. Mr. James Albery produced "The Man in Possession" at the Gaiety with Foote and Miss Hollingshead in the leading rôles. The play fell flat. All the papers joined in proclaiming it a failure, and they were equally unanimous in regarding Miss Bessie Hollingshead as unequal to the part which had been specially written for her. So the lady is going to leave the stage because she is tired of it, and because the work is too arduous. Everybody is unkind to her; the public is fickle; the profession is disagreeable. Pretty Penelope, we shall try and keep you before the footlights, nevertheless, even if we are compelled to revive that lugubrious piece of mock, sentimentality, "Broken Hearts."

THE FRAYNES IN LONDON.

"Si Slocum" is the bright particular apple of discord in artistic circles just now. The Fraynes, better known, they say, as "The Kentucky Rifle Team," having made their mark in the English provinces, have found a temporary home at the Olympic Theatre. With the exception of the Telegraph critic, the guardians of art in the press have denounced the entertainment as a degradation to the stage and a disgrace to the Metropolis; and the more they attack the management and the play, the more the public crowd the theatre. In the interest of your readers, I have just interviewed Mr. George Coleman, the acting manager, with the following result:

Q.—The critics have jumped upon you at last? A.—We beg to thank them for their attention.

Q.—It is an odd kind of show, nevertheless; everybody shooting everybody else. A.—Odd! Of course. Sir, it is the funniest thing out. Frayne is really not a bad actor in his way. He ladles his words out in a strong Yankee dialect and strikes wonderful attitudes; but there is a certain rough merit in the performance. Taken as a whole, it is the most amusing thing I have ever seen, even at the East-endest of East End theatres.

Q.—Then you are not surprised that the critics should complain, when one remembers the classic triumphs of the Olympic, the once favorite theatre of the Queen and the Prince consort? A.—No; but we have made a little money, and we had already made sufficient sacrifices to dramatic sentiment. Now, would you believe it, for the last six nights we have had the most aristocratic audiences ever collected together in this or any other theatre?

Q.—I heard that your stalls and boxes had been full, and your pit and gallery very thinly occupied. A.—Last week, Sir, we had half the peerage here—Dukes, lords, Baronets, and their families. Yes, Sir, titled ladies, Duchesses and Marchionesses; and, what is more, they sat the piece out and enjoyed the shooting. It was a new sensation to them—an East End play in a West End theatre. Will you take a cup of tea?

I did take a cup of tea. Mr. Coleman's room is not the kind of palatial apartment which obtains in New-York. It is a small square room, at the top of the usual narrow flight of stairs which belongs to London theatres. Specimens of the week's posters adorn the walls. A portrait of Miss Fowler, the former manageress, adorns the mantel-shelf, and Mr. Henry Neville flaunts his sword on an adjacent panel, as Don Cæsar de Bazan. Mr. Coleman is a small, genial, blue-eyed, amiable fellow, whom everybody likes, and he is the principal adviser of Lord Londesborough, who enters while we are at tea, and talks quietly about the weather. His lordship is the capitalist of the theatre, and was the partner of Boucicault in the "Batrèd and Bijou" venture. He is a tall, good-looking blonde English gentleman. It was at his house in Scarborough where the Prince of Wales contracted that fever which nearly killed him a year or two ago. Lord Londesborough was the patron of Miss Fowler when she managed this theatre. He is now the friend of Mr. Henry Neville, though it is said that Mr. Charles Reade has placed a sum of money at the disposition of the management. The theatrical journals this week state that the new drama which is to be produced at this house is by Mr. Robert Buchanan. It is not. The piece is a dramatization of The Queen of Connaught, a novel of considerable merit which was published last season. It is from the pen of Mr. Buchanan's sister in law, and she has turned it into a play. Mr. Buchanan read it to the actors last week. There are three strong parts in it, which are to be severally played by Miss Cavendish, Mr. Henry Neville, and Mr. Flocton. "I think it will be a success," said the manager, over our last cup of tea, "but one never knows what will happen; the piece we count on for 'a go' generally turns out a failure."

VARIOUS ENTERTAINMENTS.

There are 26 theatres proper (apart from variety halls, concert-rooms, &c.,) open in London and regularly advertised every day. At 14 of these pantomime and extravaganza represent the staple entertainment. Among these the most successful are "Robinson Crusoe," at Covent Garden; the "Forty Thieves," at Drury Lane: "Sinbad the Sailor," at the Crystal Palace; "Little Goody Two Shoes," at the Adelphi; "Open Sesame," at the Standard, and the "Invisible Prince," at the Globe. The Vokes Family represent the life and soul of the Drury Lane pantomime. Mr. Chatterton has scored a special success at the Adelphi in making "Goody Two Shoes" a children's pantomime, played by children, for children, and only performed in the afternoon. The two little ones who have been spoken most about by the critics are the children of Mr. Grattan, a litterateur of some standing. At night, between the first piece and the "Shaughraun," an infantile American called "Baby Benson" is proving an attraction. Mr. George Conquest, the proprietor of the Grecian Theatre, is a very clever contortionist, and has been in the habit for years past of representing in his pantomime the part of a monster fish or bird. This year he has converted himself into an octopus, and with startling effect. Poor fellow, it was touching to hear him talk of his lost child, whom I paid him a visit a few evenings back in his dressing-room. She was only 17, and, to use his own words, "as pretty as a picture." Six months ago she married Mr. Beard, a gentleman of position in the city. Four weeks since she died, and then everybody remembered that for the last ten years she had been a fairy in the Grecian pantomime. "And so the ball rolls on in sunshine and in shadow."

A FIGHTING MANAGER.

A traveler passing through the ancient city of York one day last week might have witnessed a novel breach of the peace. One of the most famous of old English theatres is situated at York, under the shadow of the most famous of cathedrals. Mr. John Coleman has been the lessee of the theatre for many years, in spite of the machinations of a Mr. Waddington, who manufactures pianos beneath those grand old walls which bore the brunt of battle during the Wars of the Roses. When Mr. Coleman came to grief over the Queen's Theatre in London, Mr. Waddington obtained from one of the trustees a provisional agreement to sell him the lease. Meanwhile Mr. Coleman got a "backer" to outbid him, and secured his property again by a regular and proper assignment of the lease, ratified by the Corporation of York, to which body the theatre belongs. Before this latter arrangement was completed, however, Mr. Waddington got possession of the theatre by force, and in this wise: Coleman, Mr. Sefton Parry, and Coleman's manager—Mr. John Chute—had just left the theatre, the original lessee with the keys in his pocket. They had not walked many yards before they met a dozen men, with divers weapons, marching toward the theatre. The managerial instinct divined a forcible entry. Supported by his two friends, Coleman rushed back to the theatre and planted himself in front of the doors. He was right. The men were the minions of Waddington. They commanded Coleman to make way. The stalwart actor did; he hit out right and left. His fists found their way to the countenances of the piano-forte makers, three of whom were soon sprawling in the mud. Mr. Sefton Parry got a crack on the head and bolted. Mr. Chute made a gentle show of fight, and nearly strangled the smallest of the assailants, but being reminded of the odds against him, retired with a black eye. Meanwhile, the giant form of Coleman towered above an angry group that pressed him on all sides. He fought like a lion, and did not desist even when a second army came up led by a bully with a crowbar. Coleman had been pretty hard hit in London, both by critics and creditors, and this kind of physical exercise in his own defense was pleasant to the jaded client of order-loving lawyers. With an oath that might have brought the avenging towers of York about his ears, he leaped upon the man with the crowbar, and in another moment the iron weapon was flourished above his head. Luckily for his assailants and himself, the vagabonds fell back and gave Chute and Sefton time to use their influence upon Coleman, who, under their earnest entreaties, consented to go and consult the authorities and allow Waddington to break into the theatre. The Police arrived on the scene when the excitement was at an end. They are wise men. They know when it is safest to put in an appearance. The Town Clerk, with all the powers of the corporation, called upon Waddington to give up possession of the theatre. He defied them and gave a performance. They summoned him, and fined him for acting without a license. For the second offense the penalty is $100 a day. Still he goes on. Coleman has served him with writs for libel, a writ of ejectment, and summons for pretty well every crime under the sun; but the piano-maker does not budge an inch. At least one lively suit out of the lot must come to trial.

THE NEWEST BOOKS.

Although books and pamphlets relating to the Eastern question are just now almost monopolizing the market, there are a few other volumes, belonging more particularly to the realms of peace, which are not wholly neglected. Art in Ornament and Dress is one of these. It is translated from the French of Charles Blanc and published by Messrs. Chapman & Hall. Messrs. Scribner, of New-York, have purchased the first right for the States, but three editions of the book are to be published in New-York. The work is a delightful contribution to the literature of art. M. Blanc pays one of the most flattering compliments to the Maker of all things in his introduction to his fascinating chapters on "Personal Adornment." He says: "It is scarcely credible, but it is with bare lines, with stiff geometry that the study of personal adornment must begin; that beautiful woman, who, unknown to herself, is inclosed in a network of inflexible parallels like a bird in its cage—an invisible trellis-work of horizontal and vertical lines—retards the free play of her beauty. She appears to have been drafted by a Supreme Designer, who, effacing the right angles which he had traced to construct her figure, only left the grace of it to be seen." But the most notable work of the season is Mr. Planché's Cyclopædia of Costume. It is issued by Messrs. Chatto & Windus, not simply on its merits, but as a sort of example of their enterprise and capacity as publishers. Chatto & Windus bought the business founded by the late John Camden Hotten, who was, I believe, an American. Mark Twain christened him Hottentot, because he published that renowned humorist's books without his consent. Messrs. Chatto & Windus scattered to the four winds all the little publications of their predecessor, and set up for high-class publishers. In justification of their pretensions they publish, among other books, this complete and exhaustive treatise from the pen of the best living authority, "James Robinson Planché, Esq., Somerset Herald of England." It is lavishly illustrated with pictures in color, text cuts, and designs by the thousand, illustrative of contemporaneous fashions on the Continent, and elucidative of the general history of the costumes of the principal countries of Europe. It is generally acknowledged in the trade, though somewhat grudgingly, that Chatto & Windus have established their right to stand in the front rank of London publishing houses. Their latest enterprise is the purchase of the Gentleman's Magazine, which, under the vaunted management of Grant & Co. and a new editor, has run down from a splendid circulation to a couple of thousand a month! Chatto and Windus hope to lift it to the position it held when Messrs. Bradbury & Evans were the publishers, and it is possible they may. They have almost restored the cover of Cave's day, with the picture of St. John's Gate at the top. The firm are also proprietors of Belgravia, which is edited by Mr. Chatto himself, who is said to be a gentleman of literary attainments and editorial experience. If he edits the editor of The Gentleman's, there may be some hope for that once revered publication. Grant & Co. offered the magazine to Mr. W. Hepworth Dixon, but that wise author preferred to write for it, and he is contributing some excellent articles on "Palestine." Mr. Dixon has just finished his first novel. He is now reading the proofs, and a few weeks hence his book will be published. The author is "an artist in style." He has written the story three times over. Every sentence has been polished and repolished. Let us hope the polish is not excessive. The work was originally written as a play, but Mr. Dixon, seeing no chance for its immediate production, has turned it into a novel. The scenes of the fiction alternate between England and America.

It is strikingly significant, however, that the book which has made the most immediate and decisive success of the season is England's Policy in the East, by the Baron de Worms, author of The Austro-Hungarian Empire and other semi-historical works. It was only published a fortnight ago. I have not yet seen a single review of it in any daily or weekly paper; and yet the first edition has been exhausted. The Government has expressed its approval of the work, and the publishers have already received sufficient orders to exhaust the second edition, which will be announced on Monday. The book is illustrated with a carefully prepared map, and by the time this letter is published will be the talk of political society in England. It is not unworthy of note that the information which I gave to your readers on Dec. 11, as to England's necessary action in case of war, is singularly verified and supported by the Baron de Worms. The idea has got abroad lately that England would content herself with the occupation of Constantinople; but this would be child's play in face of such a war as Russia would wage on the Turk; and it is satisfactory to me on the score of information that the views set forth in THE TIMES, in New-York, are the views inspired in official circles and printed in London weeks after my readers are in possession of them. Another sensation work is in the press on The Bulgarian Atrocities.

They are telling a good story in Berlin in reference to the copy of the speech from the throne from which the German Emperor read the message to Parliament at the end of the session. Prince Bismarck sent it to the Emperor in a beautiful velvet portfolio. At the palace it was received by the flunkey in chief, who, being an intelligent German, said to himself: "Ah, one other present for the royal Christmas tree," and forthwith placed it under the tree with a score of other tributes; for it seems the Emperor has a tree of his own which is religiously lighted up on Christmas eve. As the time drew on for reading the speech to the Senate, the Emperor made inquiries and the document could not be found. A special messenger was sent to Prince Bismarck. His courier explained to whom he had given the portfolio. Then the intelligent flunkey was hunted up, and he at once discovered the missing State paper. The fire-eating Prince did not have him killed. He and the King laughed heartily over the incident, and his Majesty told the story to the Imperial party assembled round the Christmas tree. History is quickly made nowadays. That speech has been spoken. It is already forgotten. What will the King have to say at the end of the next session of Parliament?

A MOST WONDERFUL WINE.

THE "ROSENWEIN" OF BREMEN—A VINTAGE REPUTED TO BE MORE THAN 250 YEARS OLD—A CALCULATION OF THE VALUE OF A FEW HUNDRED BOTTLES—A SINGLE DROP WORTH NEARLY HALF A MILLION DOLLARS.

The London News of Dec. 30 is responsible for the following story. A mark is about equal to 24 cents of our money: "Some of the Deputies assembled at the German Reichstag have been trying to lighten the severe burdens of imperial legislation by the institution of a series of relaxations of a special character. We may easily believe that the first of these, which was called by some a 'Fisch-Austelinng,' and by others a 'Fischessen,' was suggested by the time-honored custom of English politicians at the close of the Parliamentary session. The exhibition of fish was followed by an exhibition of wine. The originators of the feast called it a German 'Weinprobe,' and invited contributors from all parts of the Empire (perhaps even from Hamburg) to send specimens of their wines, merely stipulating that, as in the case of the fish, so in the case of the wines, the contributed articles should be disposed of by the judges. The invitation was very widely responded to, and the tables in the new Architectenhaus were loaded with bottles from all the famous districts of the Rhine and the Mosel, the Saar and the Ahr, the Main and the Neckar. Upon each table, in the position of honor, stood a small bottle of the most wonderful wine in the whole world, the Rosenwein out of the Rathskeller of Bremen. This wine, the property of the Municipal Council of that Hanseatic city, is reputed to be more than two and a half centuries old. It takes its name from a bronze bas-relief of roses which surmounts it, and is said to have arrived in Bremen in the year 1624. Each little bottle of this celebrated hock bore round its neck an inscription which professed to give an exact calculation of its value: 'An eight-ohm nuick of this wine cost in 1624 300 gold reichsthalers. After the lapse of 221 years (in the year 1845) the stück of eight ohm cost 421,607,100,000 gold reichsthalers; one ohm (equal to 180 bottles) cost 52,700,887,500 gold thalers; one bottle cost 292,782,708 gold thalers and 24 groschen; one glass (eight glasses to the bottle) cost 36,597,838 gold thalers 39 groschen; one single drop (1,000 drops to a glass) was worth 36,597 gold thalers 60 groschen.' The value has gone on increasing at a rate which appals the valuer. In the year 1859, a drop of Rosenwein was worth 146,391 gold thalers; in 1873 the wine had risen to the price of 585,565 gold thalers 24 groschen per drop, while at the present moment the value of a single drop is reckoned at 1,932,366 marks of the new imperial coinage. If it were possible to fix a standard of value between the whole of the toll of the German fatherland and the vats of the Bremen Rosenwein, we doubt if the former would fetch money sufficient to purchase the latter. The honor of receiving a bottle of this aged hock is more literally 'priceless' than any other honor in the world, and this honor was bestowed once every year by the City of Bremen upon Goethe. The labels on the bottles of Rosenwein in the Weinprobe did not state what we have heard, alas, to be a fact—namely, what even this precious drink is regularly adulterated. Near to it, in the same division of the cellar of the Rathhaus of Bremen, stand 12 vats called the Twelve Apostles, each of which holds a Rhine wine made in the eighteenth century. Whenever a bottle of the seventeenth century Rose wine is drawn from the cask, a bottle of Peter wine or Judas wine is poured in; so that the quantity of the Rosenwein never decreases, while its quality is constantly under change."

HER WEAK POINT.

From the Detroit Free Press.

Yesterday morning a woman, living on Napoleon street, was seen on the walk in front of the gate heaving the snow right and left, and she had only got fairly settled to work when a boy lounged up and remarked:

"I'll clear off the walk for 10 cents."

"I guess I'm able to do it," she replied.

"But see how it looks," he continued. "Here you are, a perfect lady in look and action, highly educated, and yet you grovel in the dust, as it were, to save the pitiful sum of 10 cents."

"You grovel along and mind your own business," she curtly replied, still digging away.

"It's worth 10 cents," he said, as he leaned against the fence, "but I'm a feller with some sentiment in my bosom. Now, we'll say five cents, or just enough to cover wear and tear on my bones. Give me the shovel and you go in, get on your seal-skin sacque and best jewelry, and while I work you stand out here and boss around, and talk as if you owned the biggest half of North America, while I had nothing, and was in debt for that."

She looked at him sharply, saw that he was in earnest, and when she passed over the snow-shovel she put two nickels into his hand. He looked after her as she went in, and then sadly mused:

"Oh! Flattery, the surest victim is a woman homely enough for a snow-scow."

THE KINGDOM OF ITALY.

NOTES FROM THE CITY OF NAPLES.

THE CHRISTMAS HOLIDAY SEASON—THE VICE OF GAMBLING ENCOURAGED BY THE GOVERNMENT—STREET RAILWAYS—COTTON GOODS WANTED IN ITALY—A CHANCE FOR AMERICAN EXPORTERS—THE PEASANT CLASS—THE MANIA FOR CARRIAGES.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NAPLES, Friday, Dec. 29, 1876.

The weather has continued to be unconscionably bad, but in spite of it the Neapolitans have not quite lost the enjoyment of the holiday season. They have an unusual mode of celebrating Christmas here, and such as we should hardly expect in a population accustomed to the pageantries of church ceremonies furnished in the past for every occasion in great variety. The burning of gunpowder, in all the forms in which it can be compounded, makes both night and day as perilous and as hideous as the celebration of the national anniversary to quiet citizens in one of the great American towns. Here, also, the combustion of the nitric mixture whizzes in rockets, spatters in Catharine wheels, snaps and cracks in paste-board petards, goes off with a terrible explosion in guns and mortars, and lights up whole streets with the blue, orange, and crimson of Bengal fires. The municipal authority has tried to put a stop to these almost reckless excesses of powder-burning, as many accidents, and some of them serious, every year are recorded. But the people still have their way, and the Mayor has to submit, for, as a journal here says, "if the penalties prescribed were inflicted, half the population would be in prison." The inhabitants of the quarter of Santa Lucia, with their less abundant means, seem to spend as freely as their better-conditioned neighbors for this noisy diversion. I suspect that some of the money comes from games of chance, for I have noticed that the Government lottery shops have been much frequented. Gaming, in one form or another, is a common vice in Italy, and is not confined to any particular class. It is a great social evil, and produces here, quite as much as anywhere else, the results of a waste of time, indolence, and improvidence. The Government, with its lottery system for revenue, is its principal promoter, and gives a bad example to the country. It is to be hoped that in time a better compensation for labor, with the savings bank and popular instruction, will take the place of the public lottery and the habit of gaming.

The Naples railroads have been unusually active during these days of festivity, which shows their great utility even to an agricultural population. On Christmas Day, according to the newspapers, not less than 43,000 passengers rode over them, coming in or going out of the city. Naples has also introduced the American system of street railways, and within a year, or a little more, half a dozen miles of rail have been laid along the water front, to Portici and other places. The price of movement over them is not yet so low as it might be; but they seem nevertheless, to be growing in favor with the people.

Seeing what an important market Italy now is, united, as all its ports are, under a uniform commercial system, the thought constantly recurs, Why should not the United States derive greater advantage than before, by finding sale here on a larger scale for some of its leading products? There is a great consumption here of cotton goods, and for certain qualities the United States is in condition to furnish them at a lower price than they can be sold by any other country. My attention, within a year or two, has been repeatedly called to this fact. Already a large commerce in tobacco, petroleum, and other articles is carried on, which in value will, without doubt, be augmented. Italy has olive-oil, fruits, wines, and other products that are wanted in America, and in which a profitable exchange can be carried on. Some of the wines of the South of Italy, not less than those of the North, seem to be well suited to our market, and, although yet on a limited scale, I am told that successful experiments have been made with their introduction. Some of the kinds of wine peculiar to the region about Naples, such as Falerno, Lachryma-Christi, Capri, &c., are suited to the taste of some of us, and traveling Americans have become familiar with them. Although the vintage this year is not distinguished for great abundance, yet the quality of the wine is good and the price is not high. The colored marbles of Benevento must before long find a market in the United States, with the merits and advantages which they possess of beauty, cheapness, and facility of shipment. The cultivation of the orange and the grape are no doubt before many years to become important interests in the United States, and ten-fold of what is now imported can be furnished to other countries, both of fruit and wine. The time must come when the Southern States must add to their present restricted number of agricultural products others suited to the conditions of the climate and soil, and the new kinds of skill in cultivation which must be invited into that region of country. From all parts of Italy a vine-dressing emigrant population can be furnished, which, introduced into the United States, would have a much greater value to the country than the peddlers of chestnuts and other small commodities that hang about American cities. There are hundreds of thousands of such laborers here, who are sufficiently badly off, and wish to better their condition. As the physical fitness of the peasant class for work and endurance we have proofs enough in the good muscle which comes from the rural districts to fill up the ranks of the Army. In the past the emigration from Italy has been badly directed, or has been in the hands of agents incapable of acting honestly, or according to the rules of humanity. Ignorance needs to be enlightened by such means as can be furnished by a systematic organization. Missionaries are sent here, and much money is spent, to give Christian knowledge to the common classes of the cities, and an effort might, with quite as much wisdom, be made to put the more worthy contadino population in a way to improve their fortunes, while adding a new industrial element to the working forces of sections of country having large undeveloped resources. The subject is worth the consideration both of philanthropists and those who give attention to studies of political economy. If vine-growing becomes a common pursuit in America, and light wines are furnished, as they are here, at a price lower than that of beer, or alcoholic liquors, why should not the same result follow there as here, where gross intemperance is almost unknown.

The weather has cleared at last, and a sharp wind is blowing out of the north-west. Vesuvius and the mountain ridge above Sorento are covered with a thin veil of snow, and the sea is once more lighted up with a cheerful smile. The Island of Capri is no longer hid behind a scowling cloud, and vessels begin once more to find their way into port. In the afternoon the movement of fashionable equipages on the Chiaia and on the road to Posilipo has a look of animation, like that of a great capital city. Life here is one of sensations, and not of meditations; and now, more than ever, since from Italy has been eliminated the moonish elegy, the throughout and anti-ritualists got mixed, and a short pugilistic encounter was the result. The temporary lull inside was broken by a gentleman asking in a loud voice, "Where is the Bishop?" and this was followed by groans for his Lordship." For a time there was a panic among the congregation. Ladies in a fainting condition were assisted out of the church, hats were crushed, sticks used on people, and again the Police appeared on the scene, but really took no action in the matter. In the meantime a reinforcement of a Sergeant and a dozen Constables arrived from the Deptford Police Station, and their services were required to keep in order the disorderly crowd outside. During the remaining portion of the communion service knots of men discussed at the bottom of the church the question of the hour, when one man declared in favor of "this only being a rascally Romish service," while another rejoined, "it is true Catholic worship." The discussions were carried on amid the utmost levity, and with jokes and laughter at the solemn moment of what ritualists call the "consecration. The service, in which incense was copiously used, came to an end with the benediction. In the choir during service were Rev. A. H. Mackonochie, Rev. C. J. Maxwell, (St. Alban's,) Rev. J. W. Bescoe, (St. Peter's, London Docks,) Rev. W. Crouch, &c. A number of men remained in the church close to the screen, and fearing that mischief was intended to be done to the "altar" decoration, the choristers formed a cordon round the altar for its protection. The communicants were only three in number—two ladies and one gentleman—and except that both elements were administered, there appeared but very slight difference between the administration of the sacrament by Mr. Tooth's curate and the celebration of the mass at a Roman Catholic pro-cathedral. At the close of the service, as the leading supporters of Mr. Tooth passed from the church to the vicarage and back again, they were greeted with such cries as "Bodyguard of the traitor!" "Go over to Rome!" Mr. Mackonochie's appearance was the signal for a general uproar, and he would have been "bonneted" by the crowd who were closing on him had not the Police formed a guard around him, and conducted him to a place of safety. When Mr. Tooth came out with his attendants, escorted between two friends, groans, hisses, and shouts were raised against him. It is stated (according to a Central News telegram) that Mr. Tooth has organized a society of working men for the protection of public worship, who are ready to do his bidding.

The evening service was interrupted in a similar fashion, but less violence was employed.

THE NEW-HAMPSHIRE CANDIDATES.

The Concord correspondent of the Boston Journal writes that Hon. Benjamin F. Prescott, the Republican candidate for Governor of New-Hampshire, is a native of that State, and 44 years of age. He fitted for college at Phillips Exeter Academy, and in 1856 graduated at Dartmouth College. He read law, and was admitted to the Bar at Concord in 1859. He practiced his profession in Concord until 1861, when he became associate editor of the Independent Democrat, which position he filled until 1866. Afterward he was for a number of years a special agent of the United States Treasury Department, and was given the general superintendence of various branches of Customs. Mr. Prescott has been several times elected Secretary of State, which position he now fills. He has been long known as one of the most active and efficient of the Republican managers in New-Hampshire, and for many years he has been Secretary of the State Committee. As an agriculturist he is well known to the farmers of the commonwealth, his elegant residence and fine estate of 300 acres at Epping having a famous reputation for fine stock and superior products. He is a gentleman of commanding presence, of superior scholarship and high executive and administrative ability, of spotless character and eminent talents.

Dr. Granville P. Conn, the candidate for Railroad Commissioner, is also a native of the State, and forty-five years of age. He was educated at the Norwich, Vt., Military University, for a Civil Engineer, but his health failing him, he studied medicine, and graduated at the Dartmouth Medical College in 1855. Afterward he was located in his profession at Randolph, Vt., and was Surgeon of the Twelfth Regiment of Volunteers from that State in the late war. Dr. Conn has resided quite a number of years in Concord, where he is very eminent in his profession and popular as a citizen. He was the candidate for Railroad Commissioner in 1874.

RITUALISM IN ENGLAND.

RIOTOUS PROCEEDINGS AT ST. JAMES' CHURCH, HATCHAM—A PROTESTANT HYMN SUNG TO A ROMAN CATHOLIC AIR—A CHURCH SCENE PROBABLY WITHOUT A PARALLEL.

The Scotsman of Jan. 1 says: "Yesterday scenes took place at the morning service, both inside and immediately outside the Church of St. James, Hatcham, which probably have no parallel in the annals of English Protestant worship in recent years. The hour fixed for the commencement of the service was, as usual, 11 o'clock, but the church was filled at 10:20, and at 10:45 there was such a rush of people through the doors that the passages up the centre aisles and those at the sides became completely blocked by men and women who could find no seats. Outside those who could not gain admission stood in groups at the top of the road which leads to St. James', waiting what appeared to be considered certain—the arrival of the Bishop of Rochester (Dr. Claughton.) The crowd waited in vain, for the Bishop (who, it is stated, has vanished in the hands of the Hatcham concern, and places the onus of action upon Canon Penzance) never appeared. In the church the service was commenced punctually at 11, the candles on the "altar" being lighted, the vases filled with choice flowers, giving a highly decorative aspect to what was the communion table, and the Vicar, Mr. Tooth, robed in alb and white chasuble, with cloth of gold embroidery at the back, standing in front of the 'altar' ready to commence the service. At the bottom of the church, close to the entrance doors, was a knot of young men and boys, who mounted the forms, and at the very beginning of the service gave very audible vent to their opposition to the ritualistic practices of Mr. Tooth. One of them commenced a verse of a comic song, but was shamed into silence by those around him. The following cries were freely indulged in: 'Come in and see the pantomime,' 'Why don't you go to Rome?' 'This is not Protestant worship,' &c. At the beginning of the Nicene Creed, 'I believe in one God,' a voice exclaimed, 'No you don't.' The church-wardens, Messrs. Broom and Tillmpton, endeavored by persuasion to bring the disturbers to order, but a sterner remedy was required to preserve the decency of public worship in a church where the vast majority of the congregation were at one with the Vicar. At the accustomed stage in the service, Mr. Tooth divested himself of his 'alb,' and of his chasuble, and preceded by a cross-bearer, went into the pulpit and preached a sermon, in which, as on Christmas Day, he dwelt upon the self-restraint exercised by the Blessed Virgin Mary, and spoke also of that virtue practiced by St. Joseph, abstaining to take the lead in, or to assert themselves. He expressed an opinion that the Church of God had a more glorious time in the future than she ever enjoyed in the past. He urged upon them all to be patient among themselves in their spiritual difficulties, for every day was bringing them fresh light and fresh knowledge. The Vicar was listened to almost without interruption, and his deep, sonorous voice was heard in every part of the church. It was when he again put on his chasuble and resumed the service that a real and serious disturbance took place. Far down in the church, when the choir commenced singing a Christmas hymn to the well-known Roman Catholic air of Adeste Fideles, the tune being that of the Portuguese Mariners' Hymn, a serious row occurred, and from that time to the end of the service the lower part of the church was turned into a beargarden. One person, dressed like a gentleman, uttered aloud some offensive words as the signal for a general uproar, and he would have been "bonneted" by the crowd who were closing on him had not the Police formed a guard around him, and conducted him to a place of safety. When Mr. Tooth came out with his attendants, escorted between two friends, groans, hisses, and shouts were raised against him. It is stated (according to a Central News telegram) that Mr. Tooth has organized a society of working men for the protection of public worship, who are ready to do his bidding.

The evening service was interrupted in a similar fashion, but less violence was employed.

TENNESSEE'S EX-REBEL SENATOR.

The Knoxville (Tenn.) Chronicle of the 10th inst. thus expresses its views of the election of a rampant ex-rebel to the United States Senate: "No stronger and more striking illustration of the lenience of our Government could possibly be given than the election of ex-Gov. Isham G. Harris to the United States Senate. Sixteen years ago he was endeavoring with all his power to break up the Government. Jeff. Davis, the recognized leader of the rebellion, was not more devoted to the success of the Southern Confederacy than Isham G. Harris. His whole soul was wrapped up in the movement, and nothing that he could prevent was allowed to come in the way of its success. A large proportion of the people whom he will represent in the Senate were outlaws in his estimation, deserving the most summary treatment that arbitrary military tribunals could inflict, as a punishment for their opposition to his views and their devotion to a Government that he is now willing to serve in the capacity of a lawmaker. Scores of men whose friends and relatives are now to be represented by Gov. Harris were shot and hung and imprisoned while he was Governor because they were Union men. And now he says he has no regrets to express at the course he took during that dark and fearful period in our history. To that extent he is unrepentant. He doubtless believes yet that he was right, and that the victims of his oppression got only what they deserved. Gov. Harris is a man of ability, and we have no charge of personal corruption to make against him, but he is an extreme partisan, and when he makes up his mind to support a measure or a policy he will do it at any sacrifice. He is a dangerous man, and does not properly represent the political sentiments of a very large proportion of the people of Tennessee."

FROM VARIOUS QUARTERS.

A PRUSSIAN RAILWAY REGIMENT.

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "The military railway from Berlin to Zossen is used as a school of instruction for the 'railway regiment' which forms part of the Prussian Army, and by which it was constructed. This line is 28 miles long, and upon the same level as the Berlin and Dresden Railway, with which it has a junction, and terminates in the Forest of Zossen, close to the Polygon of Artillery. There are three stations on the line, which, though mainly used for military purposes, is open for ordinary traffic when nothing stands in the way. The management of the line is intrusted to the Colonel of the regiment, another field officer, and two Lieutenants, who are, as a matter of course, responsible to the Commander in Chief of the Army. The working of the line is effected by a staff formed out of the eight companies which compose the 'railway regiment,' and the staff is relieved every six months. There are 43 men employed upon the permanent way, under the control of five inspectors, the latter of whom are non-commissioned officers. At each station there is a station-master and assistant station-master, who are also non-commissioned officers, with more privates under their control. The telegraphic service is under the management of an officer, assisted by an inspector, who holds the rank of Sergeant. During the first year of working this line six non-commissioned officers passed their examination as engine-drivers, and six soldiers were taken into the service as stokers. There were eight non-commissioned officers appointed guards, and 16 pioneers as brakesmen. The engine-drivers and stokers are under the control of the head engineer, and the other servants under that of the general manager. They do not receive any special pay, but the non-commissioned officers and men who are absent from their garrison beyond a stated time are granted an extra allowance. In the course of the year 1875 this railway conveyed 41,074 soldiers from Berlin to the Polygon at Zossen."

A HUMAN BREAKWATER.

The London Builder says: The bursts of rain in the Carnatic are tremendous. As much as five inches of rain-fall in a single night is not unfrequent, and Sir A. Cotton has known as much as 19 inches of rain to fall in that time. CURRENT LITERATURE.

THE POET IN THE CITY.

The Poet stood in the sombre town,
And spake to his heart, and said—
"O weary prison, devised by man!
O senseless place, and dead!"
His heart was sad, for afar he heard
The sound of the Spring's light tread.

He thought he saw in the pearly East
The pale March sun arise,
The happy housewife beneath the thatch,
With hand above her eyes,
Look out to the cawing rooks, that built
So near to the quiet skies.

Out of the smoke, and noise, and sin,
The heart of the Poet cried—
"O God! but to be Thy laborer there,
On the gentle hill's green side!
To leave the struggle of want and wealth,
And the battle of lust and pride!"

He bent his ear, and he heard afar
The growing of tender things,
And his heart broke forth with the travailing earth,
And shook with the tremulous wings
Of sweet brown birds that have never known
The dirge of the city's sins.

And later, when all the earth was green
As the Garden of the Lord,
Primrose opening her innocent face,
Cowslips scattered abroad,
Blue-bells mimicking Summer skies,
And the song of the thrush outpoured—

The changeless days were so sad to him
That the Poet's heart beat strong,
And he struggled as some poor caged lark,
And he cried, "How long, how long?
I have missed a Spring I can never see,
And the singing of birds is gone!"

But when the time of the roses came,
And the nightingale hushed her lay,
The Poet, still in the dusty town,
Went quietly on his way—
A poorer poet by just one Spring,
And a richer man by suffering.

CLAUDIA'S OFFERS.

BY W. O. STODDARD.

"It's all right, John, my boy," said Squire Chaplin, one Winter afternoon, as the two stood by their front gate, seeming to look at the splendid pair of grays the Squire had just driven up. "It's all right; only, perhaps, I ort to have told ye before. The new house'll be ready by hayin' time, and I don't mean to go inter it all alone by myself. Claudy'll be back from the city long afore that, and I fixed it all with the widder this very day."

"The widow? Mrs. Wayte?" exclaimed John, with a puzzled expression on his somewhat flushed countenance. "I don't exactly—"

"I see," interrupted his robust and rosy sire, "I'm allers a mixin' things. The widder, she said Claudy was allers a good, obedient sort of darter, and there'd be no manner of difficulty."

"Was you afraid Claudia might oppose the match?" said John, as his face cleared up a little.

"Not so much that, exactly," said the Squire, as he patted the nigh gray. "I'm right glad you're likely to be so sensible about it, but then you and Claudy did allers git on together pretty well. That's a good deal, now you've got to live in the same house together."

"No," said John, "I wouldn't mind that a bit."

"Reckon not, of course," half sighed the Squire, "but then I s'pose the widder'll have to come, too, and you and Lucy may find her in the way sometimes. I shant let her be hard on Lucy, if she is only a 'dopted darter. I aint a bit afeard but what Claudy'll be kind to Lucy."

"The widow come too," quoted John, doubtfully. "Must be I'm a little mixed myself."

"Why," exclaimed his father, "don't you see? If I marry Claudy, as the widder'n I've agreed, it won't do to leave her mother all alone up there on the hill. She'll have to come and live with us."

"Oh!" said John, as the flush returned, and he began to fumble with the gate latch. "So it's Claudia that's coming here, and not her mother?"

"Both on 'em. Didn't you hear what I said?" puffed the Squire. "Hullo, here's Lucy Ferrer. John, jest jump into the sleigh and give Lucy a good drive. She aint had one for a week."

It was a capital way to break off a conversation which had cost Squire Chaplin all the courage and patience in him, for he had more than a little respect for the good opinion of his heir, and he had half dreaded an explosion.

As for Lucy Ferrer, she had come out all ready, in her quiet, affectionate little way, with her mind set on a sleigh-ride. Neither father nor son, big and bluff as they were, had ever learned to deny much to the "bound girl," who had grown up into a daughter. She was so small and plain and quiet that neither of the strong men knew how much they habitually yielded to her.

Neither did she—nor did it occur to her very clearly that perhaps she ought not to have overheard so nearly all that they had been saying to one another.

Not that John had said much, but there was something in his manner as he sprang into the sleigh after Lucy, and whipped up the grays, that made her curl up close under the buffalo robe in her corner, and keep as still as a mouse until he should get ready to say something. She could think, however, as the sleigh slipped on so swiftly over the polished snow, and she could not help saying to herself:

"She must be a wonderful girl, to have everybody fall in love with her. Even Joe Roberts says he'll be sick if she don't come back soon, and he's only her mother's hired man. And now here's the Squire himself, and I half believe—"

"Lucy," said John, "are you warm enough?"

"Warm as toast, and the sleighing is splendid. I wanted a ride ever so much."

The plain little face was quite rosy with frost and gratitude as it looked into his, but John Chaplin's question had been almost purely "mechanical," and his thoughts were a hundred miles away.

At least that distance, for Claudia Wayte was spending the Winter with her aunt in the city, and even there she was developing the same peculiar capacity which made little Lucy Ferrer consider her such a "wonderful girl."

A girl after her mother's own hard and calculating heart, if that was what the widow had meant by "good and obedient;" and whatever else Claudia might be learning in fashionable society, keen perceptions of the value of her own personal attractions and the importance of this world's goods were not among her new acquisitions. All that sort of thing had been taught her from her childhood, and a very apt and intelligent scholar she had been.

The "Winter in the city" had been intended for a long one, and Mrs. Wayte was the woman of all others to endure with equanimity the absence of her beautiful daughter, considering on what errands she had gone. They by no means neglected each other, nevertheless, and the widow's next letter to Claudia fully redeemed her promise to the Squire.

There was, of course, no need to detail the advantages of a man who owned half the best land in the valley, and hardly a passing reference was made to his fifty years. What were they in a matter of that sort?

Beyond a doubt that letter had its influence upon Claudia's Winter; if in no other way, in imparting a species of independence and an increased self-valuation to the young belle's management of her campaign. She even half-displeased her aunt—so like her own mother in many things—by her apparent failure to close with one of several excellent opportunities.

"Do you think Mr. Bascom, for instance, will come for you up in the country?" asked the good lady.

"He has faithfully promised to, aunty," replied Claudia, "and I'm very sure he will come."

"Anybody else?"

"Perhaps—indeed, I think very likely. Anyhow, it's two months yet before I go home, and I must not be in too much of a hurry."

"I don't mind the others," said her aunt, seriously, "but Mr. Bascom is hardly a chance to be trifled with."

"Indeed, he is not," exclaimed Claudia. "I shall be very careful."

Within a day or two of that talk with his father, somehow, John Chaplin took the strangest fancy into his head.

In spite of all that anybody could say, he insisted on joining a party for the "Piney Woods." His talk was of big trees, bear, deer, moose, lumbering, and that sort of thing, and he came within an inch of stirring up the Squire's enthusiasm to go with him.

"I don't half blame ye, arter all," said the Squire. "I've had jist that fever when I was of your age, and many's the good time that came of it, too. All right, my boy, if you're set on it. Take good keer of yourself, and I'll stay at home and take keer of the stock and of Lucy."

And so the young man took his thoughts with him, closely sealed, into the fragrant solitudes of the northern forests, where all things, whether of toil or pleasure, seemed to be framed with special reference to such as he. If the frosty breath of the pines is full of healing, as is said, for the diseases of the body, why should not even more subtle discomforts be allayed among their healthful shades?

The Squire found himself somewhat lonely after his son's departure, and for a while he tried the experiment of spending his evenings with Mrs. Wayte. It was pleasant enough at first, especially as Claudia's mother was always ready with an extract from one of her daughter's letters, filled as they were with brilliant descriptions of city life and society. Pleasant letters, indeed, and now they were not wanting in kindly, though "maidenly" and guarded, messages to the Squire himself; but somehow they really failed to carry a feeling of discomfort to the mind of the village magnate. Even his "new house," half finished, over there among the maples, did not look as large or promise to be as fine as when work upon it was stopped by the arrival of cold weather.

The Squire had never in all his life had a glimpse into the world which Claudia was visiting until he obtained it through those letters. He would very much have preferred a day or so with his stalwart son, with axe and rifle and snow-shoes, and steeped in the magic of the pines, to all the glories of the fashionable "season."

"Mebbe it'll be hard for Claudy to settle down arter all that," was his comment one evening, and in spite of Mrs. Wayte's vigorous disclaimer, his visits became less frequent for a while.

Perhaps, he bethought himself that it was hardly fair to leave poor Lucy Ferrer so much alone at home.

Not that she was altogether alone, any more than that Mrs. Wayte read the Squire the entire contents of Claudia's letters, for there were other young men in the village besides John Chaplin, and everybody liked Lucy. Then, too, there was Joe Roberts, a very respectable young fellow in his way, always ready to come and sit in a corner and mope and mutter doleful things about "Claudy and her rich city friends."

In fact, the latter end of that Winter was a good deal worse than the first, for an evil spirit of uncertainty and unrest had taken possession of it, and it was somehow dragged out uncommonly deep into the Spring. There had not been so late a season in many years; but it was grand for the lumbermen in the mountains, and John Chaplin lingered and lingered.

He lingered, indeed, till his father had good cause for grumbling, and John would have heard from him in a pretty positive way if there had been any means of sending him word.

Was John Chaplin false to anybody?

No, and yet, before the Winter fairly faded into the Spring, or a log could be floated down, he had sold out his somewhat speculative "lumber interest," and whatever else he had with him that was saleable, and, with a very fair supply of funds in his pocket, had started for the great city.

A silent sort of man was John Chaplin, capable of keeping his own secrets, even from himself, which is one of the rarest of faculties; and no man knew why it was that he made so sudden and so great a change in the locality of his season's pleasure. He had been in "the city" before, on business, but it seemed to him an altogether different place, for, instead of confining himself to "down town" and a cheap hotel, he plunged at once into the unaccustomed splendors of the most fashionable up-town quarter.

Dress? Yes, he knew they were looking at that—the hotel clerk and the elegant young men; but he might have been reassured, if he had cared a button what they thought about it. Not one of them made any mistake about John Chaplin, even in the rough. Six feet of strength and grace and habitual self-respect can wear rough clothing if it chooses—at least, among men.

Nevertheless, John's first excursions were among tailors and their co-ordinate trades, and he was thoroughly astonished, as was the hotel clerk, when their various art work was accomplished.

The change was great, indeed, but the young man actually felt more at his ease when it was accomplished.

He had not lacked for occupation. Such men rarely do, but John Chaplin had not visited the great city without a special errand. Only the night before the first installment of the tailoring miracle was delivered, Claudia Wayte entered her aunt's dressing-room, with a look on her face which called forth the question,

"My dear, has anything happened?"

"No, aunty—yes—I don't know—I must tell you how it was. You know I went down to do some shopping. Well, Mr. Bascom met me, and we were walking back, up the avenue, and a sleigh came around the corner, close to us, just as a poor woman with a little boy was trying to cross. I heard a scream, and even Mr. Bascom forgot his dignity and shouted, and I think the driver swore, and I saw a great big roughly-dressed fellow catch the horses by the bits and stop them and force them back, while the woman and the boy got out of the way. I think the driver struck the man, for Mr. Bascom left me in an instant and ran and took hold of the horses, and the next I saw the driver was pulled out of his seat and was rolling in the snow; and the ladies in the sleigh screamed, and a policeman came up, and then—O, aunty, it was dreadful of Mr. Bascom to leave me in such a way."

"Broad day light," exclaimed her aunt, in a tone which did not seem to specially condemn Mr. Bascom.

"But," continued Claudia, "the big man turned and held out his hand to Mr. Bascom, and said, 'Thank you, Sir,' as if he had been a lord, and who should it be but John Chaplin, son of our old Squire Chaplin."

"They're an excellent family," interrupted her aunt, "and very wealthy. I wonder what brings him to town? Did you speak to him? Did he recognize you?"

"That's the very question," exclaimed Claudia. "He shook hands with Mr. Bascom, and handed him his card, with a tremendous air, and he seemed to look me straight in the face, but he never bowed or spoke."

"Did you talk about it with Mr. Bascom?"

"He talked about it enough. He seemed quite enthusiastic, and said he meant to call and see if such a man was really living at that hotel."

"Didn't you tell him who Mr. Chaplin is?"

"No, aunt, I was very much offended with him, just then."

And the beautiful face of Claudia Wayte looked as if the offense to her pride on the part of her afternoon's companion had touched her unaccountably. She did not even give her aunt an opportunity for further comment, but swept on into her own room.

Could it be that any of her mother's recent epistolary references to old Squire Chaplin had anything to do with Claudia's perturbation?

At all events, she muttered to herself, as she stood before her glass:

"Of course he knows about it; but what brings him to the city? He's a right to come, I suppose. How could Mr. Bascom do such a thing? Men are all alike; but I thought he had more dignity of character. The Squire would have done it, and it's just like John. I don't see what need there was for saying anything to him, as yet. I'm sure he looked me straight in the face. Marry him? The property isn't his, yet. I'd as soon marry Joe Roberts, for that matter. I'll make him pay for it some day."

If Mr. Bascom had but known it, the bitter resentment that spoke in Claudia's last remark was a strong point against him and in favor of the matrimonial plans of the Squire.

Only a few nights after that, the latter was shown, by Mrs. Wayte, a letter, which he read entirely through. It spoke of him very kindly indeed, but, somehow, it set him to thinking in a curious and unexpected sort of way.

The little episode on the avenue had been a perfect windfall for John Chaplin. He would not have missed it for the price of the turnout he had stopped so unceremoniously, and he was particularly glad that it happened while he was still, in dress at least, a lumberman. The next day his transformation was very nearly completed, when one of the hotel proprietors did him the honor to call on him at his room.

Exceedingly polite, deferential, even cordially kind, but "there had been inquiries that morning, and—well, a stranger, you know."

"Oh!" exclaimed John, "I understand. References, and so forth. Certainly—right away—no offense."

It is only those who cannot give good references who are ever put out when called on for them; but John's were good enough for anybody.

Still, "there had been inquiries," and the best name on the list, a banker, was actually interrogated.

"Know him? O, yes. Good party—that is, if the young man represents his father as he generally does. Very queer, though. What ever got him into the notion of hotel-keeping?"

"Hotel-keeping? Why, what do you mean? Does he keep a hotel?"

"He! No, but I thought you inquired about his responsibility. Isn't he proposing to buy you out?"

"Buy us out? Why, no, but he has been stopping with us, and there have been inquiries made."

"O, that's it, is it? Well, if he makes you a good offer, take him up, that's all; he's good for it. Or his father is, anyway. If he doesn't pay his board bill, send it to me."

John Chaplin's room was changed for a better one that very afternoon, but it was the next day, nearly at dinner time, before Mr. Bascom's card was brought to him.

"The man that held the horses for me while I pulled out the driver," growled John. "He was walking with Claudia. Wonder if he set the inquiries on foot. Well, I can't say I care much—show him up."

If John himself had been astonished at the difference the tailors had made in his appearance, Mr. Bascom came very near apologizing for a mistake and beating a retreat.

The heartiness of his welcome, however, set the matter right in an instant, and John found it very much easier to play "equality" now that his new outfit had been so evidently approved by a competent judge.

The incident on the avenue gave a capital opening wedge to conversation, but it was not long before the weather and the Spring thaw which had just set in brought out a reference to the Piney Woods, the great drifts in the mountains, and the story of the winter camp, with its game, its fun, and its adventures, and Mr. Bascom was fairly captivated with his new acquaintance—so much so, in fact, that he actually stayed to dinner, and only departed on a plea of an engagement at the opera that evening.

"Exactly," said John, to himself, as the door closed behind his polished and elegant guest, "and I guess I can tell the name of his company. I'm fond of music."

A box to one's self is a wretched piece of extravagance, but John Chaplin felt not only reckless but lonely that evening, and music seemed to be just the thing he wanted. He could not hear what was going on in any of the other boxes, but he was dimly conscious of being "played upon" with a jeweled lorgnette in a pair of small, gloved hands.

"There he is," Mr. Bascom had said, "and I've seldom seen a finer-looking, manlier fellow. He's been out in the woods all Winter, having a splendid time. I envy him."

But Claudia Wayte was just then saying to herself, "Can that be John Chaplin? I should never have known him. I wonder if I could make as great a change in his father. I know what brought him to the city. Won't I have my revenge!" And with a smile of more than usual sweetness she turned to Mr. Bascom, and said aloud: "Your new friend seems to be quite a gentleman. Somehow, he reminds me very much of a man I used to know in the country, named Chaplin."

"That's his name, indeed," exclaimed Bascom. "Same one, perhaps. Let me go and bring him over. I'm quite sure he's every way a proper person."

For a moment Claudia was strongly tempted to refuse, and she might have yielded to the temptation, but her aunt came to the front with—

"Oh, yes, Mr. Bascom, do bring him. I knew all about the Chaplin family. I knew his father, years and years ago."

Claudia's pretty cousins were in the box, and Aunt Sanford may have been mindful of the great chapter of possibilities. At all events, Claudia did not give words to her half-formed dissent, and John's privacy was promptly invaded by his new friend.

He, too, stood on the very edge of doing just what Claudia wished he might, and remaining where he was, when Bascom smilingly added to his previous invitation—

"Come, come, it's only a sort of family party—Mrs. Sanford and her daughters, and—well Miss Wayte is the lady you saw with me on the avenue the other day."

"Ah, ha!" laughed John, "is that it? Well, then, I suppose I must not be rude. I'll come—"

"And Mrs. Sanford says she knows your father," added Mr. Bascom.

The enervating effect of city life must have been very rapid on John Chaplin, for his usually rosy face was even pale as he arose and left his box. Or it may have been the heated air of the opera-house or the exceeding rapidity with which his thoughts were moving.

"Can they really be engaged?" he said to himself, as he strode on after his new acquaintance. It's all very curious, but I wonder what she will say to me."

Whatever his wonder may have been, however, he did not show it in his manner. Not so easy and elegant as Mr. Bascom, certainly, or as many another gentleman of Claudia's acquaintance; but, for once, she spoke the true thought of her mind out plainly when she said to him:

"Indeed, John Chaplin, you need to be introduced to me. I hardly think your father and Lucy will know you when you get home."

"Am I so changed, then?" asked John.

"Don't fish for compliments, please," said Claudia, "my aunt and cousins are waiting for their turn."

"But I," interposed Mrs. Sanford, "ought not to require any ceremony with Squire Chaplin's son. I knew your father and your mother too, Sir, years before you were born."

"My mother?"

There was a sudden change in the young man's manner, perceptible even to Mr. Bascom, and that spoke volumes to the keen eyes of Claudia Wayte.

"You knew my mother?"

A true sister was she of Claudia's own maternal preceptress, and Mr. Bascom's attentions to his especial property, as he seemed to consider her, were in little danger of further interruption. Mrs. Sanford's capture came very near being complete.

Very near, indeed. In fact, so near that John had promised to call, when even the astute woman of the world let fall something about his father being "still a young man, comparatively, and he must be very lonely sometimes."

Still, he was so large and so strong, every way, that it took a good while for the full meaning of the remark to get possession of him, and Mrs. Sanford had no idea of the mischief she had done.

"Yes," thought John, "he must be very lonely, at times. I never thought of that. I must get back home at once; but I will make them one call before I go."

Little as he knew about music when he went to the opera, he seemed to himself to know still less when he left it, saying good evening to the merry and stylish party who had really so "laid themselves out" to help him enjoy it.

Mr. Bascom—gentlemanly soul—was more charmed than ever, but he half bluntly remarked to Claudia:

"You do not seem to have been on terms of intimacy with your neighbors;" and she, with great simplicity and candor, replied:

"No, I don't quite understand it. I must ask my mother about it when I write; but they are excellent people, no doubt, and very wealthy."

"Very wealthy?"

"Yes, for the country; and old Mr. Chaplin is building a grand new house; but I never saw his son appear so well before."

"Am I so jealous, Claudia?"

"Yes, if you wish. He seems almost devoted to my cousins. Do please be a little jealous, Mr. Bascom."

He would have had no difficulty at all about it if he had known what was really passing in the mind of the imperious young beauty at that moment. Either Claudia Wayte's first draught of "society" had been too deep a one, or the voice of early association was appealing to her with unexpected strength; for she was longing, just then, to be anywhere else than where she was—even to be with her mother.

If John Chaplin had come to the city with any "plans" in his head, they were in a fair way to be driven out; that is, if the substance and purpose of them had not already been fulfilled. Still, he lingered yet a day or two—for large men are apt to be slow—before he made his promised call at the Sanfords'.

Cool and calm as he had forced himself to be, he had not quite yet overcome that fever of the blood which requires so very much of social freezing, and he actually walked up and down in the drawing-room after he had sent up his name.

It was only for one brief minute, and then there came a rustle of silken robes and a presence of all but imperceptible perfume.

"Claudia!"

"Why are you here, John?"

"By your aunt's invitation. I sent my card to her."

"And not to me. I know it, but the servant met me and gave it to me, and I determined to see you first. You did not come to the city to see her?"

"No," said John, quietly.

"Why did you not ask for me, then?"

"I am country born and bred," said John, "and I must not be too honest, here in the city, or I shall be found out."

"I know what brought you—"

"Did you think I came to see my stepmother?"

"John Chaplin!"

"Well, perhaps I did, but I may also have wanted to see if she and Claudia Wayte were the same. I remember Claudia very well; she was the prettiest girl in the village. In fact, I used to think she was a kind of angel."

The light in Claudia's eyes was anything but angelic; but she looked superbly beautiful nevertheless, with her quivering coral lips and her whole form swelling with irrepressible rage. She could not utter a word, for a moment, and John continued:

"You remember the old chestnut, by the bars, on the hillside? The one with the initials cut on it? Well, I had it made into rails before I went north, this Winter, all but the first length, with the names on it."

"And that?" burst from Claudia.

"Was spoiled for anything but firewood, so I burned it."

Not a quaver of sentimentality in the clear, deep voice, and the manly, handsome face—Claudia had never dreamed he could be so very handsome—was bright with a laugh which only stopped short of mockery.

Just then there came another rustle of robes, and a voice followed it, exclaiming:

"O, Mr. Chaplin, you're not going? I did not know you were here. Claudia?"

"No, indeed, Mrs. Sanford," exclaimed John. "I've only this moment come in. I sent up my card to you. Miss Wayte and I were speaking of old times in the country. I believe she is quite a favorite with my father."

If Claudia could only have bitten him!

"I will call my cousins, Mr. Chaplin," she said, as she turned away, but her head was averted so that her aunt, intent as she was on John, did not see the expression of the beautiful face. Not a line of it was lost on the young man from the country.

The call was a long one, and John felt his rural rust wearing rapidly away with the admirable effect of such hospitality; but when he left the house he went straight to Mr. Bascom's club. It was just the hour to find him in, and he was as cordial as to an old friend.

"Going home to-morrow?" he exclaimed, after a few minutes' conversation. "Well, you know why, doubtless, only I'd be glad to see more of you."

"Thank you," said John; "I've come to try and give you an opportunity. You gave me a hint the other night—I don't mean to be impertinent—but why should you wait till Summer before you come out on any errand you may have? Why not keep your own counsel, and drop right down into my house? Take the best kind of care of you. Horses, you know, all that sort of thing. I may be away by Summer, and you won't do half so well. Kind of surprise, too, eh?"

Mr. Bascom's eyes danced with pleasure.

"You're a trump!" he exclaimed. "The very thing I'd long for. I'll come as soon as—well, you can guess. You may surely expect me."

"All right, then," said John; "I'll keep the secret of your engagement with Miss Wayte, that is, if it is a secret."

"Too fast; you're too fast, my dear fellow," exclaimed Mr. Bascom. "I fear I've misled you. Don't say a word about it, I beg. She might not like it at all."

"O, yes, I see," said John. "It's one of those betwixt and between affairs. Daylight, but not sunrise. Well, all I can say is, I'll give you every help I can."

"Thank you," said Bascom. "Perhaps, by that time, there may be very little needed. Even then, your offer will be a magnificent thing."

Poor Joe Roberts, away there in the village, with good country blood in his veins, but no great amount of brains in his head, and no money to speak of in his pocket.

It was kind of Squire Chaplin to treat Joe as he did, and even to lend him a sleigh and span to take Lucy Ferrer away across the hills to Deacon Merriwether's great quilting bee.

Perhaps the Squire was not unwilling to have the house to himself that afternoon, even if he did not intend to stay in it. He could go to Mrs. Wayte's for tea, he told Lucy; and Lucy sighed very strangely as she listened.

After she had gone with Joe, however, the Squire seemed to take on a singular sort of a fit. All over the house he went; through the silent rooms, stopping here and there to pick up a book or turn over a knick knack of some sort; or to fumble with the gaudy patchwork of some old-fashioned bed-cover. Not a closet but was looked into, not a drawer but was opened, and then the strong, heavy tread marched down the stairs and out at the front door, and the latter was carefully locked behind him.

A very curious sort of a performance for a man of Squire Chaplin's mental and physical development; but there was less to wonder at in his next errand. No wonder at all that he should go up among the grand old maples on the knoll, and take a look at the new house for which he was intending to abandon the old. The windows were boarded up to keep out the driving storms of Winter, and the heaps of brick and piles of lumber around were all pretty well snowed under. Next to a ruin, the lonesomest-looking thing in the world is such a half-built house as that at such a season. Nevertheless, for all the floors were laid, the Squire let himself in, through a temporary door with a padlock on it, and seemed to make a very thorough inspection. Not in the least weather-harmed, and all ready to begin on again in the Spring. Something might be done, even in cold weather, if he should so elect.

From room to room, and they were much larger and more numerous than those of the rambling old homestead the Squire's father had left him. The main drawing-room was larger and would be finer than Mrs. Sanford's own. Finer than any other in all the valley, or for many a mile beyond, and the Squire's eyes lit up a moment with more fire than they had shown before since his son went away, as his mind painted him a picture of that ample space hospitably filled.

"She and I would be standin' about here," he said, aloud, as he drew himself up between the front windows, "and John and Lucy, they'd be out there among 'em. Let me see, do they hold one another by the hand? That was the way."

And the Squire turned as if to look in the face of some one who might be standing at his side.

Ah, with what a magnificent smile might not Claudia Wayte have looked up into his face if she had only been there.

Yet it seemed very much as if somebody was there, for the Squire's hand rose toward the lappel of his coat, as if he were offering his arm, and then he silently and soberly strode on out of the house, looking the rude door after him.

Out of the house, but not home again.

Why should he go there, indeed, where there was not a soul except the "help" to receive or welcome him? No man in the valley had more or more cordial friends than Squire Chaplin, and he was very clearly in need of company, just then. Even the imaginary guests with whom he had crowded the great new drawing-room would hardly have sufficed. There are more who come unbidden to such gatherings as that than to any other.

Not to his own home, then; and not, strange as it seemed, to that of any of his neighbors.

More than one of the latter met and exchanged with him a kindly greeting, as he strode along the sleigh-beaten road toward the eastern hillside. The very dogs of the village knew the Squire, and wagged their tails respectfully as he passed them. It was easy, however, for all men to see that he did not care to be stopped, just then.

One man, mounted on what the country folk call a "cheat load" of green wood, blew his frosty red and peaked nose and squeaked:

"'Day, Squar. Whar ye goin'?"

"Up the road a bit."

"Up the road? On foot? What ye goin' arter?"

"Arter my shadder," replied the Squire grimly, as he pointed to his lengthening image on the snow, and strode swiftly forward.

"Arter his shadder! Now that's a queer say to a civil question. What can be a takin' of him that way? I wish't I knowed. If it wasn't fer leavin' the team, now—"

And the baffled questioner squirmed on his short measure of green beech, while his nose seemed to almost visibly curl with the intensity of his curiosity.

Why cannot inquisitiveness now and then take what the doctors call a "fatal turn," like other diseases?

Up the hillside walked the Squire, till he turned from the main road into one which had not been broken since the last snowfall, for the valley had been exceedingly healthy that Winter.

And now there were drifts to flounder through, and then a fence to climb, and beyond that, among the scattered evergreens, the snow seemed mocking the less vivid whiteness of the marble slabs which lifted their memorial heads above it.

A stumble or two over a hidden mound, and the Squire's patient wading brought him to a spot which might have answered the questions of the man on the wood-sleigh.

"Nancy, wife of—"

Then the squire stopped reading, and lifted his hat from the heavy mass of his dark gray-threaded hair.

"The snow's wonderful deep, just here," he muttered. "I don't see why it need ha' drifted so in this partickler spot. I can't jist bear to have it quite so deep. Yes, I could get around back of the village without anybody seein' of me. I'd want a shovel and a broom. There'll be plenty of moonlight."

If Mrs. Wayte expected the squire to tea that evening, she was disappointed; and when the next morning's sun looked down upon the eastern hillside, he saw that one large patch of the village "God's-acre" had been shoveled and swept clean of snow, and that some one had deposited a bunch of fresh evergreens, with some bright-red mountain ash berries on one of the graves.

Spring would come earlier in the city than in the country: but there was no likelihood of another heavy snow.

It was odd, but Squire Chaplin felt hungry that night when he returned home, and, although the "help" had long since had their supper in the kitchen, and had cleared it away, he insisted on having something nice prepared for himself, and then he sat up, cheerily reading and smoking, until the late hour that brought Joe Roberts and Lucy Ferrer home from the great quilting-bee. Not a demonstrative man was the Squire; but he kissed Lucy at the door, and she thought she had never before seen him look so handsome, "so very like John."

Hard winters break up suddenly, as a general thing, and that was no exception to the rule. A week or so later, one of the warm, thawy days, that are sure to be sandwiched between torrents of snow-melting rain, brought John Chaplin home again.

"In the Piney Woods?" exclaimed his father, after the first burst of welcome. "Well, I'd hardly ha' known ye. Did you plunder somebody?"

"Not exactly," laughed John; "but you know I always have an eye to business, and I made some right good turns in lumber. So I came back by way of the city, and bought me a new outfit."

"I should say you did," remarked the Squire, emphatically.

"That isn't all," continued John. "You and I wear the same sizes, pretty nearly, and so I had just such another, three full suits, built for you. Best I could get. I reckon they'll fit."

"John!"

"Don't say a word, father. I've a right to do what I please with my own money."

"I think I understand you, John; you've seen how they do things in town. Well, I never thought of that. We'll begin work on the new house right away, John. Did you see anybody you knew while you were in the city?"

"Yes," said John. "Tell you all about it by and by. By the way, I've invited a friend of mine to come and visit me."

"That's right, my boy, glad to see him. Chuck the house full if you want to. It's been lonely enough while you've been gone."

"Never mind," replied the young man, half coldly; "you'll have company enough one of these days."

"John," exclaimed the Squire, "you haven't said a word to Lucy."

True enough; but then she had come into the room so very quietly while they were talking, and now she was standing and looking at her metamorphosed friend with such an expression of open, simple-minded admiration, that John actually laughed as he sprang forward to kiss her.

To his utter astonishment, however, Lucy half eluded him, with a frightened—"No, John, don't"—that she could hardly have explained to herself.

And no?

The Squire, too, could hardly believe his eyes, for John drew back with a movement that was awkward in spite of his new-made elegance, though he said, "Well, Lucy, I thought you'd be glad to see me. I've ever so many things to tell you." And then he laughed very much like himself, and added, "You won't be so afraid of my city clothes when I show you what I brought for you. You'll be looking down on a country fellow like me when you get them on."

"Oh, John!" exclaimed Lucy.

The work was resumed on the new house, as the Squire had said, and there were numberless duties to call on him and his son, with the return of Spring, for a property like the wide-spread Chaplin estate does not take care of itself. In fact, like many another in this new world of ours, it was but just beginning to develop its resources, and these were bringing continual surprises, year by year.

The Widow Wayte had been fully advised of John's visit to the city; but Claudia's letters had contained nothing which should have made her mother look at him as she did when he saw her not, after smiling in his face, too, as she had smiled when he called on her, the day after his return. But, Oh, how Claudia would have sympathized with the meaning of that look!

Purpose is not necessarily prophecy, but when, a fortnight later, Claudia reached her home, she had hardly got her gloves off before her mother said,

"Of course, you know all about John Chaplin? He's here."

"Yes, mother. He left the city somewhat suddenly, so Aunt Sanford seemed to think."

"His father has been here only twice since John's return."

There was a strange expression in Claudia's eyes for a moment, but it was quickly replaced by one which suggested triumphant anticipation, and it may be even more; but she made no verbal comment. An hour or so afterward, as Lucy Ferrer slipped into the sitting-room at the Squire's, she met him just going out, and said,

"Claudia Wayte is here. I met her at the gate as I passed the house."

"Did you speak to her?"

"Yes, and—and she asked after you and John," stammered Lucy.

"He—a!"

It was a long breath and a hard one, but the Squire turned and went up to his room at once. When he came down stairs again he was dressed from head to foot in one of the new suits John had brought him, and Lucy noticed the change with an unwonted feeling of pain at her heart.

There were more changes than that to come, she could but think, for her only friends and for the home which had sheltered her so long. No wonder the plain, affectionate, diffident girl should begin to take the signs of their coming so seriously. She could hardly understand John, however, he seemed so busy from day to day, and so wonderfully cheerful.

"He didn't love her very much," she thought. "Not at all like poor Joe Roberts. He never even mentions her name."

But if John was a puzzle to Lucy, the Squire was a greater one to Mrs. Wayte and Claudia. He certainly was a noble-looking man, younger than most at forty, and his clothes became him well, and he was exceedingly cordial and polite. Claudia had hardly imagined he could be so courtly—so almost refined in his speech and ways.

"He is richer than Mr. Bascom, too," she thought, "and, O, won't I be even with John Chaplin before I'm done with him!"

Very beautiful she looked, indeed, and the Squire thought he had never seen any living being smile so sweetly, except it might be—well, he could hardly say about that, it was so long ago.

That evening, however, John Chaplin and his father were alone awhile in the sitting-room, while Lucy busied herself with her household duties, and the Squire suddenly cleared his throat as it some mighty obstruction were half choking him.

"John!" he exclaimed.

"Father!"

"I've quit bein' a fool this long time, John, and I think you ort to know it."

"I never thought you were one," said his astonished son.

"You never said so, but I understood some things without your sayin' 'em. I forgot, for a awhile, how you and Claudy used to run together, and I forgot a good many other things. I was an awful old fool."

"Father!"

"Hear me out, John, you're the one, of us two, to take a bride into the new house. I'll make a fair division with ye, and I'll stay here. She's a girl that'll want plenty of money and you're a man that would like to give it."

"It can't be, father," began John, but the Squire said:

"It isn't your turn to speak yet, my boy, but I'll just tell ye one thing. I got mixed and foolish, and I did'nt get right till one grand, moonlit evening, while you were away, and I did the best job of work I ever did in all my life, and that was"—

"What?" asked John, huskily.

"Clearin' away four feet of drift from a grave over you, on the hill," said the Squire, as he sprang from his chair and began to pace up and down the room. "It'll snow again, John, sometime, but it'll never settle so deep jest there, agin. Not another word, jest now, John; I guess I'll take a walk."

A few minutes later, when Lucy Ferrer came into the room, John Chaplin was sitting, all alone, with his head bowed upon his hands.

"Does your head ache, John?"

It was raised, as she spoke, and Lucy thought she had never in all her life seen anything so noble, but there were traces of tears on the bronzed cheeks. She would have retreated, but he said,

"Lucy, dear, you must not be afraid of me any more."

"Afraid of a man like that, and with tears on his face?"

So she thought, and yet she was trembling from head to foot as she came and sat down beside him.

"You remember my mother, Lucy?"

"Why, John, she was almost the only mother I ever knew."

"Let's talk about her a little. There will never be any other mother in this house."

Lucy's heart beat strangely quick, for it seemed to her almost as if Claudia Wayte were in the room with them; but she sat still and talked with John Chaplin until it seemed to her as if there were nothing in all the wide, wide world to be afraid of. Such a strong, gentle, protecting sort of presence there was around John Chaplin.

The next day was glorious with the sudden bursting of the "very late Spring," one of those days when we find that the blossoms have come upon us unawares, and Mrs. Wayte deemed it a most appropriate thing that Squire Chaplin, all in his new suit, should make a morning call on Claudia. It was even a more important matter that he should ask the latter to take a walk with him.

"The paths are dry," he said, "and it's as warm as a young Summer. Come along, Claudy."

Perilously beautiful she looked, as she tripped out by his side, and the widow noticed the glance of admiring pride that he bestowed upon her.

And Claudia's heart was fairly swelling within her, for, as they walked up the hill, and she looked back down the valley, she thought how much of it all she would soon be mistress of.

"Claudy," said the Squire, as they passed under a great glow of blossom-laden branches that reached over into the road, and he drew her arm through his, "Claudy, I've got something to say to you. I talked with your mother while you was away, but I didn't get it jest right, and I want to fix it. You and John are jest made for one another, and so I've given him the new house, and I'm goin' to give him half of everything else, and you must let him come and take you home with him, some day. I'll be as good a father to you as I've been to him."

Even the Squire could hardly have guessed why Claudia began to lean so heavily on his arm, but, just at that moment, an open carriage came whirling down the road, with trunks in it and a single gentleman, as if it had come from the railway station. So closely clung the beautiful girl, in her consternation at the meaning of the Squire's unexpected address, and so full was she of the strange bitterness of her own thoughts—in short, so near she came to a dead faint, that she took no note of the undisguised astonishment on the stranger's face—she did not even recognize him.

In a brief space more, however, Claudia's will and brain had so far recovered the mastery that there was something even sad and gentle in the tone of her reproachful reply.

"You ought not to have said this to me, Mr. Chaplin."

"Ought to have left it for John, you mean? So I ought, and so I would, but for what I was fool enough to say to your mother, while you were gone. Let's walk back to the house, then, and I'll go and send John to attend to his own affairs."

"No, indeed, Mr. Chaplin, please say nothing to John," exclaimed Claudia.

"But I did speak to him about it last night."

"And what did he say?"

"Well, really, now I think of it, I gave him no chance to say anything."

They had turned already, and the widow would have been astonished if she had been a witness of her daughter's quick return, but she had noted the passage of the carriage from the railway, and she had thought of a neighborly errand to Lucy Ferrer.

A visitor at Squire Chaplin's was something closely approaching a "family matter," and the widow was not a woman to neglect her duties. Nevertheless, Lucy could tell her nothing, except that John and his guest had gone up stairs at once. Mrs. Wayte prolonged her chat until she saw, through the open window, the Squire himself striding away down the street into the village, and then she was in an agony to be at home, but there were steps on the stairs and in the hall, and she heard John Chaplin say:

"Met her, did I understand you, Mr. Bascom? Ah, well, then I don't wonder at your haste. I'll show you the girl, it would then ought to learn good behavior and politeness, to conform to her parents' instructions, never to set through caprice, to maintain a distinction between members of the family and strangers, between people of high and low degree. She should not play with the lads. Her manner should always be decorous and reserved; she must not turn her head in walking; she will retire if any one enters the house; she will never look slyly at a visitor or guest who has taken a seat; she will not frequent the pagodas, but will remain in her chamber; and, if she goes out at night, she will carry a candle in her hand. In the morning, she will hear the cocks crow. Young persons given to laughing are lightly esteemed, and gossips draw annoyances upon themselves.—London Society.

ADVICE IN REGARD TO THE EYES.—The more you avoid glaring and glancing lights in the rooms you habitually sit in, the better. Therefore—although the following advice is certain to meet with no attention from the great majority—it is our laughably painful duty to recommend ladies to have as few mirrors and other looking-glasses, gilt picture-frames and mouldings, bright-colored curtains, and highly-polished furniture, in their drawing-rooms as possible; and what they must have should be so placed as not to allow bright lights to be thrown upon them. Highly-colored curtains are additionally injurious when the windows are open, so that various brilliant and dazzling colors are flung about the room by the incoming breeze. A very bright carpet is a very injurious thing, and, when combined with a brightly-painted ceiling, madness. These things may be a merry life for the eyes, but they are a short one. A rich-patterned sober-toned carpet, and a soft sky-gray or stone-colored ceiling, are my own private fancy. The almost invariable whitewash of the British ceiling would be a constant injury but for the grave fact that the British isles are not overburdened with sunlight. But whether reading, writing, or working in any other way, it should always be done with an oblique light, and never with a horizontal light. As to the use of lotions, several prescriptions are given in the little book we commenced with, as well as in other works, but I forbear to transcribe any of them, excellent as they no doubt would be, because a lotion too strong, or too frequently applied, or not exactly the proper lotion for a special case or individual peculiarity, might do far more harm than good, unless used under professional supervision. The only exception is that of pure water. In cases of much inflammation, or difficulty of opening the eyelids in the morning, the water should be warm, and it may be mixed with warm milk; but in nearly all other cases it should be cold. All those who have been engaged in reading or writing during several hours at a stretch, and especially at night, should carefully bathe the eyes with cold water before going to bed, and the first thing in the morning's ablutions. "All artisans who work at a blazing fire ought often to wash their eyes with cold pure water; and so should all those who work in wool, particularly carders and spinners, and all those employed in woolen and cotton manufactures, &c.; for the fine dust, almost imperceptible, it may be called, which such works disperse, often produces cataracts, obstinate inflammations, swelled eyelids, &c." I once lived, during weeks at a time, on the banks of an opthalmic river in the interior of Australia; and numbers of settlers and shepherds, bushmen, and diggers, were afflicted every Summer and Autumn with sore eyes—so sore in some cases that you might have thought they would never open them again. One day a squatter who owned a sheep-station thereabouts rode up from Melbourne with a great air. He was a "swell squatter," who only now and then came to visit his snug little farm on the river, "to see how stock got on." I asked his advice for the sore eyes of his shepherds and others. "It serves them quite right!" said he. "I never have these sore eyes; and you, Sir, will never have sore eyes. No gentleman ever has." Not exactly perceiving the nice distinction in this matter, I demurred. "It is a nice distinction," said he; "it is just that. You no doubt often wash your eyes with cold water. Those fellows never do." There was no doubt much reason in this: but something else was the cause. Besides the dirtiness of neglecting the hot sand and dust in the eyes, flies often rushed into them, and were not soon or easily cleared out; there was, moreover, a very small river fly, who either bit or stung, and inflammation very speedily set in. I should have very thankful at that time, for the sake of others (my horses included) as well as myself, to have received the following advice: Whenever a fly, or other insect, a small flying-seed, quicklime, dust, or any other minute object, gets into the eye (i. e., under the eye-lid,) "do not adopt the common habit of rubbing, or even of washing with water, but gently raise, or get a gentle hand to raise for you, the eyelid, and bend the head forward. In keeping thus the eyelid elevated, and the eye quiescent for a few moments, one feels a flow of tears starting from the organ which seldom fails to bring along with it the cause of the pain, or at least to carry it toward the corner of the eye next to the nose, from whence it may be removed by a fine handkerchief folded to a point. If this operation is not sufficient, then a finger ought to be passed frequently, yet gently, over the eyelid, from the exterior corner of the eye toward the great canthus, (or interior corner,) by which means the substance is made to descend toward the lachrymal glands, from whence it may be drawn by a fine hair pencil." If the irritating substance is still remain, then we are further instructed that "the upper eyelid must be taken as before, and kept elevated as much as possible, and the eye being then turned toward the nose, a very fine camel's hair pencil, dipped in cream, oil, or perfectly fresh butter, (without an atom of salt in it, remember,) must be introduced between the eyelid and the body of the eye, beginning at the exterior corner and ending at the interior corner." If the very fine hair pencil is not successful, you will be almost certain to succeed with one rather larger. Should all these efforts fail, which is extremely unlikely if they are properly performed, do not set to work rubbing or washing the eye, as you must obtain professional assistance. Be sure to bathe the eye frequently in cold water as soon as, and for some time after, the irritating substance has been extracted.—Fraser's Magazine.

THE INDIAN COBRA.—We have been favored with the following details concerning one of the deadliest of the Indian snakes, the cobra, by a gentleman who has passed many years in the East. He says: "The cobra de capello, (Naja tripudians,) sometimes called the 'hooded' or 'spectacle snake,' is the commonest and at the same time the most dreaded of all the venomous snakes of India. When excited or confronting an enemy, it assumes a remarkably graceful posture of defense, by raising the fore-part of the body to a height of perhaps a foot and a half from the ground, and at the same moment drawing together into a coil the remaining portion of its body and tail, till it forms as it were a kind of spiral spring, which, aided by the elasticity and muscular power of its frame, enables it, so soon as it deems its opponent to be within range of its stroke, to launch itself forward with lightning rapidity. In an instant the bite is given, which, as we shall presently see, is nearly if not always fatal. I believe that the cobra de capello is found throughout Hindustan, though it is far more numerous in some localities than in others. In some of our Bengal stations where I have been quartered, I have not seen a single cobra nor noticed the trace of one from one year's end to the other; in others, especially during 'the rains,' hardly a week has passed without several having been seen. In Bundelcund, especially in the neighborhood of Jhansi and Lalitpore, the cobra is unusually common. It harbors chiefly in holes under the foundations and in the walls of old ruined forts and temples, in honey-combed anthills, in the sides of old wells, or amid the débris of fallen buildings and deserted outhouses, particularly where grass and jungle have been allowed to grow, and rubbish to accumulate. During the day it is rarely seen abroad, but lies coiled up asleep in its place of concealment, sallying forth in search of food so soon as darkness sets in. It preys chiefly on frogs, toads, rats, young birds, and the like. It will readily invade a house in quest of such creatures, and on entering a room travels round the angles made by the walls and floor. During the hot-weather months, when, on account of the oppressive heat, doors and windows are left wide open throughout the night, and there is nothing to bar the entrance of vermin of all sorts, it is nothing unusual in the morning to find portions of the slough cast off the body, by a prowling cobra. Houses with thick thatched roofs, particularly old buildings, are always more frequented by snakes than tiled dwellings of recent construction. It is a mistake to imagine that the cobra, or in fact any other kind of serpent that I am acquainted with, will ever bite or molest human beings, unless disturbed, meddled with, or provoked in the first instance. On the contrary, the greater majority of snakes are only too glad to be permitted to escape, and beat a retreat when discovered by man; and unless driven into a corner or followed up, speedily vanish into some old rat-hole, or other hiding-place, without showing, beyond a threatening hiss, a sign of opposition to, or desire of retaliating on, the intruder. I believe that nearly always it is the sense of fear more than anything else that induces the cobra, when surprised or touched even without hurt, instantaneously to turn and bite the person who has alarmed it. The boots and trousers or gaiters usually worn by Europeans when out walking or shooting, in a great measure protect the wearers from the teeth of snakes. Natives of India, on the other hand, in spite of the fearful loss of life annually occasioned among them by poisonous snakes, appear to be perfectly callous and indifferent about guarding against such dangerous creatures, neglecting to take even the most ordinary precautions. Some classes sleep upon charpoys or native bedsteads; but the great majority, especially of the poorer orders, sleep on the ground, with their heads wrapped up, and their bodies enveloped in a sheet or blanket. A cobra, when traveling at night in search of food, instead of circling round, often crosses over the body or legs of the sleeper; the weight and movement of the reptile partially awaken the unfortunate slumberer, who, in a half-conscious state, puts out his hand to discover what has disturbed him, probably touches the hideous intruder, and is immediately bitten.—Chambers's Journal.

LAMAISM.—The points of similarity between Lamaism and Roman Catholicism have been often noticed. Koeppen, in his Damaische Hierarchie und Kirche, says, "Lamaism is the Romanism of the Buddhist Church." Its analogy chiefly consists in the development of the priestly powers, and the erecting an outward visible and ecclesiastical State, exercising rule over people and provinces. Another point of similarity is the enforced celibacy of the priesthood. We know not how it arose, but, according to Col. Yule, Lamaism was originally a kind of Buddhism corrupted. Its great reformer was a man named Tsongkaba, born in the fourteenth century, on the spot where now stands the famous monastery of Kun-bum, twenty miles south of Si-Ning, to the south-east of Lake Koko-nor. Here may be seen, if we are to believe Huc, the sacred tree, bearing leaves marked with the Thibetan alphabet! Tsongkaba instituted or restored the profession of celibacy, and substituted the yellow cap and robe for the red, which had characterized the older Lamas. He also did his best to check the practice of magic, which had extensively prevailed. There are two supreme pontiffs of the Lama Church; the one at Lhassa, called the Dalai ("Ocean") Lama—and the other at Tashi Lunpo or Digarchia, styled in Thibetan the Panchan Rinbochhi, or "Most Excellent Jewel." "In rank, sanctity, and spiritual dignity, these may be considered as equal; but in extent of temporal dominion the Lhassa pontiff vastly surpasses his colleague." This kind of dual dignity, distinguished, however, more sharply by secular and religious attributes, was not uncommon in the East. It exists in Siam, and until a very recent period it existed in Japan. The difficulty, however, as, under a system of celibacy, to provide for a successor. "Le Roi est mort—vive le Roi," is all very well where the deceased King leaves natural heirs, but not so easy when he is nullius filius, and dies unmarried. To remedy this the Buddhists invented the doctrine of supernatural reincarnation, which they extended to the second order of the hierarchy.

We will not attempt to go into the arcana of the question, and trace the history of the Yellows and the Reds. It will be enough to say that the Yellow or Reformed Church has finally triumphed over the Red, chiefly, perhaps, owing to the fact that the Mongol chief, Gushi Khan, who invaded Thibet in 1643, established the Dalai Lama as temporal sovereign over the greater part of the country. The second order in the Buddhist hierarchy are the Kutukhtus, whom Huc, struck by its resemblance to the organization of the Roman Catholic Church, calls "Cardinals." The most influential of them has his residence at Urga, and he is also a reincarnate saint. He is very wealthy, and besides the offerings of devotees, owns 150,000 slaves. His successor is generally sought for in the person of some newly-born infant; and a thank-offering for his discovery, in the shape of a very considerable sum of money, is presented to the Dalai Lama.

Another name for these Kutukhtus is Gigens, and they live at the different temples scattered throughout Mongolia or in Peking. They are supposed never really to die, but to pass from one body to another. Their influence is unlimited. "A prayer offered to one of them, the touch of his garments, his benediction, are regarded in the light of the greatest blessing humanity can enjoy; but they are not to be had gratis."

The ordinary Lamas or clergy are very numerous, and, according to Prejevalsky, compose a third, if not more, of the male population. They are dedicated to the profession from infancy, and when they have grown up and completed their studies, they are attached to some temple or practice as physicians. All Lamas must be celibates, and we need not say that this gives rise to every kind of immorality. —Blackwood's Magazine.

WILLIAM RUFUS AS A MAN OF HONOR.—What can be the nature, what can be the value, of that kind of virtue, that form of good faith, which was systematically practiced by William Rufus? Perhaps William Rufus would not be so easily accepted as Francis I. as the type of the honorable or chivalrous character. William Rufus stands out in popular conception, as he does also in sober truth, as one of the most hateful characters in English or in any other history. He stands out as the oath-breaker, the treaty-breaker, the man given up to the foulest vices, the general oppressor of every class, the man who, without a sign of intellectual skepticism, delighted to proclaim himself as the enemy and the blasphemer of the God in whom he had not ceased to believe. Such is the common conception of the Red King; and it is a conception which, as far as it goes, is fully borne out by the facts of his history. But this side of him does not make up the whole man. Besides the fact that William Rufus was, whenever he chose to be either, not only a great captain but a great ruler, there is also some reason for looking on him as the first recorded gentleman. He is certainly the first recorded man by whom the doctrines of honor and chivalry are constantly and ostentatiously put forward as his ruling principles of action. When we look more narrowly into the actions of the Red King, we see that they were guided by a law, though that law was neither the law of God nor the law of his kingdom. The law of Rufus was the law of the knight and gentleman, the law of honor. Reckless both of justice and of mercy, he was quite capable of generosity. Reckless of his oaths to his people and of his treaties with princes, when he pledged his word as "probus miles"—as "an officer and a gentleman"—then he kept it faithfully. He not only kept it himself, but he cast aside with scorn the suggestion that a knight who had passed his word could ever break it. When reproached with his repeated breaches of his promises to the nation which had saved his crown for him, he answered that no man could keep all his promises. But this one class of promises—promises made in the character of knight and gentleman—Rufus always did keep. The popular conception of his character leaves out this side—the chivalrous side of it—just as the popular conception of Francis I. dwells mainly on the chivalrous side of his character, and puts out of sight its general blackness both as a man and as a king. Francis is rather a popular character with ordinary readers of history, while Rufus is certainly the opposite. But Rufus in his own day seems to have had to some extent the same reputation as Francis. Men who condemned his private and public crimes still half admired the quality which in his own day was called his magnanimity. The difference between the lasting reputation of the two Kings is probably owing to the different relations in which each of them stood to the received religion of his time. Francis, in the eyes of many of his contemporaries, half atoned for his crimes and vices by the merit of his religious persecutions. Rufus added to his crimes and vices a form of irreligion which was almost peculiar to himself. Again, in doing wrong to all classes, he did wrong to churchmen also, and churchmen had, in his day, the best means of making their wrongs known to the world. That Rufus was a patron of art and literature, while Rufus bears no such character, is a difference in the times rather than in the men. The builder of the first Hall of Westminster was a patron of art, as art was understood in his time. As for literature, while in the days of Francis its patronage was the fashion among Kings and Princes, in the days of Rufus the learned Henry stood out as something without a parallel in Western Europe. Altogether, allowing for the difference of their times, the two men were perhaps not quite so unlike as they seem at first sight. And in the point with which I am now chiefly concerned they stand or fall together. Each is a type of the man who has the formulæ of honor and chivalry on his lips. From their examples we may perhaps learn what honor and chivalry are really worth.—Fortnightly Review.

A THEATRE AT THE NORTH POLE.—A theatre was built of ice for plays, lectures, and concerts. It was on the floe, close to the ship. The foundation-stone (a large block of ice) was laid with great ceremony on Nov. 18. In the forenoon the Mayor and corporation waited on the Governor, (the Captain,) and an address was read setting forth the objects of the building, and praying him to lay the foundation. This was accordingly done in due form, coins having been placed beneath the stone. The civic authorities were hard put to it for suitable robes of office. The Mayor appeared resplendent in dressing-gown, fez, and brass chain; the mace-bearer was also suitably attired, and the corporation, with pillow in his waistcoat, seemed fully conscious of his importance. The building of the theatre was not completed before the end of the month. It was made of blocks of ice, and rooted over by a sail. The length was 27 feet by 15 feet. The auditorium was of sufficient size to contain the whole ship's company. Raised above this by one step was the stage, provided with green-room and wings. Half a dozen foot-lights, and a few lamps with polished reflectors, were sufficient to light the whole building. It was finally opened on the evening of Dec. 1, the birthday of the Princess of Wales, and named the "Royal Alexandra Theatre." The whole ship's company attended, the officers sitting in front of the stage, and the men, with their band, behind them. The manager first appeared on the stage, and read the prologue, an elegant classical composition, suitable to the occasion, written in verse. A committee had selected it on the previous day from four, which had been submitted to their decision. The prologue being concluded, loud shouts of "author" were raised, and that gentleman appeared on the stage to receive well-merited applause. Then followed the amusing farce "My Turn Next," the parts being taken by five officers. On the whole, the piece was very well performed; one actor in particular displayed considerable dramatic talent, happily introducing several local allusions. Much amusement was caused by a female character appearing in a black beard, the gentleman to whom that part had been allotted having obstinately refused to part with that protection against the cold. Songs and recitations by some of the men followed, and the evening's entertainment concluded by an original composition called "The Arctic Twins." This was the hit of the evening, and was sung and whistled everywhere for some time after. It was a dancing song by two of the petty officers, who appeared in sledging costume, and sang and danced, accompanied by the band. Thus satisfactorily closed our first evening in the theatre. We had many more such during the Winter, sometimes the officers and at other times the men giving a representation. The plays were usually followed by songs, recitations, and dances, the songs being not unfrequently original, composed on passing events by some of the seamen and marines. Some evenings were devoted to lectures; and in particular one on Malta, which occupied two evenings, and in which its history, siege, knights, and present state were fully treated of, was most interesting to all. A magic lantern was also employed on several occasions. But when our first enthusiasm had subsided, we began to think sitting for hours in a temperature of —20° rather an infliction. For though the theatre had a small stove, and was always much warmer than the outer air, it was often as cold as —20°. So we commenced a series of Saturday evening concerts on the lower deck, and agreeably passed may a dull hour during the tedious four months' night.—Fraser's Magazine.

DEATH BY SNAKE-BITES IN INDIA.—In January, 1870, Dr. Fayrer addressed a letter to the Secretaries or political agents of the principal Governments of India, soliciting information as to loss of life by snake-bites. Replies were received containing reports from many districts of these Governments of the number of deaths from this cause in 1869; but from others no return was made, so that the information obtained was very incomplete. In 48 districts of Bengal 6,219 deaths were reported as having taken place; and in other parts the losses amounted to 5,197, making a total of 11,416 fatal accidents of this kind. But it is to be observed that from a large part of India the Doctor neither applied for nor received information, and that even from the Governments to which his circular was sent the returns received were very incomplete, the area represented by them being less than half of the peninsula of Hindustan; besides which there is reason to think that even in the districts from which returns were obtained many cases of death by snake-bite must have occurred besides those which were reported, such an accident being too ordinary an event to attract much attention; and Dr. Fayrer does not hesitate to express his belief that, if full information could be obtained from the whole of Hindustan, "it would be found that more than 20,000 persons die annually from snake-bite!"—Chambers's Journal.

PLUM-PUDDING.—We have proof that at the beginning of this century plum-pudding was nearly as much in its glory as mince pie. The Annual Register records that, at the house of Mr. Champion, of Darnall, near Sheffield, some workmen were regaled on one occasion with a plum-pudding, comprising 24 pounds of flour, 16 pounds of raisins and currants, and 40 eggs. It measured five feet in circumference. Mr. Brand, the antiquarian, tells us that, about the same period—the beginning of the present century—plum-porridge shared with the more solid compound the honor of being well-esteemed by the English people; for, dining with the Royal Chaplain in St. James' Palace, he noticed that a tureen of rich luscious plum-porridge commenced the dinner. Coming down a little into the century, we learn from a Devonshire newspaper, that, at Paignton Fair, near Exeter, a plum-pudding of vast dimensions was drawn through the town amid great rejoicings. No wonder that a brewer's copper was needed for the boiling; seeing that the pudding contained 400 pounds of flour, 170 pounds of beef suet, 140 pounds of raisins, and 240 eggs. This 800 pounder, or so, required continuous boiling from Saturday morning till the following Tuesday evening. It was finally placed on a car decorated with ribbons and evergreens, drawn through the streets by eight oxen, cut up, and distributed to the poor. At Bartholomew Fair, some years later, there was a plum-pudding seller who was quite a character in his way; neatly dressed, his hair powdered and tied à la queue, and, without a hat, he carried his delicacy on a board, announcing its merits in a full and ringing voice, letting off verbal squibs of wit and humor, and selling his plum-pudding at a penny a slice. Plum-pudding never has really taken root (so to speak) in any part of Europe save England. The Venetians, some years ago, had a dish called torta di lasagna, a mixture of dough or paste, raisins, currants, candied orange peel, onions, parsley, lime-nuts, and oil. The writer speaks of this complex mixture as a pottage, but we infer that it more resembled a mince pie; for torta in Italian is a tart, while lasagna is a thin layer of paste of flour or vermicelli. Italy, however, puts forth a claim to something more nearly resembling our plum-pudding. A traveler partook, at Rome, of "a rich ebony-looking block, bathed in a yellow cream, lighter and more delicate in flavor than the English plum-pudding." The French have never exactly liked to admit their inferiority to their insular neighbors, in the preparation of this celebrated component of a Christmas dinner. They have made many attempts, but with only partial success. It is said that Louis XVIII., who resided many years in England as an exile during the Napoleonic era, and had imbibed a liking for plum-pudding, made a point of having one on his table on Christmas Day; the cold remains were willingly accepted by his English domestics, but not by those of French birth and customs. There was another French monarch (we are not certain which) who, wishing to give pleasure to an English Ambassador Extraordinary, gave instructions to his chef, de cuisine to prepare a plum-pudding in honor of the guest. The ingredients, the proportions, the quantity of water, the time of boiling—all were noted with great care; but as no cloth was named, none was used; and the Ambassador (though, of course, too polite to make any comments) was rather taken aback to see the plum-pudding brought in, as a kind of thick soup in a tureen. A story somewhat similar to this was told of Lord Macartney, when he went on his embassy to China, and wished to give gratification to a distinguished mandarin. There have in all probability been more instances than these two; for the blunder may easily be made by a cook who had never before boiled a pudding in a cloth. A curious paragraph appeared in an English newspaper, just about half a century ago, showing, in the words of a Paris correspondent, to how small an extent plum-pudding had become naturalized in France: "For Christmas Day all the English cooks in Paris are in full business. The queen of cooks here is Harriet Dunn. As Sir Astley Cooper among the cutters of limbs, and M. D'Egville among the cutters of capers, so is Harriet Dunn among the professors of one of the most necessary, and in its results most gratifying professions in existence. Her services are secured beforehand, by special retainers; and happy is the peer who can point to his pudding and declare that it is of the true Dunn composition. Her fame has even extended to the provinces. Four-score miles prior to Christmas Day she forwards plum-puddings in cases to all parts of the country, ready cooked and fit for the table, after the necessary warming. All this is, of course, for the English."—All the Year Round.

THE FALL OF THE YEAR.

Rustling leaves, which everywhere
Fall from branches cold and bare;
Fleeting sunshine, fading o'er
Breezy tarn and wind-swept moor;
Birds' last farewell ere they flee
To a land beyond the sea;
Moan of wintry wind o'erhead—
Nature weeps, for Summer's dead!

In my life a sad despair,
Empty hopes and aching care;
Vain regrets for Summer gone,
Lonely tears as days go on;
Vacant gaze and fruitless cry,
Dreary, dull satiety,
Moan at thought of kisses fled—
Memory weeps, for Love is dead!

But, though withered leaves and sere
Shroud with gloom the blossoms' bier;
Though the birds to other skies
Raise their amorous melodies;
Though the fickle sunshine woo
Brighter lands and seas more blue;
Shall not Spring's soft breath restore
Blossom, leaf, and bird once more?

And though Passion's heaven-born power
Lasted but for one brief hour;
Though those kisses heart from heart
Tore us—evermore to part;
Though alone I'm dreaming now,
And in thy last sleep art thou—
Death, perhaps, shall, some glad day,
Give thee back to me for aye!

"CANNYBLES."—"Jud," Anice said, "when you can read I will give you Robinson Crusoe."

In less than six months she was called upon to redeem her promise.

This occurred a few weeks after Craddock had been established at the lodge at the Haviland gates. The day Anice gave Jud his well-earned reward she had a package to send to Mrs. Craddock, and when the boy came for the book she employed him as a messenger to the Park.

"If you will take these things to Mrs. Craddock, Jud, I shall be much obliged," she said; "and please tell her that I will drive out to see her to-morrow."

Jud accepted the mission readily. With Nib at his heels, and Robinson Crusoe under his arm, three miles were a trivial matter. He trudged off, whistling with keen delight. As he went along he could fortify himself with an occasional glance at the hero and his man Friday. What would he not have sacrificed at the prospect of being cast with Nib upon a desert island?

"Owd Sammy" sat near the chimney corner, smoking his pipe, and making severe mental comments upon the conduct of Parliament, then in session, of whose erratic proceedings he was reading an account in a small but highly-seasoned newspaper. Sammy shook his head ominously over the peppery reports, but feeling it as well to reserve his opinions for a select audience at The Crown, allowed Mrs. Craddock to perform her household tasks unmolested.

Hearing Jud at the door, he turned his head. "It's yo', is it?" he said. "Tha con coom in. What's browten?"

"Summat fur th' missis fro' th' rectory." Jud answered, producing his parcel; "Miss Anice sent me wi' it."

"Tak' it to th' owd lass, then," said Sammy, "Tak' it to her. Tha'lt find her in th' back kitchen."

Having done as he was bidden, Jud came back again to the front room. Mrs. Craddock had hospitably provided him with a huge sandwich of bread and cheese, and Nib followed him with expectant eyes.

"Sit theo down, lad," said Sammy condescendingly. "Sit theo down, tha'st getten a walk both afore and behind theo. What book 'st getten under thy arm?"

Jud regarded the volume with evident pride and exultation.

"It's Robyson Crusoe, that theer is," he answered.

Sammy shook his head dubiously.

"Dunnot know as I ivver heard on him. He's noan Scripter, is he?"

"No," said Jud, repelling the insinuation stoutly; "he is na."

"Hond him over, an' let's ha' a look at him."

Jud advanced.

"Theer's picters in it," he commented eagerly. "Theer's one at th' front. That theer un," pointing to the frontispiece, "that theer's him."

Sammy gave it a sharp glance, then another, and then held the book at arm's length, regarding Robinson's goat-skin habiliments over the rims of his spectacles.

"Wall, I'm domd," he exclaimed, "I'm domd if I would na loike to see that chap i' Riggan! What's th' toky getten on i'"

"He's dressed i' goat skins. He wur cast upon a desert island, an' had na owt else to wear."

"I thowt he must ha' been reduced i' circumstances, or he'd nivver ha' turn out i' that rig 'less he thowt more o' comfort than appearances. What wur he doin' a-casting hissen on a desert island? Wur he reet i' th' upper story?"

"He wur shipwrecked," triumphantly. "Th' sea drifted him to th' shore, an' he built hissen a hut, an' gettin' goats an' birds, an'—an' aw sooarts—an'—it's the graidelest book tha iver seed. Miss Anice gave it me."

"Has she read it herseen?"

"Aye, it wur her as tellt me most on it."

Sammy turned the volume over, and looked at the back of it, at the edges of the leaves, at the gilt-lettered title.

"I would na be surprised," he observed with oracular amiability. "I would na be surprised—if that's th' case—as theer's summat in it."

"That as I've towed thee is nowt to th' rest on it," answered Jud in enthusiasm. "Theer's a mon ca'd Friday, an' a lot o' fellys as eats each other—cannybles they ca' em—"

"Look tha here," interposed Craddock, his curiosity and interest getting the better of him. "Sit theo down and read a bit. That's something as I nivver heard on—cannybles an' th' loike. Pick thee th' place, an' let's hear summat about th' cannybles if tha has na th' toime to do no more."

Jud needed no second invitation. Sharing the general opinion that "Owd Sammy" was a man of mark, he could not help feeling that Crusoe was complimented by his attention. He picked out his place, as his hearer had advised him, and plunged into the details of the cannibal feast with pride and determination. Though his elocution may have been of a style peculiar to boyhood, and his pronunciation occasionally startling in its originality, still Sammy gathered the gist of the story. He puffed at his pipe as furiously that the foreign gentleman's turbaned head was emptied with amazing rapidity, and it was necessary to refill it two or three times; he rubbed his corduroy knees with both hands; occasionally he slapped one of them in the intensity of his interest, and when Jud stopped he could only empress himself in his usual emphatic formula:

"Well, I am domd! An' tha says as th' chap's name wur Robyson?"

"Aye, Robyson Crusoe."

"Well, I mun say as I'd ha' loike to ha' knowed him. I did know a mon by th' name o' Robyson once, but it could na' ha' been him, fur he wur na' nieh o' a shap. If he'd a bin cast o' a desert island he would na' ha' had th' gumption to do aw that theer—John Robyson could na', it could na' ha' been him; an' besides he could na' ha' writ it out, as that theer tell's done."

There was a basis in truth for this estimate of his character, but Sammy, now fairly roused to drink water or enjoy some other luxury which their men could not share with them. Such an act might spring from a mere generous impulse; it might spring from a noble and far-seeing policy, or from some compound motive in which those two elements are inextricably mixed together. But there is nothing in it of chivalry, nothing of the fantastic class-feeling to which that name really belongs. Chivalry is not the virtue of the soldier; it is not the virtue of the General. It is the fantasy of a class of men, of a class of soldiers, who are led by it to do things which are no part of their duties, either as men or as soldiers. The knight who was killed by the butcher may have had it written on his tomb that he carried out the character of a man of honor to the last. Compare this with the true standard of military virtue. On the tomb of the 300 at Thermopylæ it was not written that they had done anything as men of honor. It was written that they lay there in obedience to the laws of Sparta. The standard of chivalry, then, the standard of honor, the standard of the knight and gentleman, is not only at its best very imperfect, but it is apt to run into vagaries which have no ground either in law and morals or in common sense. But more than this, it is apt to become positively wicked. As a purely class feeling, prescribing at its best only those virtues which are thought becoming in an exclusive class, it naturally led to utter recklessness toward all who did not belong to that class. The contempt of the gentleman for the roturier, his recklessness of the rights of the roturier were the natural offspring of the chivalrous standard.—Fortnightly Review.

THE YOUNGEST EDITOR OF PUNCH.—The latest addition to the Punch staff, and the youngest of the men who sit under the mahogany tree at Whitefriars, is Mr. Arthur à Beckett, son of the famous Gilbert à Beckett, whose career I have traced from authentic documents in an early chapter of this history. A few biographical notes on the junior member of the staff, who has not yet arrived at the dignity of a place in Men of the Time, may fittingly close these papers. Mr. à Beckett was born on the 25th of October, 1844, at Portland House, Hammersmith, and was educated at Kensington School, at Honiton, and lastly at Felstead. When at Honiton he was presented with a prize in history, by the present Bishop of Oxford, for "his excellence in composition." He had got up the subject out of his father's Comic History of England; and his answers to the examiner's questions were consequently full of puns and jokes. At Felstead he was a local correspondent to a country paper. At 17 he entered the War Office. Before he had arrived at the age of 20 he was editor of the Glowworm, a London evening paper. The venture saw many ups and downs, and for three years he was not only editor, but leader-writer, reviewer, dramatic critic, and even sporting prophet. On one occasion—an important one for an evening paper—the Oxford and Cambridge boat-race day—the publisher was taken ill, and Mr. à Beckett filled his place. During his editorship of this paper he learned the mysteries of setting-up at case and machining. He gave up the editorship of the Glowworm when he was 23 to fill the principal chair on the Tomahawk, a paper which he originated. At the outset the policy of this periodical was decided by the staff. During the first 12 numbers two cartoons appeared, which were considered disloyal. So soon as he had full powers Mr. à Beckett did his best to retrace these mistaken steps. The moment he had complete editorial control the paper was as loyal as an English paper should be. The Tomahawk also saw many ups and downs. From first to last, as a property it was a success. Unhappily, however, it was in bad hands. The first proprietor absconded, after disposing of £20,000 that did not belong to him, and from that moment the paper was tossed from hand to hand. Within six months of its decease it was sold for over £5,000. Mr. à Beckett stood by the paper as long as he could, but the copyright was disputed, and, after a month's notice to the contending parties, he retired, and with his retirement the Tomahawk fell to the ground. Shortly after this Mr. à Beckett went to France and up the Rhine for the Standard and the Globe as war-correspondent. It was the time of the Franco-German war, and he was more than once arrested as a spy. At Amiens, in company with Mr. J. L. Molloy, the composer of the "Vagabond," he was within an ace of being shot. About two years ago he met Mr. Tom Taylor, who invited him to write for Punch. From that day, without a break, his articles have appeared weekly in that periodical. A year ago he was enrolled at the weekly dinner, and he has been present at every meeting of the Punch staff since, except the three happy weeks when he was away on his marriage tour. In his leisure Mr. à Beckett has found time to edit a monthly magazine, the Britannia, for about three years, a comic paper called Black and White, and a number of other journals. For two years he acted as private Secretary to the Duke of Norfolk; but finding the work interfered with his literary labors, he resigned the appointment. He is the author of Fallen among Thieves, a three-volume novel, published by Chapman & Hall; two three-act comedies, ("£. s., d.," produced at the Royalty; and "About Town," brought out at the Court;) a domestic drama in one act, called "On Strike," which has been played at the Court, where it was originally produced, the St. James', the Gaiety, and the Standard; another one-act piece called "Faded Flowers," played at the Haymarket by the Kendals; and some smaller things for the German Reeds. He has commanded a volunteer corps, and is at present a Captain of militia. It must be confessed that Punch's youngest contributor has matriculated in a busy school, and has seen something of life.—London Society.

THE LAW OF HONOR.—The law of honor, as understood by William Rufus, is the real original law of honor; what the other man calls by the same name is not the law of honor, but something a great deal better, to which he would do well to give its real name. We sometimes ask what is meant by a "true gentleman," and we get for answer a description of a man who is morally perfect. If so, why give him a false name? Why not call him the honest man that he really is? Such a portrait may be the portrait of a virtuous man in any time or place; it is not the portrait of the historic "gentleman" at the time when gentlemen first began to be heard of. The truth is that the law of honor, the standard of the gentleman is, in its origin, the law of an exclusive and overbearing military oligarchy. It is the law of William Rufus, and of men like William Rufus. It is the law which binds, not men as men, not citizens as citizens, but members of an exclusive order as members of that exclusive order. Its standard is the opinion of that order; its code, the law of honor, prescribes what is deemed to be worthy of honor by the opinion of that order. It prescribes certain forms of courage, certain forms of truthfulness, often such fantastic forms as to go far toward turning those virtues into vices. I have always specially delighted in the story of the knight who, for love of his lady and in discharge of his vow, rode up and drove his spear into the gate of the enemy's castle, and who, as he went back, having thus gloriously preserved his honor, was cut down by the plebeian hands of a butcher. Here is chivalry developed to the point of lunacy. The man is not even rash or foolhardy; for rashness or foolhardiness may consist either in miscalculation or in yielding to a mere impulse of daring. He simply goes for the sake of his honor, to do a thing which is the act of a madman and of no one else. He is not a good soldier; for the duty of a good soldier is to do all that in him lies, according to his degree, to advance the enterprise on which he is engaged. But the taking of the castle was in no way advanced by the knight running his lance into the gate. All that he did was to risk, and to lose, for no purpose a life which might have been useful for the business in hand. This kind of thing is genuine chivalry; it is the fantastic notion of honor, the grotesque distortion of the two isolated virtues of courage and truthfulness, carried to its natural development. This is chivalry; this is the carrying out of the standard of the chivalrous class, the class who go to battle on horses and despise those who go on foot. We must not have the name of chivalry transferred from pranks like these to which it really belongs to actions which deserve much better names. Have we heard the name "chivalrous" applied to such deeds as that of Sir Philip Sidney when he bade his friends give the water to the other man rather than to himself. Bits that was not chivalry; it was something much better—Christian self-denial. Nor was there any chivalry in such an act as that which, in different forms, is told of David, Alexander, and several other Christian, now they refused to drink water or enjoy some other luxury which their men could not share with them. Such an act might spring from a mere generous impulse; it might spring from a noble and far-seeing policy, or from some compound motive in which those two elements are inextricably mixed together. But there is nothing in it of chivalry, nothing of the fantastic class-feeling to which that name really belongs. Chivalry is not the virtue of the soldier; it is not the virtue of the General. It is the fantasy of a class of men, of a class of soldiers, who are led by it to do things which are no part of their duties, either as men or as soldiers. The knight who was killed by the butcher may have had it written on his tomb that he carried out the character of a man of honor to the last. Compare this with the true standard of military virtue. On the tomb of the 300 at Thermopylæ it was not written that they had done anything as men of honor. It was written that they lay there in obedience to the laws of Sparta. The standard of chivalry, then, the standard of honor, the standard of the knight and gentleman, is not only at its best very imperfect, but it is apt to run into vagaries which have no ground either in law and morals or in common sense. But more than this, it is apt to become positively wicked. As a purely class feeling, prescribing at its best only those virtues which are thought becoming in an exclusive class, it naturally led to utter recklessness toward all who did not belong to that class. THE HEIGHT TO WHICH WAVES RISE AGAINST LIGHT-HOUSES.—The force of the waves and the height to which they dash against light-house towers in the most exposed situations are astonishing; and we cannot contemplate them without reflecting how great a triumph of science and art these buildings are, and how strange life in them must be. We find some interesting information on these points in the copious appendix to the Report of the Royal Commission appointed in 1858 to inquire into the condition and management of lights, buoys, and beacons—a bulky parliamentary blue-book of 1861. At the Longships Light-house, on the top of a conical rock opposite Land's End, the Commissioners were told by the head keeper that in heavy weather waves break about the lantern, seventy-nine feet above high-water mark; and that on one occasion the sea lifted the cowl off the top so as to admit a great deal of water, by which several of the lamps were extinguished, and all the men were employed in baling till the tide fell. He added that there is a cavern under the light-house at the end of a long split in the rock, and when there is a heavy sea the noise produced by the escape of pent-up air from the cavern is so great that the men can hardly sleep. Concerning the Scilly Bishops' Light-house, on a rock in the south-west of the Scilly Isles, of which the Commissioners say that the building is "perhaps the most exposed in the world," they give the report of the head keeper that

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

WE ARE HARKING!

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

There is a legend handed down from remote generations that once upon a time the people on this globe determined to know whether any branch of the human family lived in the moon.

To this end it was agreed that on a given time a general balloo should be sent forth by the united voices of every person of every kindred tribe and nation on the round earth, which was expected to be so loud as to be heard by the lunar brethren who would, of course, answer back, and thus communication would be established between the neighboring spheres.

But when the moment for the supreme effort came, only one old woman in a solitary island in mid-ocean actually halleoed, all the rest were harking! This seems to be the case with the great Democratic Party on this day, which was appointed for a general balloo by the "unterrified." Public notice was given that during these hours the Democrats were to assemble in mass conventions at the State capitals and national capital and shout "Tilden is elected!" so loud that when the refractory Vice President and Senate should hear the reverberatory echoes in thunder-tones and learn the cause, their knees would shake with fear, while the great "usufruct" could gain possession of the White House by virtue of an order from the House of Representatives.

Having read the World till fully imbued with a belief that all this talk "meant business," I suspected that a strategic movement would commence at Gramercy Park, and hastened thither to witness the same. On my way I evolved from my "inner consciousness" a picture of the probable events of the day, about as follows: I seemed to see Gramercy Park and the quadralateral streets about it, packed with stalwart men, armed for the fray, and looking toward the house with the horizontal flag-pole and big bay-window for the appearance of, or orders from, their chief. I seemed to press forward until I stood near the steps leading to the "Great Reformer's" council-chamber. Soon telegraphic dispatches began to arrive, borne by breathless messengers, and read by an aide de camp to the eager and brilliant staff, in an ante-room within earshot of my station. The first dispatch was from Aldrich, of Vermont. It announced that he had surrounded the Republican minority of that State, and taken them all to prison; that with the aid of his Bennington associates he had burned all the Republicans' homes; that he had reorganized himself as the Electoral College, had recast all the Electoral votes of the State for Tilden and Hendricks, and that there was no opposition. A cheer from the staff rent the air, echoed by the assembled thousands outside. Next came a telegram from Senator Barnum, stating that he had paid over another $20,000 to the State Central Committee, which enabled them to order a new census of the State, on which would be founded a valid claim for two more Electors, who would add their votes to those already cast for "Tilden and Reform;" that all the legal steps would be completed within 10 days, and the votes sent on in time to be counted in February. Furthermore, that Yale College had been leveled to the ground, as an anti-Democratic institution, and that ex-President Woolsey had been gagged, and sent adrift on the Sound in an oyster-boat, for his impertinence in calling attention to Sam Tildenjas "an uncommonly anxious candidate for the Presidency." Wild cheers rent the air at this announcement.

Next came a dispatch from Dorsheimer, at Buffalo, stating that the distance from Albany to Troy was 590 miles, and asking that all officials be allowed mileage on that basis of calculation. Some general officer, looking like pictures of McClellan when all was "quiet on the Potomac," remarked that an "Executive order" would be issued as requested. Soon a messenger hurried up the steps, and fell fainting as he handed in a message from Gov. Hendricks stating that all those voters in Indiana who made up the thousand or so Republican majority at the recent special election for State Senator, had been "fixed," that a new election had been ordered, and a Democratic victory was sure. In the same envelope were advices from the Democratic Convention at Columbus, Ohio, stating that the State Committee had just sentenced Gov. Hayes to solitary confinement, at the Dry Tortugas, for denying Tilden's election, that bail was refused him by Judge Hoadley, and the prisoner had already been hurried toward his destination on a special train, Bev. Allen being installed in his place at the State Capitol.

The cheers that now arose defied description. All saw that the question of the Presidency was settled. Minor dispatches, such as one from the Democratic State Committee of Michigan, stating that they had passed a resolution requiring Senator Ferry to appear before them at once and explain his intentions, and that he had declined to reply that he was on his way to them, &c., were not esteemed worthy of notice. At this juncture, the President elect appeared on the roof of his bay-window leaning on the arm of John Morrissey, who beckoned for silence, but did not get it for nearly half an hour. When the cheers subsided, Mr. Morrissey announced that as he had conducted the Presidential election heretofore declared "off" were now "on," and that all who refused to pay would be tried by a court-martial. President-elect Tilden said that he was so busy packing for Washington that he could only repeat his words on a former occasion, "We have got 'em this time." He bowed, and retired. Ex-Confederate Col. Burton N. Harrison then appeared and announced that the programme of the inauguration ceremonies had been received from the printer, and would be distributed at once. A copy fell into my hands, and I proceed to look at the top with the figures 205. The procession was to be headed by a regiment of "bull-dozers" from each of the States giving Tilden his "popular majority of over a quarter of a million." Those thus honored were Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, and Mississippi. These regiments were to be armed with shot guns, loaded with soft money bird shot.

Democratic spectators were advised to wear sheet-iron overalls, and would see rare and harmless sport, as the advance guard would occasionally aim low and fire into the crowd, to the astonishment of sight-seeing darkies and Republicans. Behind the guard of honor was to come the Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, mounted on one mule and leading the other six of the seven ordered in Indiana on the day of the October election. Next to him came the committee itself in an omnibus, from which were thrown copies of all the proclamations issued during the campaign—one announcing the election of Tilden; another warning the people not to believe Tweed's confession, if made, all signed A. S. Hewitt, Chairman. Besides these were copies of a resolution of the House of Representatives disowning the Senate and conferring its powers and duties upon the Democratic National Committee, and constituting A. S. Hewitt, ex officio Vice President pro tem.

Next came a cage formerly used by Barnum to transport the Bengal tiger, drawn by six horses, with "ex-Boss Tweed" in plain sight behind the bars. Above waved a banner with an inscription to the effect that the within monster was captured by the great Reformer, Samuel J. Tilden, in a personal combat at Vigo, in Spain, and brought from thence by main force of legal documents drawn up by the President-elect in defiance of all Spanish nation. Behind the cage was to come Barnum's "triumphal car," with the President-elect standing under the canopy leaning on "a barrel of money." On the lower level, above the wheels, was Jeff Davis seated in front and Hendricks in the rear, while Barton N. Harrison was to act "coach" in attendance upon the latter. Following the car was to be an open barouche occupied by Moses, the lawgiver of South Carolina, with a card pendant containing a notice that all other Chief Justices, pending the administration of the oath of office, should Waite. Next came the House of Representatives on foot, headed by the Speaker bearing an engrossed copy of the resolution just passed, directing the payment of President Tilden's delinquent income tax out of the Geneva award funds, and abolishing all penalties for perjury.

Just as I had got that far on the programme, the next line being the assignment of ex-Duke Gwin and Oregon Elector Cronin to places in the procession, a cavalryman rushed up the steps, his sabre jingling against his spurs, who cried out, "Dinna ye hear the slogan? The Tammanys are coming!" They have captured the Custom-house, the Sub-Treasury, and the Post Office, and are now marching to assault the Union League Club-house, and the coming this way to pay their respects to the "Man of their choice." Just here, Mr. Editor, my reverie ended as I found myself arrived at the north end of Irving place, facing on Gramercy Park. At first I mistook the gilded iron pickets of the Park fence for muskets held in line by soldiers, but soon saw my mistake. It was the dread hour of 8 P. M., on the 8th of January, 1877. It all was quiet as the grave; no one put a solitary policeman being in sight! A dim light shone through the bay-window of the ex-Governor's house, but that was all. Can it be, said I to myself, that this is the day for the "Democratic uprising," when here, right in the Mecca of Democracy, all is still as death? I approached the slow-pacing policeman. He told me that nothing unusual had occurred in that vicinity all day; that he believed that Tilden himself was nearly alone in his library harking to his private operator reading resolutions passed by Democratic Conventions in Vermont and other strongholds.

The illusion was then thoroughly dispelled, but the word "harking" brought to mind the story told at the outset of this letter. I went home and told my wife of my expectations and the slim results, and that I would like to quote some suitable poetry on this occasion; something that had "hark" or "harking" in it. We looked through all the poets from Longfellow to Spencer, but found nothing until we took up an old Watts hymn book, and the very word we wanted appeared in a line thus: "Hark! from the tombs a solemn sound." We altered the verse to suit as follows:

Hark! from the tombs a solemn sound—
All ears attend the cry—
Cease, "Shammy!" stew the political ground
Where you must henceforth lie.

The moral I draw from this experience is, Mr. Editor, that when New-York City don't care enough about Samuel Tilden's induction to undertake public demonstrations, attempts to "fire the Democratic heart" in Republican States by the Tilden Literary Bureau are not worth reporting in the newspapers, to disturb the peace of timid minds like the writer, who was a

NEW-YORK DEMOCRAT.

HISTORIC GROUND.

WHAT WAS MADE BY THE STERLING FURNACE—INTERESTING REMINISCENCES.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your paper of last Sunday is a very interesting letter about Greenwood Lake, but its closing paragraph shows that your correspondent came near treading on the ashes of the prophets without knowing it, and his misunderstanding of the past is paralleled by his apparent ignorance of the present state of some affairs near the sheet of water whose picturesqueness he so well appreciates.

He says "We dwellers in and about the lake claim that the great chain stretched across the Hudson, to prevent the British from ascending the river during the Revolution was made at Sterling Furnace, now in ruins, but the claim he thinks invalid, because the links were so large, and there was no foundry at Stafling. The dwellers in the lake are, presumably, some stragglers from the lacustrine age, generally supposed to have vanished long ago, and they may have always made chains at foundries, although the habits of those old lake dwellers have not hitherto been sufficiently known to enable previous archæologists to assert it—but nowadays chains are not cast at any foundry.

The chain in question was made at Sterling by Peter Townsend, in six weeks, in the Spring of 1788; each link weighed from 140 to 150 pounds, and the whole chain weighed 186 tons in all. Col. Timothy Pickering superintended, on the part of the Government, its manufacture, and fuller details may be found in his published life, in Dr. Horton's Geological Report of 1839, in Lossing's Field Book of the Revolution, in Peare's recently published History of Iron Manufacture in America, and in other unchallenged publications.

The Sterling works are not in ruins, but running on a scale to make the iron-masters of 1778 astonished, could they see them, although the Townsends are not enterprising race, and made at this same Sterling the first anchor made in the State in 1773. The United States frigate Constitution's anchors were made here, as well as all the anchors for the first ships of war flying the Stars and Stripes. The first blister steel in the State was made here in 1810, and here in 1816 was cast for the Government the first cannon in the State, and of the many made by them not one failed in the proof. Yours truly,

A. W. HUMPHREYS.

THE TROUBLES OF A UNITED STATES CONSUL.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

You will permit me, I hope, to rectify certain statements which have appeared in New-York, and possibly other American newspapers, relative to Mr. F. W. Potter, United States Consul in this city. My only motive for addressing you is a desire to establish the truth, which, from my position as Secretary in this Consulate, I am, I believe, competent to do, being necessarily in possession of all the facts.

It is quite needless to point out the source whence have proceeded the various statements of perverted facts which have appeared in the Paris Figaro and some American papers. Let it suffice to say that what I have to state in contradiction can be very easily verified by applying to the American Legation at Paris. I desire to say, then:

1. It is not true that Mr. Potter has been sued for rent, or pleaded any privilege to avoid payment of that or any other debt.

2. It is not true that Mr. Potter owes any arrears of salary to a person lately occupying the position of Secretary in this Consulate.

Mr. Potter paid his rent punctually up to Easter of the present year, as the receipts in possession of the State Department will show. In the month of July, 1875, Mr. Potter found himself compelled to quit the proprietors of his dwelling and consular offices, to oblige her to make certain necessary repairs, and obtained judgment in his favor. Nevertheless, the required repairs have not been made, as the report of the expert appointed by the court, and who visited the apartments in question no later than three weeks ago, conclusively proves. Mr. Potter has, naturally, refused to pay the rent due until those repairs are made or until his lease is canceled. The proprietor refuses to do either.

It is true that the person lately occupying the post of Secretary did endeavor to bring suit against Mr. Potter for arrears of salary alleged to be due. The reply was easy, and was prepared by me from the books kept exclusively by that person, which show from his own entries, that he was not only paid but overpaid. In this affair Mr. Potter's counsel, after having read the reply and examined the books, advised Mr. Potter not to appear in court, but to treat the complaint with contempt. In conclusion, I have no hesitation in saying that American newspapers have been grossly imposed upon.

E. MARTIN,
Secretary United States Consulate.

HOW A SHOT TOLD IN NEW-ORLEANS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The "Bloodless Revolution," as the Sun styles the action of the White Liners at New-Orleans, reminds me very forcibly of a scene enacted at the same place in April, 1862, when Admiral Farragut was in the offing. The history of the affair is, in short, as follows:

Shortly after the arrival of the fleet at New-Orleans, we conceived it to be our duty to hoist the "Red, White and Blue" over the Custom-house. To do it was a risk, as the levee and lower part of Canal street was crowded with citizens who were rebels, but hadn't the pluck to carry a musket for the Confederacy. Yet these men were howling mad, and threatened the boat's crew and file or marines who landed for the purpose above indicated. This small company proceeded direct to the Custom-house and raised the Stars and Stripes on the flag-staff, amid the jeers and howls of the crowd below. They were very warlike on this occasion; but mark the result. After our men had performed their duty, Admiral Farragut proclaimed through his officers that if the flag was hauled down he would shoot the person doing it. In about two hours after the return of the officers and men to their ship, a man was seen climbing the flag-staff to seize the halyards, and thus lower the flag. This was at once reported to the Admiral, who gave orders to the Quarter Gunner to train his gun on the man, which order was promptly obeyed, and in less time than I can write it, the body of the man was in the street nearly severed. Well, I have seen stampeding, but the style in which that crowd dispersed was most marvelous. We heard subsequently that they halted at "Lafayette square" long enough to take breath, and then continued their course to the lake. Now, Mr. Editor, I am of the opinion, and if the truth were known it would prove I was correct, that this army at New-Orleans yesterday was composed of about the same class that Farragut disbanded with one shot, and that fired far over their heads. They are good "nigger shooters," and rally promptly when an innocent black man proclaims his right under the Constitution, but remain quietly in their holes when the Government troops put in an appearance.

WHAT DOES "HONOR" MEAN?

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I am bothered about this matter of "honor." Can you give me light? This is the case: A and B are two young bloods between whom there is an unpleasantness. A waylays B in a public street, alone and unarmed, and proceeds to cowhide him, that is, as I understand it, beats him as he would a dog; humiliates him, treats him as no gentleman should be treated—in a word, publicly disgraces him. B, smarting with the beating and with the scar on his nose, sends A a challenge to fight, which A strangely accepts. Here comes in my trouble. A has publicly disgraced B, has cast the highest possible indignity upon him; has, as far as he is concerned, deprived him of all the claims of a gentleman; and yet he consents, having done that, to stand on the same platform with him, and allows B a chance to take his life, just as if he was an equal. I have my own thoughts about the wickedness and the murderousness of the matter. I don't want any help from you about that. But please tell me what kind of "honor" it is that rehabilitates a man publicly degraded so that he can demand "satisfaction" from the one who affixed upon him the indelible disgrace? It seems to me that the "code" is not only wicked, but that it is illogical and ridiculous.

INQUIRER.

THE ASH-BARREL GRIEVANCE.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

It is now nearly two weeks since the ash-barrels on William and Beekman streets, and possibly in many others, have been emptied, and I should like to inquire through your columns how much longer we are to expect a continuance of this state of things. In one instance, 14 barrels of various matter obstruct the sidewalk in front of a building on William street, and all who have offices on the above-named streets are put to much inconvenience.

THE PERILS OF THE COAST.

THE UNITED STATES LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE OFFICER IN CHARGE—ACCOUNT OF THE RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES—A SEA AND LAKE COAST-LINE OF MORE THAN 10,000 MILES—EARLY APATHY OF THE GOVERNMENT IN PROTECTING NAVIGATION—INITIATION AND OPERATIONS OF THE LIFE-SAVING SERVICE—A DECREASE OF 87½ PER CENT. IN THE LOSS OF LIFE SINCE 1871.

The report of S. I. Kimball, in charge of the United States Life-saving Service, made to Hon. Lot M. Morrill, Secretary of the Treasury, and dated Nov. 30, 1876, has just been made public in printed form. The appropriations for the Life-saving Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, were $201,580, and the appropriations for the life-saving contingent fund for the same period were $30,000. The total net expenditures during the year were $148,683 64 for the former and $26,818 43 for the latter. There remained standing to the credit of the respective appropriations at the close of the year $55,446 68, and $3,459 66. The outstanding claims against the appropriation for contingent expenses, which are chiefly for medals in course of preparation, will exhaust it.

The sea and lake coast-line of the United States is more than 10,000 miles in extent, and exceeds that of any other nation. It passes through almost every variety of climate, and is, therefore, subject to all vicissitudes of weather, from the rigors of Winter storms and tempests in the north to the hurricanes and tornadoes of the tropics. The face of the country along which it passes is infinitely varied, and its outlines present every feature of coastwise danger to the mariner. The Government was exceedingly tardy in lighting the salient points of the coast, and of ascertaining and appropriately marking its dangerous localities. In 1820 it maintained but 55 light-houses. In 1832, the United States Coast Survey was organized, and there is now a series of general coast charts of nearly the whole of the Atlantic coast. The Light-house Board has also rendered important service, and there are at present on the coasts of the United States, 637 light-houses, and 30 light-ships.

The first step taken by the Government toward diminishing the perils or alleviating the miseries of the shipwrecked was in December, 1837, when the President was authorized to order any suitable number of public vessels to cruise upon the coast in the severe portion of the season to afford aid to vessels in distress. Under this authority some of the naval vessels were designated for this duty, but on account of their size and draught they were superseded by revenue cutters. Since 1860 only a record of the services of these vessels in this direction has been kept. It shows that from 1860 to the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, inclusive, the number of vessels assisted in distress was 2,386, and the number of lives saved 474. The plan of affording relief to vessels wrecked upon the coast by the establishment of buildings for the shelter of the shipwrecked, and for the preservation of life-boats, and other apparatus for aiding stranded vessels, appears to have been first considered by the Government in 1848, although the Humane Society of Massachusetts had erected huts of shelter, and stationed boats upon the coast with good effect more than half a century before. In 1848 Hon. William A. Newell, of New-Jersey, advocated the merits of this plan in the House of Representatives, and $10,000 were appropriated for providing the apparatus necessary for the better preservation of life and property from shipwreck on the coast of New-Jersey lying between Sandy Hook and Little Egg Harbor. In March, 1849, a like sum was appropriated for means for the preservation of life and property shipwrecked on the coast of the United States, and the same amount to provide surf-boats and other appliances along the coast of New-Jersey, between Little Egg Harbor and Cape May. Eight stations were located on the outer shore of Long Island, and two in Long Island Sound, and six were added to those on the New-Jersey coast. In a great storm in January, 1850, which strewed the New-Jersey coast with many wrecks, the life-car demonstrated its great usefulness by conveying from the stranded ship Ayreshire 201 persons, including women with children in their arms, through a surf that ran so high that no boat could live and the value of these appliances was thus established, and further appropriations for the same purposes were made from time to time until 1854, at which time the coast had been furnished at different periods with 82 lifa-beats, exclusive of the 28 at the stations erected on the New-Jersey coast, the 10 on the outer shore of Long Island, and those in Long Island Sound. For some of these boats boat-houses were built by the Government in the neighborhood of light-houses, and they were placed under the supervision of light-house keepers and officers of the Customs, who generally took good care of them, but in a few instances they were placed in care of town corporations, which became forgetful of them, or of short-lived benevolent societies, which, expiring, left them to decay.

This condition of things excited the public interest, and attracted the attention of Congress. The Senate Committee on Commerce called upon the department for information, and invited its suggestions in respect to further provision for the protection of life on the coast. The Secretary of the Treasury replied, claiming that upon establishing the stations and furnishing them with surf-boats, all control on the part of the Government ceased. He said, however, that he was satisfied that the number of stations should be doubled, and that they should be put in charge of proper persons. In December, 1854, a bill was passed authorizing the establishment of additional stations on the coasts of Long Island and New-Jersey, and the appointment of a superintendent for each coast and a keeper for each station. No provision was made for the employment of crews.

In the Winter of 1870-71 several fatal disasters occurred upon the coasts within the limits of the operations of the service. The attendant circumstances showed that the loss of life was largely due to the want of proper attention on the part of the employes and the inefficient condition of the boats and apparatus. This being represented to Congress, $200,000 were appropriated in April, 1871, and the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to employ crews of experienced surfmen at such stations and for such periods as he might deem safe and proper. In August, 1871, a thorough reorganization of the service was begun. Incapable and inefficient officers were removed, and measures were taken for the establishment of as many additional stations on the coasts of Long Island and New-Jersey as were necessary to bring them within about three miles of each other, with a view to enable them to communicate by means of signals. Two of these lines were built on the coast of New-Jersey, and six on that of Long Island, and the old ones either rebuilt or enlarged. All the stations were supplied with apparatus adapted to the several localities, and such changes made in their locations as were found necessary. In May, 1872, a commission of officers of the Navy, officers of the Treasury Department, and citizens familiar with the coast and the methods then in use for saving life from stranded vessels, was organized. This commission met at Seabright, on the New-Jersey coast, for the purpose of examining and testing such life-saving apparatus as might be submitted. Several surf and life-boats, a wagon for the transportation of boats, the mortar then in use at most of the stations on the coast, a new rocket and apparatus designed to supersede the use of the mortar, a life-raft, the life-saving dress of Mr. C. S. Merriman (since made use of on the explosion of Paul Boyton in it,) and some night signals were submitted, examined, and tested. The commission reported in favor of the cedar surf-boats, then in general use by the wreckers on the coast of New-Jersey, with the suggestion that certain modifications might be worthy of consideration. The test of the mortar satisfied the commission that it was sufficiently effective to answer the purposes required of it upon almost any point upon the coast. The experiments with the line rockets were not in all respects satisfactory. The adoption of the raft presented was not recommended. The life-preserving dress was considered one of the most useful inventions of the day, and it was recommended that each station be supplied with one suit to each surfman employed. The night signals were also favorably recommended, and have been supplied to all the stations.

Since the impulse given in 1871 the service has been gradually improved, and as at present organized is embraced in 11 districts, into which the sea and lake coasts are divided. District No. 1 includes the coasts of Maine and New-Hampshire, and has 6 stations; No. 2, the coast of Massachusetts, with 14 stations; No. 3, the coasts of Rhode Island and New-York, (Long Island,) with 34 stations; No. 4, the coast of New-Jersey, with 38 stations; No. 5, the coasts of Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia from Cape Henlopen to Cape Charles, with 6 stations; No. 6, the coasts of Virginia and North Carolina, from Cape Henry to Cape Hatteras, with 10 stations; No. 7, the coast of Florida, with 5 stations; No. 8, the coasts of Lakes Ontario and Erie, with 9 stations; No. 9, the coasts of Lakes Huron and Superior, with 9 stations; No. 10, the coast of Lake Michigan, with 12 stations; and No. 11, the Pacific coast, with 8 stations. The operations of the service during the last fiscal year were confined to the first six districts mentioned, the stations in the remainder being in process of equipment. District No. 5 was organized during the fiscal year. The personnel of the service, as now administered, embraces a Superintendent for each district, and an Assistant Superintendent for District No. 4; a keeper for each station, and a crew of six surfmen for each, the latter being employed for different periods upon different portions of the coast, as the length of the inclement season at each is supposed to require. The annual compensation of Superintendents is $1,000 each, except in Districts Nos. 3 and 4, where it is fixed at $1,500 each; that of the Assistant Superintendent is $500 per annum, and that of the keepers $200. The surfmen receive $40 per month during the period of their active employment, in which they are required to reside at the stations. A system of inspection is maintained through an inspector and two assistants.

There were 108 disasters to vessels during the year within the limits of the operations of the several districts. There were 751 persons on board these vessels, and the number of lives saved was 729, and the number lost was 22. The number of shipwrecked persons sheltered at the stations was 242, and the number of days' shelter afforded was 639. The estimated value of the vessels was $1,251,500, and that of their cargoes $479,038, making the total value imperiled $1,730,538. The total amount of property saved was $847,184, and the amount lost $883,354. The number of disasters involving total loss of vessels and cargoes was 25.

The statistics of the operations of the service for the five years ending on June 30, 1876, show that the total number of vessels wrecked was 273; their total value, $4,934,650; the total value of their cargoes, $2,905,424; total value of property saved, $5,254,300; total value of property lost, $2,549,774; number of lives imperiled, 3,230; lives saved, 3,189; lives lost, 41; number of persons sheltered, 591; number of days' shelter afforded, 1,904.

Prior to 1850 there is no record of the number of vessels wrecked and lives lost. But from 1850 to 1871, from the imperfect data obtained, there is a basis for some comparison. During these 20 years, 512 persons perished on the coasts of New-Jersey and Long Island alone, and though this is but a fragment of the fact, and the evidence is extant that the actual loss, though its number is unknown, was far greater, yet even this aggregate yields for that coast an average of over 25 persons lost per annum. In the statistics given, the loss on the same coast since 1871 was only 16 persons in five years, against the average annual loss of 25.0 prior to 1871—the sum being but a fraction of the reality—the reorganized service makes a record of 3.2 per annum, a decrease of 87½ per cent.

The localities of the life-boat stations on the lake coasts, from the nature of such a coast as to admit of the launching of self-righting and self-bailing boats directly from the boat-houses into the deep water of harbors or other sheltered places, a boat of this kind has been supplied to every completed life-boat station. A new surf-boat, fitted with air cases, cork fenders, and a mast and sail, recently designed, has been furnished to all the newly-constructed life-saving stations.

The Rider life-raft was examined by a commission appointed for the purpose, and seven constructed in accordance with the suggestions of the commission, and distributed to the stations on the Atlantic coast, and one for the lakes.

During the year three life-saving medals of the first class and two of the second class were awarded. Those of the first class were bestowed upon Messrs. Lucien M. Clemons, Hubbard M. Clemons, and A. J. Clemons, of Marblehead, Ohio. These gentlemen—brothers—displayed the highest gallantry in rescuing two men from the schooner Consuelo, on May 1, 1875. The medals of the second class were given to Messrs. Otis N. Wheeler and John O. Philbrick for services in saving two wrecked men on Watts' Ledge, on the coast of Maine, on Nov. 30, 1875.

The storm-signal system of the Signal Service is directly connected with life-saving stations at nine localities upon the Atlantic coast. The benefits derived from the combination of the two systems have fully equaled anticipation.

A number of valuable books were donated to the different stations during the year, and were all the more acceptable because of the absence of any provision by the Government to furnish libraries for the men.

LAW REPORTS.

A BREACH OF PROMISE CASE.

THE SUIT OF MARY LEONARD AGAINST WILLIAM VAN WARAN WILDE FOR BREACH OF PROMISE AND SEDUCTION DISMISSED.

A very remarkable suit, brought by Mary Leonard, or Mary Leonhart, against William Van Waran Wilde, was made the subject of a decision by Judge Joseph F. Daly, in the Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday. The action was brought to recover $10,000 for alleged seduction and breach of promise of marriage. The plaintiff brought another action against the defendant in the Superior Court for wages which she claimed were due to her. She also sued his brother for slander. All three suits have been dismissed for failure to prosecute, not, however, until after the defendants had answered them. The seduction suit was brought before Judge Daly on a motion to set aside the judgment obtained by the defendant. The plaintiff, in support of the motion, averred that the action had been begun by Charles Fraser, as her attorney, and that after she had paid him some money, he had demanded $10 to put the case on the calendar. She sold her furniture to procure this money. After this, she avers, Fraser demanded $25 more, and because she could not pay this amount, Fraser refused to proceed. She obtained the papers in the case from the latter, and took them to Charles Lee Clarke, another attorney. Clarke would not act, however, until he had been substituted by order of court. The plaintiff then asked Fraser to send his consent to the substitution, and Fraser promised to do so, and she says she believes he did. Clarke, however, denied having received the consent, and refused to act because he had not received it. Fraser, of course, refused to act, because Clarke had been substituted by the plaintiff as her attorney. While this wrangle was going on the suits brought by her were dismissed. She finally obtained an order of court displacing both Fraser and Clarke from the case, and substituting Messrs. Lexow & Haldane as her attorneys. Her delay, she claimed, was owing to her failure to interest counsel in her behalf because of her poverty. In her complaint against the defendant, she alleges that she went to Wilde's house as his housekeeper on July 17, 1875. Soon afterward she says he asked her to marry him, and she consented. After the promise of marriage, she claims, he seduced her. She lived with him until February, 1876. The defendant, in answer to these allegations, avers that before coming to his house the plaintiff was living in an adjoining house with her husband, one Lorenzo Haberkorn. She came to him, Wilde says, asking him to engage her as his housekeeper. She then said her husband had left her, and that she did not care for him. Wilde says he employed her as his housekeeper, but she behaved so badly that he was obliged to reprove her at different times, and finally to discharge her. An affidavit was made by Rev. Mr. Bergen, in which the latter avers that he married the plaintiff to one Frederick Leonhart, in March, 1874, and to Frederick Haberkorn on June 3, 1875, Leonhart having died in the meantime. The plaintiff says that shortly after her marriage with Haberkorn she discovered that the latter had been previously married, and that his wife was still living in Germany. Haberkorn, she says, admitted this and left the country shortly afterward. She went to Wilde's house she avers she heard that Haberkorn had died in England. She then consented to marry the defendant. She denies the charges of bad conduct at the latter's house, and brings affidavits of persons who swear to her good character. Judge Daly denied the motion to set aside the judgment on the ground that in order to maintain her action the plaintiff would have to prove that she was not married at the time the alleged promise of marriage was made by defendant. This proof she did not offer. She gave merely a hearsay statement as to Haberkorn's first marriage and his alleged death. She was in court without a case, since the evidence showed she was a married woman at the time, as she says, when she received and accepted the defendant's promise of marriage.

THE NEWELL DIVORCE SUIT.

A MOTION GRANTED TO SUPPRESS TESTIMONY TAKEN ON COMMISSION—THE PLAINTIFF CHARGED WITH BEING INSANE ON THE SUBJECT OF A WILL.

The suit of Anna Newell against Lorenzo D. Newell was before Judge Donohue in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, on a motion to suppress some testimony taken by commission in Boston, Mass. The action is brought by the plaintiff for an absolute divorce, on the ground of the defendant's alleged adultery. He not only denies the charge, but makes a similar accusation against the plaintiff. He alleges that she had improper relations with a young man in Boston about four years ago, while she was there attending a suit involving the ownership of over $2,000,000 of property. This property was claimed by Mrs. Newell under a will made by William H. Boardman, deceased. The heirs claimed that the will was a bogus one, and Mrs. Newell was in Boston to attend the trial in person. After the beginning of the divorce case application was made by Mr. Newell for the examination, on commission, in Boston, of Daniel C. Knowlton, the owner of the boarding-house at which Mrs. Newell had been stopping; of Frank Dugan, the head waiter, and of Mary Campbell, the chamber-maid of the house. These persons, the defendant claimed, were able to give material evidence as to the charges made by him. Judge Westbrook, before whom the motion was made, made an order issuing a commission to two Commissioners, one named by the plaintiff and the other by the defendant. The defendant sent the commission to the Commissioner named by him, and that Commissioner sent to the one named by Mrs. Newell, now requesting his attendance. By an accident, however, the name was omitted, and the testimony of the persons named was taken by the single Commissioner named by the husband. This testimony it was sought to suppress. Mrs. Newell, in support of the application, swore that in the trial of her suit in regard to the Boardman estate in Boston, the heirs and their attorneys had made every effort to destroy her character as a chaste woman, and had made statements against her to the defendant. She denied altogether the allegations made by the persons who had given testimony, and desired the Commissioner named by her to be present while testimony was being taken. In opposition to the motion, Mrs. Newell made affidavit that the plaintiff had, against his expressed wish, wholly absented herself from his house since June, 1874, and had resided in Boston, where she carried on her litigation with Mr. Boardman's heirs. Boardman had not been related to her in any way, and yet she claims he gave her the bulk of his property by a will, which she claims was destroyed or concealed by Boardman's heirs. The case had been decided against her claim, and he believes she has become perfectly insane on the subject of her assumed claims against the Boardman estate. While residing in Boston, he says, she was guilty of gross improprieties. The information regarding these acts, however, he says was not received from the attorneys for the Boardman heirs. Judge Donohue granted the motion to suppress the testimony taken, holding that there was not sufficient evidence to show that the second Commissioner had declined to act, or was afforded such opportunity to act as made his non-attendance a refusal to act.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—The following cases were argued in the United States Supreme Court yesterday:

No. 160.—Fuller & Barnum vs. Zentzler & Scates.—Appeal from the Circuit Court for the Northern District of Illinois. No. 161.—Same vs. Same, and No. 162, Fuller & Barnum vs. Goodrich.—These were actions to recover for an alleged infringement of the complainants' patent for improvements in tuckers for sewing-machines. The improvement claimed was a vibrating marking instrument or instruments that move in unison with the needle so as to create a stitch without pressing upon it. The court found the patent or patents, for there were two of them, to be valid, but held that there had been no infringement. From this decree the appeal is taken, and it is insisted that the court erred in its conclusion of facts that there was no infringement. The appellees urge that there was error in sustaining the patent. Dickenson & Barnum for appellants; W. B. Scates for appellee.

No. 695.—Missouri Valley Life Insurance Company vs. Smith.—Error to the Circuit Court for the District of Kansas.—This was an action upon a policy of insurance, issued by the company upon the life of one Henry Smith, upon the application of his wife, and for her benefit. The defense was that under the statutes of Missouri the wife could not take or hold a policy upon the life of her husband, and that therefore the policy was void; but that it not void, then the claim should be sued in the name of the administrators of the deceased. The court held the defenses were not for the company to set up after receiving the premiums on the policy, and this ruling is the error assigned here. The case was submitted without argument. T. A. Hurd for plaintiffs in error. J. W. English and J. C. Douglass for defendant.

No. 878.—Hydenfeldt vs. Daney Silver Mining Company.—Error to the Circuit Court for Nevada.—This is an action to recover a quantity of land in Lyon County, Nev., brought by the plaintiff in error, claiming that the Enabling act authorizing the people of the Territory to form a State Government made a present grant to the State of certain sections of land, and therefore that it was the owner, by virtue of such grant, at the time it issued the patent to this grantor. The court, however, held that the lands in question, being mineral lands, were controlled by the act of 1866 concerning mines and mining claims, before the grant to the State took effect, and gave judgment for the company. The case is brought here for review, and was now submitted without argument. W. H. F. Deal, for plaintiff in error; C. E. De Long, for defendant.

MARITAL INCOMPATIBILITY.

THE STORY OF A WIDOW AND WIDOWER WHO MARRIED IN NEW-ORLEANS—A WIFE WHO WENT TO EUROPE FOR HEALTH AND HAPPINESS AND RETURNED TO MEET A DIVORCE SUIT.

In January, 1866, William H. Hunt, a wealthy lawyer of New-Orleans, was married to Mrs. Sarah B. Harrison, a handsome young widow, daughter of the late Jacob Barker, a well-known banker of Louisiana. At the time of the marriage, Hunt was a widower with seven children. The union was not an exceptionally happy one. The fair bride, on the day after the wedding, took occasion to express her regret at the step she had taken, and sighed for her former freedom. She also showed some disappointment in regard to her husband's establishment. Her regret and disappointment seemed to increase with the lapse of time, for in February, 1869, she made a written request to her husband, asking to be allowed to go to Europe, as her "health and happiness require an immediate change of scene." Mr. Hunt gave his wife $1,000 and a letter of credit, authorizing her to draw $200 monthly. Mrs. Hunt left New-Orleans and came to this City, and after remaining here during the Summer of 1869, departed for Europe. In January, 1870, her European trip was interrupted by the receipt of a note from her husband in which the latter announced his intention of procuring a divorce from her. On receiving this information she took passage on a steamer and came to this country. She landed in this City, and has remained here ever since. In March, 1870, the Louisiana Legislature passed a special law in regard to divorces, the passage of which, it was charged, Hunt had procured, believing it provided for his own case. The law was repealed, however, during the same month, by the general revision of the Louisiana laws. On June 16, 1870, Hunt obtained a divorce from his wife, and on May 1, 1871, married another lady. His divorced wife then began an action in the Supreme Court in this City to obtain a divorce from him on the ground of his adultery with his present wife, claiming that the Louisiana divorce was not legal. Chief Justice Davis, at Special Term, upheld the validity of the divorce, and the plaintiff appealed to the General Term, which rendered its decision yesterday. Chief Justice Davis's decision. Judge Barrett, who writes the opinion, says among other things: "The question in this case is whether the court in Louisiana had jurisdiction of the person and the subject matter. If it had, then under the Constitution and laws of the United States, the same effect should be given to its judgment by the courts of this State as it would have in Louisiana. As to the person, the record shows and it is conceded that there was neither a personal service of process nor a voluntary appearance. Was the court for that reason without jurisdiction? * * * The testimony is overwhelming that under the laws of Louisiana, jurisdiction of the person was acquired by the appointment of the curator ad hoc, and that the proceedings were entirely regular. There are many authorities in this State in which it is asserted that jurisdiction in this class of cases cannot be acquired by publication, by posting, by personal service out of the State, or otherwise than by an authorized appearance or personal service within the jurisdiction. * * * In all of these cases, however, it will be found that the facts with respect to notice were grouped with other jurisdictional facts, such as the absence of an actual and bona fide residence or a resort to the foreign State for the purpose of doing what was in the domicile. * * * In none of these cases was the defendant amenable to the laws of the State where the divor

Amid all the Washington gossip about a plan for counting the Electoral vote, there appear to be but two elements of absolute certainty. The essential details of any proposal are still uncertain, and no plan whatever has been as yet submitted which is likely to be accepted by a majority of the Joint Committee. There ought to be amusement as well as instruction for posterity in the childish device of deciding by lottery the composition of a national Returning Board, and there certainly are grave dangers for the present generation in any proposal which aims at dragging the members of the Supreme Court into the quagmire of partisan politics. The Electoral votes will be counted and declared by the only authority who has law and precedent on his side, viz., the President of the Senate, and the sooner the country reconciles itself to that solution of existing difficulties the better. It is tolerably clear that the Joint Committee will be unable to offer any rational mode of solution at all.

The Senate Committee have advanced another step toward the discovery of the source whence issued the $8,000 corruption fund which was sent to Oregon for the purchase of a bogus Electoral vote. The Cashier of the Third National Bank has testified that the check was sent at the request of Col. PELTON, chief of the Bureau of "Nincompoops," Secretary of the National Democratic Committee, and nephew of Mr. TILDEN. After this active gentleman has been put on the stand, it may be found necessary to subpœna the Presidential Pretender himself. If so, we trust that the committee will not neglect to ask him to bring his bank and check books, for the purpose of showing whether the remainder of the funds sent to Oregon were as skillfully covered up as the $8,000 check. There is a strong presumption that a few thousands more were needed to pay for the Grover-Cronin trick, and an analysis of TILDEN'S bank account, after the fashion of the celebrated analysis of the Broadway bank accounts relating to TWEED and others, would be equally instructive and timely.

The fate of the country is once more in the hands of HEWITT. He failed to attend the Tilden conference last night at Gramercy Park, and the conference was consequently unable to arrive at any result. So, from Maine to California, the expectant Democracy are left standing on tip-toe, awaiting the decision of the momentous question whether they are to appear in Washington—half a million strong—on the 14th of February, to "assist" in counting the Electoral vote, and thus also the nation at large is left in harrowing uncertainty whether the "popular uprising" farce of the 8th of January is to be repeated four weeks from Wednesday under the shadow of the Capitol. There is some consolation in learning that HEWITT has, somehow, developed common-sense enough to disapprove of the proposed mass convention, and that his failure to attend the conference last night was probably due to an indisposition to come in conflict with some of his "invincible in peace and invisible in war" friends who mustered in force at the Tilden mansion.

The streets are to be cleaned at last, or rather Broadway and some of the principal thoroughfares are to be relieved of their accumulated mass of snow and ice. The Police Commissioners wanted a trifling $150,000 or so to be appropriated for this special work, and they refused to do anything till it was given them. Let it not be too hastily inferred that the Commissioners have not carried their point, even though they have apparently been compelled to "back down." The street-cleaning appropriation amounts to some $2,000 a day. How much of this has been spent during the last thirty days for the purposes for which it is intended? Very much less than half, if the evidence of the senses of the observing citizen is to be trusted. It will thus be seen that an impudent device to gain time was quite as effective for the ends of the Police Board as the desired action of the Board of Apportionment. They have been enabled to snap their fingers at an indignant public, and to pocket, for purposes best known to themselves, the entire amount of the appropriation asked for, by professing a hypocritical regard for the letter of the law, and by showing a very thorough contempt for its spirit. And yet, we have what is called a very harmonious City Government.

The Bennett-May duel has ceased to interest, or amuse, and the public will learn, with comparative indifference, that Mr. BENNETT has quietly slipped away to Europe. Let us hope that while there, he will employ his leisure in disseminating a taste for bloodless encounters to settle affairs of "honor." An American in Italy was lately foolish enough to fight and wound an abusive portrait painter, after having soundly cuffed that person for reviling American women. Had Mr. BENNETT been there, he could have shown a more excellent way out of the difficulty. It is perhaps to be regretted that the Philadelphia Peace Society was not allowed time to accredit the hero of Marydell as its Special Commissioner to the militant Monarchies of the Old World. It would be an intense relief to all parties to have Russia and Turkey settle their differences by some perfectly harmless explosions of powder, and a sample of the ammunition used in the Bennett-May encounter would doubtless be favorably received by the friends of warfare without wounds. Mr. BENNETT has a great opportunity before him in Europe, and he should not allow the fascinations of the American Club in Paris to deter him from following it up.

NO COMPROMISE IN LOUISIANA.

From different sources at Washington we learn of plans for adjusting the Louisiana difficulties on the basis of a compromise, by which the State Government shall be secured to the Democrats, and certain positions of honor, influence, and emolument shall be assigned to Republicans. The essential feature of the plan, as outlined by Democratic journals, is that NICHOLLS is to be recognized by the Federal Administration as Governor in the place of PACKARD, and that a majority supporting him is to be arranged in both branches of the local Legislature. These points secured, the Democrats appear willing to surrender almost all besides. According to the World, one of the conditions of the proposd arrangement "will send CASEY to the Senate, and may make PINCHBACK Collector." "The rest of the positions," the same authority assures us, are to be distributed "between two factions;" and we are told that the whole scheme meets with the approval of Democratic leaders at Washington, and also commends itself to members of the Administration, other of whose friends and supporters "are variously provided for." Another version of the combination, evidently derived from Democratic informants, asserts that "CASEY will be elected to the United States Senate by the Democrats for the short term," the consideration being that "enough Republican members" shall be drawn from the Republican Legislature "to leave the latter without a quorum." It this is accomplished, the dispatch adds, "the President will recognize NICHOLLS as Governor."

No mention is made in any of the dispatches, of the Electoral vote as an element in the bargain. It is clear that in Louisiana, as in South Carolina, comparatively little interest is felt by the Democrats in the fortunes of Mr. TILDEN. They are willing to acquiesce in his defeat without more ado, if only they can obtain the ascendency in State affairs. The fact that negotiations pointing to this result are looked upon favorably by the Democrats at Washington, and are published by their journals at the North without remonstrance or complaint, is a curious commentary upon Mr. TILDEN'S position. The party in the South care nothing for him except so far as his success might help them to acquire absolute mastery in their respective States. To attain it they are willing to pay any price. These reports of what is alleged to be going on in regard to Louisiana show that to get possession of the State Government, NICHOLLS and his supporters will not hesitate to abandon every profession of principle, to make merchandise of official positions, and to take to their bosoms the men they have denounced as corruptionists and thieves.

Perhaps there is nothing in all this that should occasion surprise. For years past the intrigues and rascalities of Louisiana politicians have scandalized the nation. We have almost learned to consider civil war as the necessary sequence of an election in the State. Defeated at the polls, the Democrats are accustomed to overthrow by armed force the Government which the Returning Board has declared duly elected. Then bargaining begins. There are Democrats who are willing to buy, and there are Republicans willing to be sold. A compromise is patched up, to whose terms neither side adheres honorably. Mutual accusations of bad faith follow. Each faction abuses the other more bitterly than before. Another election occurs, and chaos reigns again, as at this moment. Men who aspire to be Republican leaders are quarreling among themselves. PINCHBACK the renowned still looks ambitiously to the United States Senate, and is doing all he can to embarrass PACKARD, the legal Governor, who stands in his way. CASEY covets the same distinction, and for a similar reason withholds his favor from PACKARD. We see CASEY'S name in a published list of Republicans who, sustain the usurper, NICHOLLS, and the disreputable efforts of PINCHBACK to break down the Republican Legislature prepare us for any bargain he may make. Hence, the inherent probability of the plan by which CASEY is to go to the Senate as a protégé of NICHOLLS, and PINCHBACK is to acquire the Collectorship of the port. Of course, this presupposes the concurrence of the Federal Administration; but if CASEY were provided for all things might be possible. As for NICHOLLS, he sinks his own scruples out of regard for the success of his party. There is no trafficking so base that it can shock his sense of honor, if it gain for him the uncontested possession of the Executive chair and enable his party at the next election to practice "bull-dozing" and fraud with impunity.

But neither President GRANT nor the Republican Party can afford to sanction this mode of terminating the Louisiana contest. Any arrangement which Messrs. NICHOLLS, CASEY, and PACKARD make in New-Orleans will be of no avail until it be ratified at Washington. We cannot believe that any personal consideration will induce the President to approve of a bargain and sale that would be disgraceful to all concerned, and would be fatal to the Republican cause in a State which of right belongs to the Republican Party.

THE EXERCISE OF THE APPOINTING POWER.

One of the most discouraging signs of our times is the low estimate placed by our public men upon the trust reposed in them of appointing to official positions. This great duty has come to be regarded as an opportunity for the personal advancement or pecuniary gain of the appointing power, or for securing additional support to his political party. Fitness to discharge the duties of the office is seldom a consideration. A business man employs an agent, clerk, or book-keeper with some regard for the fitness of the persons so employed, and organizes his force of employes with a view to obtaining the largest degree of intelligence and efficiency. In a public office, however, this is not ordinarily required; the most unfit and least qualified men are put in responsible places. The discretion in this regard, in our Municipal officers, is abused to an extent that ought more frequently to insure the impeachment and degradation of the appointer.

It is a suggestive commentary on the complimentary testimonial recently tendered to ex-Mayor WICKHAM, on the assumed ground of his excellent appointments, that there have been few more objectionable appointments in our late local history than some of those made by Mr. WICKHAM himself. It may be that the administration of FITZ JOHN PORTER has passed away from public recollection; but it is nevertheless a fact that PORTER, who was one of the earliest of WICKHAM'S appointees, made his brief administration a public reproach. It may not be remembered either that during Mr. WICKHAM'S administration the terms of office of the several City Marshals expired, and that an admirable opportunity was afforded for raising the tone of this branch of Municipal Government. But will any one venture to say that the Marshals appointed by WICKHAM were as a class in any degree elevated above their predecessors?

The disreputable bargains of last Winter, by which the defeat of certain valuable reform measures in the Legislature was promptly followed, and in some cases anticipated, on the part of Mayor WICKHAM, by certain notorious appointments in the Police Department and Board of Excise, may by this time be forgotten. But the diminution of the Excise receipts, and the presentment of the Grand Jury against the board, do not speak of any remarkable degree of faithfulness on the part of Mr. WICKHAM'S appointees. It does not seem, either, that the efficiency of the Police Board is very striking, or does it appear, from the emphatic manner in which the present Controller recently snubbed the President of the board, that Mr. KELLY has any great admiration for Gen. SMITH—both of them appointed to their respective positions by Mr. WICKHAM. In the matter of the late appointment of Controller it could not have been otherwise than apparent to Mayor WICKHAM that in failing to renominate the ex-Controller he was acting in opposition to the wishes of the respectable part of the community and studiously ignoring the great moneyed institutions and influential tax-payers. If he plead that no confirmation could be had from the Board of Aldermen, this was the greater recommendation to the respectable citizen. In making any appointment at all he was exercising a function which courtesy at least would have remitted to his successor. This very practice of an outgoing officer making appointments to extend beyond his own official term has since been emphatically disapproved, in his inaugural Message, by the present Democratic Governor.

But there is no more notable instance of the character of WICKHAM'S appointments than in the Park Department as lately organized. It is quite unnecessary to do more than recall the appointment of Mr. W. R. MARTIN, whom, it is stated, WICKHAM would have removed from office if he could have obtained the Governor's consent; of Mr. O'DONOHUE, another of WICKHAM'S appointees, whose fitness for public trust may be best ascertained from the perusal of a lately published report by Judge BOSWORTH as Referee; of Mr. WETMORE, a third Park appointee of Mr. WICKHAM, whose association with the Record Commission could hardly have escaped Mr. WICKHAM'S attention. The demoralization of the Park forces, as shown in the late trial of the Commissioners before WICKHAM himself, is the natural result of such appointments.

LIBRARIANS AND READERS.

It is not every one who can devote many hours of the day to looking up a favorite subject in a library. Especially in a city like New-York, where the laziest person is infected by the energy of the mass of individuals, and believes himself in a hurry, no matter whether he has cause or not—especially in New-York does a reader feel that some one ought to lend him a trained hand to find just the book he wants. The unfortunates, therefore, who have come in contact with the chilling indifference or the real ignorance of librarians and sub-librarians in some of our City libraries, will read with envy a little tract before us, which comes from the City of Worcester, in the model State of Massachusetts. The special report of the Free Public Library of that city presents a picture of the building itself. There is nothing in the appearance of the edifice to attract a student or reader, nor from a perusal of the report do we gather that the books are of an extraordinary nature as to number and quality—in fact, in any way better than those we might expect in a town of the model State containing 50,000 inhabitants. But it seems that this happy library has a librarian in the person of Mr. SAMUEL S. GREEN, whose mere presence transforms a plain edifice into a students' snug harbor, and an ordinary collection of books of reference into a readers' realm of delight.

In other words, when Mr. GREEN was appointed librarian "he was allowed to render such aid as was desired by the frequenters of the library." All persons who had questions to ask, to which they might hope to find answers in books, were invited to apply, and were assured of a courteous hearing. They were made to feel themselves part owners of the library, and even the youngest school-children were cordially received. The plan is said to have worked admirably, not only in saving time by guiding readers away from laborious search through worthless material, but in awakening enthusiasm among the questioners themselves. So well satisfied, indeed, were certain citizens of Worcester with the new departure, that the Directors of the library took the opportunity presented by a Librarians' Conference, to which Mr. GREEN contributed a paper, to ask that gentleman to print his remarks for general distribution. That document also is before us, and from that we learn the methods pursued in order to make of a librarian something better than an indifferent passenger between the shelves and the hand of the reader. The title of the paper tells the secret at once in these words: The Desirableness of Establishing Personal Intercourse and Relations between Librarian and Readers. We are given a number of instances where puzzling questions are brought to bear on the librarian, and hints are supplied for their probable solution. Incidentally it appears that Mr. GREEN has had six years' experience at his occupation. He, therefore, knows what he is about, and understands something more than the outside of books. This is, of course, the only basis on which such a plan could work; ignorant librarians, boys, and make-shifts, may be left entirely out of account. But in his librarian of brains and knowledge Mr. GREEN does demand certain mental qualities. "A courteous disposition, which will declare itself in agreeable manners. Sympathy, cheerfulness, and patience, are needful. Enthusiasm is as productive of good results here as elsewhere. Receive investigators with something of the cordiality displayed by an old-time inn-keeper. Hold on to them until they have obtained the information they are seeking, and show a persistency in supplying their wants similar to that manifested by a successful clerk in effecting a sale." These are some of the words of wisdom from a man who, to judge from the report, has put in practice what he expounds.

It is hardly worth while calling attention to the grievous discrepancy between this ideal and the state of affairs in our own libraries. We are wretchedly off for libraries, considering the size and importance of New-York, but those we have remain comparatively unused. Suppose every chair in the Astor, the Mercantile, the Cooper, and other libraries be filled, what is that to the mass of inhabitants capable of enjoying a library, and perhaps ready to use one, if greater facilities were afforded? Yet of those who use books, how many are received courteously and understandingly by experienced libarians, who take a pride in knowing something about books in every department of knowledge? It would be unjust to forget the differences between cities like New-York and Worcester. A great centre where all sorts of irresponsible, transient, and vicious people find themselves, is not in as favorable a position as a Massachusetts town for such experiments. Yet their introduction is far from impossible. A reading public is the easiest of all publics to manage, the most amenable to reason, and the readiest to respond gratefully to efforts put forth in its behalf. The Worcester librarian is a kind of intellectual apostle, bringing comfort to the heathen. His berth may not be an easy one in all cases, but he has the comfort of gaining the gratitude and respect of many readers, the applause of his townsmen, and the sweet approval of his own conscience. Mr. GREEN has introduced with great success the Sunday-opening system, and recommends an assistant to be appointed for a certain specified department. This is to supply a constantly increasing demand for information as to the best fiction. Special traits of character are requisite in such an assistant. Mr. GREEN recommends a woman of good but liberal taste. But who is to appoint? Clearly the board who appointed him and began in that way to put the library on a rational, working basis. It is, therefore, the individual members of the Boards of Directors on whom the onus must rest, if the public of New-York continues to be as miserably served in libraries as it has been hitherto.

MILITANT MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.

"The Red Book" of the State Department at Washington—entitled "Papers Relating to the Foreign Relations of the United States, transmitted to Congress Dec. 4, 1876,"—is one of the volumes which scarcely any person reads. This is unfortunate, for the book contains much information of an instructive, interesting, and often amusing character. Our Ministers and other representatives abroad are in the habit of keeping up a tolerably lively correspondence with Mr. FISH, and when they have nothing else to write about, they fill their dispatches with descriptions of and comments upon the social, political, and religious events which are transpiring around them. In some cases the judgments which they pronounce, with an ex cathedrâ air, seem to be somewhat crude, and in others they are couched in language which leaves much to be desired in the point of elegance; but all the same, their letters are generally well worth perusal.

One of the most interesting in the volume is a circular letter which our Minister to China, Mr. GEORGE F. SEWARD, addressed on the 3d of March last to the United States Consuls in China, relating wholly to missionaries. In sending a copy of this circular to Mr. FISH, Mr. SEWARD pays the missionaries the compliment of saying that he has found them to be "a sensible and practical body of men;" but for all that they give the Consuls more trouble than all the other Americans in China put together. "A majority of the grievances coming to me," he remarks in the circular letter, "are those of our citizens who are missionaries," and he adds that "a large part of the business of the legation, in the past, has been of this kind." This is partly due to the fact that the missionaries out-number all other citizens of the United States in China, and partly is, perhaps, a necessary consequence of their work. "Their business is to displace existing religious systems, and in doing so they must necessarily arouse antagonism." Still, in Mr. SEWARD'S opinion, the missionaries might get along a little better than they do if they would follow the advice which he instructs the Consuls to offer them. At present, they are continually getting into hot water. "They are assaulted, their converts maltreated, their mission-houses, dispensaries, and book-shops are pillaged and destroyed." Offenses like these must needs come, Mr. SEWARD confesses, but woe to the missionary by whom they come, if by neglecting to exercise the wisdom of the serpent he wantonly provokes the anything but celestial wrath of the Celestials. The missionaries, he lays it down, should in future "be forbearing and long-suffering," "deal respectfully with cherished beliefs, erroneous though they be," carry on their work "with such good management, good feeling, and tact as to arouse the least possible animosity," and "avoid places which are dangerous."

It is self-evident that if the latter injunction were strictly respected there would be no missionaries at all in China, or in any other pagan land; and, indeed, it may be questioned whether a missionary would be worth his salt if he should deal respectfully with the cherished belief for instance, that human sacrifices were acceptable to GOD, or that it was the sacred duty of a wife to be burned with the corpse of her husband. The founder of the Christian religion said that He came not to bring peace upon earth but a sword, and He warned His missionaries that they must expect to be persecuted and slain for His sake. No doubt, however, Mr. SEWARD was quite right in enjoining the missionaries in China to exercise an increased degree of discretion. "In many of our mission establishments," he remarks, "the central control is not strong, and each individual, be he discreet or not, is more or less free to work out the bent of his disposition." Too often, it seems, the bent of the disposition of the missionaries is to get into a difficulty and then run to the Consul for redress and revenge. Mr. SEWARD urges the Consuls to be very careful in accepting only the missionary side of the story, and forbids them to make any explicit demands for this or that mode of settlement. He instructs them to act as if they believed the Chinese authorities were well disposed, and to accept what redress is offered without much scrutiny of the terms. If the Consuls and the missionaries will all exercise the tact and discretion which Mr. SEWARD recommends, he has a faint hope that affairs will move more smoothly. He deeply regrets, he says, that the conduct of the missionaries in getting into trouble and appealing to the legation for aid and defense, has brought about a situation "which virtually establishes our political representation as the right arm of the propagandists of the Christian faith." This, in Mr. SEWARD'S opinion, is not the mission of the United States Government, and we suppose it must be confessed that he is correct.

RUSSIA'S MONEY TROUBLES.

Russia is in the toils of a financial trouble which can only be aggravated by the near approach of war. The bad harvests of the past three years, and the consequent excessive depression at Odessa and Riga, have, doubtless, had some share in augmenting the present pressure, which has been further intensified by the rapidly-increasing grain export from this country; a circumstance as to which the report of the Chamber of Commerce at Odessa gloomily observes, "The mind is positively lost in painful thought when considering the quantity of corn which America will soon be enabled to export. America will absolutely command the English market and reduce prices to a minimum with which it will be utterly impossible for us to compete." Odessa is already in a sad plight.

But the main source of the difficulty lies deeper. The present Emperor is experiencing the result of having had predecessors with ideas far too exalted to descend to the level of the commercial interests of the country. It may fairly be said that up to a comparatively recent date the Russian Government rarely took cognizance of the foreign trade of the country, except to restrict it. All sorts of disabilities and difficulties have lain in the path of a Russian who proposed to enter upon such business. He was required to pay a high price for a license; to satisfy the Government that he possessed considerable capital; and further to qualify in other "frivolous and vexatious" particulars. Nor were the railroads, made with borrowed money, designed with a view to commercial needs. The result of all this has been not merely to retard commercial progress, but to throw commercial trade into the hands of foreigners who enriched themselves in Russia only to carry their roubles to London or Paris.

During the last fifteen years the country has commercially and socially made, in many respects, great strides, but, on the other hand, it has, during that time, been very heavily weighted. Following the heavy drain occasioned by the Crimean war, came the emancipation of the serfs, a measure which, however noble and necessary, could not fail to be for many years prejudicial to the revenue. And although Russia, while engaged on this great work, has enjoyed peace, she has continued to expend enormous sums on naval and military equipment. How this was to be paid for became, so far back as 1873, a subject of curious conjecture. A correspondent writing in that year observed that a new forge at Alexandrovski, a few miles up the Neva, was all but ready, and was expected to turn out a great deal of ordnance, and that the iron works of the Ural were actively engaged in producing small-bore rifles. "But," he added, "all this must be paid for, and the financial embarrassments of the Government are now rising to a climax despite all efforts to conceal them. Many of the initiated in St. Petersburg must now be recalling the bitter jest of Prince MENSHIKOFF when the Emperor NICHOLAS proposed to make him Minister of Finance. 'Your Majesty has already made me Commander in Chief without an army, Minister of Marine without a navy, and now I am to be Minister of Finance without funds.'"

The result of all this has been loss upon loss. In December, 1874, the debt was estimated at three hundred and fifty millions of pounds sterling, and the interest amounted to £13,450,000 a year; but a financial authority estimates that the debt now reaches four hundred and seventy millions sterling. The population is large, but the proportion of it able to pay a heavy tax is small, so that the burden is very heavy, and might soon become intolerable, and relief by further borrowing outside is next to impossible. What has served still more to impoverish Russia is that her debt, like that of Austria and Turkey, is almost entirely held out of the country, so that a perpetual drain of gold for interest has been depleting her. If she fights, she will be compelled to repudiate, for a time at all events, and after his experience of Turks and Egyptians, the unfortunate British bondholder must be surveying the situation in no enviable frame of mind.

"THE ART-FIEND."

The newspaper-reading public has long been unhappily familiar with the fire-fiend. This peculiar variety of infernal being chiefly flourishes in the newspapers of the free and boundless West. When Smith's pig-stye is burned down in the dead waste and middle of the night, the event is noted as "the ravages of the fire-fiend," in very large capitals. The expression belongs to that school of fine writers in whose hands a fisticuff fight becomes a flagrant outrage, and a rich farmer is an opulent agriculturist. The fire-fiend, it ought to be said, runs riot in nearly all of our provincial exchanges. It regularly makes its appearance, in double-pica, from every part of the country, on every day of the year. There are other varieties of fiends, one of which was uniquely described as "a probable fiend," there being some doubt as to the guilt of the person accused of fiendish propensities. The rural mind, ever running to superlatives, exhausts the language in attempts to describe startling things and persons; there is nothing left for the characterization of the despoiler of hen-roosts and the bandit of the clothes-line, but "fiend." On the whole, "fiend" is a good word, but somewhat overworked.

To a Metropolitan journal, gifted with a largely European editorial staff, edited, we may say, on the European plan, we are indebted for a new variety of fiend—the art-fiend. This particular abnormal development of the fiendish purpose is supposed to be devoted to the destruction of works of art. Somewhere in that region vaguely described by topographers as "Out West," an art-fiend attempted to destroy by fire a picture of the battle of Lookout Mountain, a painting which, we may say, would have been an enormous work of art if its intrinsic merits had been equal to its superficial acreage. In the account of this incendiary proceeding, printed by our contemporary, the inflammatory critic was described as an art-fiend. Those familiar with the excellence of the painting in question will believe that the destroyer in this case was moved by a sort of sacred fury. The tableau represented Gen. HOOKER on a white horse, deliberately turning his back upon the battle which raged in his rear, and receiving the congratulations and dispatches of his staff. In the foreground were several nice-looking soldiers, standing at rest to have their portraits painted, while in the middle distance a battery of artillery was engaged in the pleasing performance of "scooting" through another battery, which received the onslaught with unruffled equanimity. Other features of this prodigious work claim alike the wonder and admiration of mankind. Upon this truly gifted picture the art-fiend descended, and burned a hole several inches in diameter.

It is clear that the art-fiend—so-called—was not in this instance moved by any such bad ambition as that of the youth who fired the Ephesian dome. To the discerning critic it must be evident that the fiend in question was actuated by a desire to purge the domain of art. He had no ulterior views regarding the insurance companies, as reported by later advices. He was operating in the interests of high art. The picture was too bad to live. This may be an extreme view to take of a painting which is something less than 160 acres in extent, and embraces in its ample grasp several counties in Tennessee, besides costing much money. But it is undeniable that the art-fiend considered it fit only for the flames.

There is much work in the world for the art-fiend. It might provoke hot discussion if we were to mention the canvases which invite the ravages of the destroying angel. But if the art-fiend—who is understood to be a fiend in the interest of art—is a real personage, as real as the personal devil of COTTON MATHER, we shall welcome him in New-York. If the fiend were to attend some of our picture auctions, usually advertised as "extraordinary art sales," there would be what the reporters call "a disastrous conflagration," if he were really bent on business. A visit of the art-fiend to some of the Spring exhibitions in the Venetian Palace, on the corner of Fourth avenue and Twenty-third street, would leave ashes only in some of the handsome gilt frames. And if this mythical personage should take a stroll through the private galleries of certain of the newly-rich people on Murray Hill, a glance of his fiery eye would scorch more than one bright canvas, of which the confiding owner remarks—"cost fifty thousand francs in Paris." We shudder to think of the devastation which the art-fiend would make if he were to drop into the Governor's Room, City Hall. There would be few pictures left for irate creditors to attach whenever the Controller refuses to pay their bills. The portrait of Gov. WASHINGTON HUNT, doing nothing in particular, with his hat in his hand and his summer overcoat on his arm, would no longer adorn the murky cavern of the Mercantile Library reading-room, if the art-fiend once got a look at it. And if the destructive imp should go to Boston, we shall specially recommend him to cast one shriveling glance at ALLSTON'S "Belshazzar's Feast" which horrifies—or did horrify—the gallery of the Athenæum in Beacon street.

We have said enough to indicate the scope of the mission and work of the art-fiend. And we diffidently submit that, though he comes in questionable shape, his errand is not altogether diabolic. The "fiend" who begins by firing "The Battle of Lookout Mountain" must have beneficent intentions. There is method in his seeming madness, and if it shall turn out that all works of so-called art which are truly bad are his lawful prey, (as appearances seem to indicate,) we can promise him steady and congenial employment for some time to come.

RAILROAD MEETINGS.

CONVENTION OF STOCKHOLDERS OF THE OHIO AND MISSISSIPPI ROAD—THE PRESENT RECEIVERS OBJECTED TO—RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 13.—A meeting was held here to-day of the stockholders of the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad who are dissatisfied with the recent action which placed that road in the hands of Receivers. The meeting adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the collapse of the company causes just apprehension that, without our prompt attention, the result and end of the pending proceedings of insolvency against the company in the United States courts will be to wipe out and extinguish the whole stockholding and creditor interest; that all the published reports of the President and Directors of the company and their verbal assurance of prosperity were untrue, and that either they were utterly ignorant of the condition of the company, or else were using their places to propagate delusions for stock-gambling profits; that said proceedings are the result of a corrupt and collusive scheme to absorb the property and to perpetuate a possession and control over the same by the sacrifice of every personal and public interest; that this railway has heretofore, under an honest administration, fully demonstrated its ability to pay regularly the interest on all its bonded debt and preferred stock and maintain its property in good serviceable condition; that five years ago this road was a splendid property, with its common stock quoted at nearly 50, with a flattering prospect for dividends thereon in the near future; now its track is in an unsafe condition and its machinery dilapidated; and the stockholders anxiously ask of each other, "Is there not a premeditated design in all this?" that still we believe that, in the hands of capable and honest management, this property has capacity to recuperate itself, and save and protect its whole mortgage debt and in time render its stock valuable; that the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad ought to be maintained as a free and independent line, and not be made the appendage of the Baltimore and Ohio or any other railroad; that its Cincinnati terminus should be open to the benefit and business of other roads; that, while we recognize the officers of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company as capable railroad men, we do not think that they are the proper Receivers for this road, as their larger and possibly conflicting interests would necessarily prevent an unbiased management of this important trust; that while we respect the power of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and commend it to the confidence of travelers and freighters, we do not favor its effort to absorb this railway, in which our interests rest—we would aid its prosperity and cherish its friendship, but decline its protectorate; that we protest against the existing Receivership, as having been procured with undue haste and in the night-time, with the consent and connivance of the company, and, so far as Daniel Terrance is concerned, against the wishes of all the Directors then present; and that it is the sense of this meeting that William D. Griswold, former President of said company, having heretofore demonstrated his financial and administrative ability in the management of said railroad, and under his auspices the affairs of the company were prosperous and improving, therefore we earnestly request the courts to appoint him sole Receiver in place of the present incumbents.

THE CONNECTICUT WESTERN RAILROAD—A SCHEME TO CREATE PREFERRED STOCK.

HARTFORD, Jan. 13.—At a special meeting of the stockholders of the Connecticut Western Railroad to-day, it was voted to accept the proposition of the Committee of Bondholders for the creation of preferred stock, or to accept another plan agreed upon by that committee and the Board of Directors. The scheme creates preferred stock, to be given to bondholders, amounting to $3,000,000, they to hold their bonds meanwhile as collateral. This stock elects officers and is entitled to 7 per cent. before common stock gets any income. Common stock, till the year 1900, has the right to redeem preferred stock and retire bonds. Preferred stock holders, on taking possession, must pay off the floating debt when they take the road. The bondholders have not yet decided whether they will accept the scheme.

OBLIGATIONS OF SURETIES ON BONDS

CLEVELAND, Jan. 13.—An important case was decided in the United States Court in this city yesterday. An action was brought against the bondsmen of a savings bank for alleged breaches of their bond, in that the regular work of a savings bank had not been performed, but that the business of an ordinary bank had been engaged in. The verdict was for the defense, and decides the extent of the obligations of sureties on the bonds of Treasurers of societies for savings. The court held, in its charge, that the sureties are not responsible for any money going into the hands of the society in the way of ordinary banking business.

THE SAFETY OF MAIL MATTER.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Will you please inform the public how the Postmaster General's order to Assistant Postmaster Pierson will prevent the driver of the mail wagon throwing off one or more bags to a confederate on the street. I think a better plan would be to have a clerk from the department ride on the wagon, his face turned to the tail end of it; let him sign a receipt for so many bags received at the Post Office, and require a like receipt from the party to whom he delivers them, and the same in returning from the depot to the office. In this way the loss of a bag would be immediately discovered. There are a number of old clerks in the Post Office who might thus be profitably employed, and wholesale losses of mail matter thus prevented. A CITIZEN.

ACCEPTING THE SITUATION IN TEXAS

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

It seems to be given up by well-posted Democrats in Texas that Hayes will be our next President. The idea of a war resulting is hooted at. The best informed Democrats think Hayes' success will bring us more capital from the North. Democratic success would cause the exodus of many of the best citizens from Texas. Republicans here believe that Hayes has been fairly elected, and will sustain the United States Government in any proper measures for his installation.

I will write you again soon on matters of general interest in Texas. A TEXAS REPUBLICAN.

AFFAIRS IT FRANCE.

THE STRUGGLE BETWEEN THE DEPUTIES AND SENATORS.

THE QUESTION OF SUPPLYING THE NATIONAL REVENUES—AN ALLEGED AMERICAN'S LETTER—A PARLIAMENTARY BATTLE BETWEEN GAMBETTA AND JULES SIMON—THE FORMER DEFEATED—A DISASTROUS YEAR.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Monday, Jan. 1, 1877.

It was not without reason that the discussion of the budget was put off until late in the year just closed, for a great political battle had to be fought out upon the question of supplying the national revenues. Upon this question hangs the important one of the powers and rights of the two branches of the Legislature. The Republicans deny the right of the Senate to interfere in any way in matters concerning the finances of the nation. The Chamber of Deputies refused to vote certain credits demanded by the Ministers of Justice, Interior, Marine, and Public Worship. The Senate revised the bill as passed by the House, and re-established the items which had been erased from the different budgets. For example, the lower house refused the credit asked for the payment of certain country curés, and the Senate, after an eloquent appeal from Monseigneur Dupanloup, accorded the items. This shows very clearly the casus belli, for the dominant party in the Chamber denies the right of the Senate to revise the budgetary measures adopted by the so-called popular branch of the Government. Last Thursday night there was a second sitting of the Chamber, lasting until midnight, during which speeches were made by MM. Jules Simon and Gambetta, and on Friday the Senate was called together by special letters sent to each member, the Government considering the situation one of extreme gravity. I cannot do better than translate a letter from the Journal des Débats which sums the matter up in a very clear way. The writer assumes to be an American, but I do not think that I am wrong in attributing it to M. Edouard Laboulaye:

To the Editor Débats:

SIR: As an American, a friend of France and of liberty, I follow with interest the efforts made by a noble country to establish a republican Constitution. I notice with pleasure that French institutions are gradually becoming more and more like those which have given the United States a century of prosperity. But I am astonished at the emotion now caused by the question—a very simple one in my opinion—of the rights of the two Chambers in financial matters. Washington and his friends solved this problem long ago, and it is difficult for me to understand why Republicans go to monarchical England for their lessons, when it suffices for them to open the Constitution of the United States in order to find a solution consecrated by 80 years of success. In England, it is true, the House of Commons has alone claimed the right of voting the expenses and the revenue. Why? Because it alone represents the nation. Can the Lords, peers by right of birth or by royal nomination, have the right of voting the imposts? No, because, according to the feudal idea, lying at the bottom of the English Constitution, no one can tax a freeman but himself. The villain, the serf can be so treated, but the freeman pays nothing; the annual tax that he pays is a free gift accorded to the sovereign, and the Commons alone has received from the people the right of bestowing it. The souvenir of this feudal origin is clearly preserved in the formula used by the Queen, each year, when solemnly sanctioning the financial measures of Parliament: "The Queen, thanking her good subjects, accepts their benevolence, and thus wills it." When our fathers drew up the Constitution of the United States, they did not preserve a distinction between the two chambers which has no sense except in a country where privilege is opposed to privilege for the purpose of obtaining liberty. The seventh section of the first article of our Constitution declares that the financial laws shall be first discussed and voted by the House of Representatives, but that the Senate will have the right of amendment as with other laws. ("All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills.") As will be observed this is the same idea found in your Constitution, but expressed more clearly and concisely.

What is the spirit and meaning of that measure? Story, our constitutional oracle, explains it in paragraphs 874–878 of his learned Commentaries. In deciding that financial measures shall be first discussed in the House of Representatives, he says, it was considered that the Representatives, being in more direct relations with the people, and more dependent upon the people than the Senators, would better understand popular opinions and sentiments, and would know better how to use the revenues, that is, the money of their constituents. But it was considered at the same time that the Senators were also representatives of the nation, although elected by restricted suffrage; and that it was not only wrong to exclude the Senate from the control of financial measures, but a positive disadvantage. Otherwise, says Story, the Senate would have to reject the whole law when the amendment of a single line might make it acceptable to both Houses. Such a practical inconvenience is more important than the pretended advantages of giving the control to "one house." The remark is true that in our 38 States, all of which have taken the Federal as a model for their local Constitutions, the Senate has the same rights as the lower house. In a few States, even, in order to avoid the shadow of a difficulty, the budget is indifferently presented to either house, importance being attached to one thing only, the right to discuss the budget.

Indeed, the principle of our political laws, the basis of American liberty, is that there shall be no power without limit and without control. If the House of Representatives alone had control of the budget nothing could prohibit it from annulling the President and the Senate, or from abrogating the laws displeasing to its majority. It would suffice simply to suppress the credits. For us Americans, who know no sovereignty but that of the nation, and who, without the omnipotence of legislative assemblies, we wish a Senate controlled by a House and a House controlled by a Senate. There are certain disadvantages attached to this division of powers, as well as things human, but we find in it the required guarantee for our republican institutions, and that is enough for us. As you will perceive, Mr. Editor, the inequality of the two houses is a monarchical institution which has no raison de être except in countries where the upper chamber has no popular basis; but the equality of the two is a Republican principle. What would be the use of two chambers in one Republic if they did not have mutual control of each other? And what would become of the President if he did not have one chamber ready to resist the aggressions of the other? You will excuse me for any freedom of language. As a foreigner I may not be able to judge French ideas and institutions; but you will permit me to say that in the United States no man would be regarded as a republican who demanded a special privilege for one of the two chambers. AN AMERICAN.

This letter created a decided sensation, and in the evening the Temps came out with a reply signed "Un Anglais," which was probably written by M. Scherer. Meanwhile M. Jules Simon and M. Gambetta were discussing the question at Versailles, and both made powerful speeches. Above all things, French statesmen lack consistency and moderation. If the Senate had a Republican majority at this moment, every Republican in the Chamber would demand equality for the two branches of the Legislature. But the Senate is conservative, and it has the power of revising the laws passed by the Republican majority in the lower house. Hence, the question of principle is thrown aside, and the Republicans are striving for nothing less than the overthrow of the Senate, and the recognition of "the glorious principles of the First Revolution." At last, however, the long-dreaded conflict is over, and the Senate has conquered its right to revise the revenue bills and all the financial laws passed by the Chamber. M. Gambetta fought hard against the idea, claiming that the lower house alone was competent to deal with fiscal matters, but in the end the ideas put forward by the "American" of the Débats—an American from the Department of the Seine, as Gambetta remarked—were adopted by the majority of both houses. This solution is an excellent one for the Ministry, and, from present appearances, the Jules Simon Cabinet is destined to hold its ground until late in the present year.

The old year did not treat us kindly, taking it as a whole, and it is difficult to repress a feeling of joy that it has gone forever, even though it has added its quota to the burden of years that we carry upon our heads. It is hard to think that we must rejoice at the rapid flight of time, yet thousands here have been long wishing to see 1876 at its close. Altogether it has been one of the worst years in our modern annals. The floods, the phyloxera which has almost destroyed the richest vineyards of France, the stagnation in commercial affairs, the taxes that crush the people, the dearness of the necessaries of life, and the sufferings of the working classes and people of moderate means, have all been laid to the account of the year. The present year may be no better, but at least it brings us hope. Yesterday, I could not help remarking a general look of despondency among the people that thronged the boulevards in great numbers. Since 1870, when Paris, besieged by German armies and cut off from communication with the rest of the world, suffered from cold and hunger, there has been no Christmas Day so sad as the last. In doubt about her future destinies, uncertain about the things that to-morrow may bring, France is evidently suffering, and the misfortune is that the heavier burdens fall upon the poor. In Paris, particularly, where two-thirds of the population has been accustomed to live upon the luxurious habits of the rich, great suffering must be caused when the nobles quit the city for their country châteaux, and when the rich find the times too uncertain to warrant the expenditure of money in costly fêtes. Yet it is those fêtes which make Paris happy, even the three or four balls given by the Marshal President each year, bringing comparative ease and comfort to many a humble home. During the season just over we have had few balls, no great fêtes, but few receptions, and tunc lacrymæ rerum, as the poet says, or these tears of things. Christmas Day was dull enough here, and yet this is one of the greatest fêtes in the Christian calendar. Catholics and Protestants keep it alike, and in every country of Christendom the day is welcomed and observed. Formerly Easter was the great spiritual fête in France; but of later years it has been the habit to keep Christmas Day in English fashion, receiving friends and exchanging presents, while giving one's self up to friendship, home affections, good will to men, and good cheer. Last Christmas Day was far from gay, and New Year's Day is little better. The French continue their habit of sending cards and of giving presents, while the Americans domiciled here keep the day in the way it is kept at home. Consul General Torbert and wife keep open house to-day, and Dr. Ed. Warren also had a reception at which his wife and daughter entertained their friends in true American style. There were other receptions in various parts of the city, the custom of receiving New Year's calls having been acclimated here to a certain extent.

Very few of the journals make their appearance on New Year's Day, a fête day among the French. The year opens with prospects of peace, and French politics wear a calmer aspect than they have for many a day. The Comte de Chambrun has been condemned to imprisonment for two months for his scandalous affair, and is now a disgraced man forever. The worst of the affair is that the dishonor falls heavily also upon his young wife. Next week probably we shall see the beginning of the trial of Billoir, the man accused of having killed his mistress, cut her in pieces, and thrown them into the Seine. The presumptive evidence against Billoir is very strong, yet there are some things which seem incompatible with guilt. On the evening of the crime Billoir met a friend, and said, "At last I am free from my mistress. She left me yesterday, and good riddance." A man who had just made minee-meat of a woman would not be apt to talk in this fashion, and one cannot understand how a body could have been cut up in his small chamber without leaving some visible traces. The Police examined every nook and corner, and even took up the floors. There, between the cracks, they found a quantity of dried blood, and when the fact was made known the public felt convinced that Billoir was the real assassin. But this evidence against him is materially diminished by the fact that a man, occupying the chamber before Billoir, blew his brains out there, and the concierge says that this very floor was an inch deep in blood. The traces found were all old, and the probability is that blood could not possibly dry in this manner in the course of two or three weeks. The case is still a singular mystery, but it will certainly be unraveled in the end.

THE WEATHER.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14—1 A. M.—In the Middle and Eastern States, falling followed by rising barometer, south to west winds, increasing to brisk or light, veering to north-westerly, rising temperature, increasing cloudiness, probably snow, partly turning into rain in the latter and the northern portion of the former.

THE ICE-GORGE AT CINCINNATI.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 13.—The weather is cold and cloudy this morning, and there are no further indications of the breaking of the ice-gorge here. It is thought that the steamer Andes, which was sunk last night, can be raised, if there is no further movement in the ice. She had only about a quarter of a cargo aboard, which can be saved in a damaged condition. The stern-wheel steamer Mary Miller has been forced aground, but the position of the Andes protects her from the ice. The Golden City had a narrow escape from meeting the fate of the Calumet. A huge field of ice struck her aft of amidships, forcing her hard against the steamer Telegraph, crushing the fantail of the Golden City, and pushing her hard aground. The Ludlow (ferry-boat) was carried away from her moorings and swept down to the bend south of the city by the moving ice at midnight. It is estimated that the damage to shipping will be over $100,000. Many of the heaviest coal-dealers lost barges by the ice movement, but nearly all the boats were empty. It is estimated that the damage to barges so far will reach from $10,000 to $15,000. Reports from up-river points are that the weather is turning cold and the river is freezing.

1 o'clock A. M.—What appears to be a general movement of ice, commenced about midnight, and, at 1 A. M., still continues. The ice is running rapidly out in great quantities, but no damage has yet been reported.

WAR STEAMER BURNED BY CUBAN PIRATES.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—A telegram from Havana, dated yesterday, received in this city, says that the former Spanish merchant steamer Moctezuma, captured by Cuban insurgents and converted into a pirate vessel called the "Cespedes," has been burned by the Cuban pirates, at the near approach of the Spanish war steamer Jorje Juan, which was giving her chase. Before the Jorje Juan reached the burning vessel the pirates had fled in boats to the nearest coast, which is believed to be that of Venezuela. The Jorje Juan picked up and took on board 24 of the former crew of the Moctezuma, captured and kept as prisoners by the Cubans.

The Spanish war steamer Jorje Juan was cruising along the Coast of Mosquitos, Nicaragua, when she espied and chased the Moctezuma. The latter sought refuge in Bragman Bay. When the Jorje Juan entered the bay, the Moctezuma was in flames. The Cuban pirates, numbering nine, fled in boats. The former crew of the Moctezuma were also in boats, but awaiting the arrival of the Jorje Juan, which picked them up, brought the news to Havana and sailed again to-day for Cienfuegos.

QUICK OCEAN PASSAGE BY THE MONTANA.

The Williams & Guion Line steam-ship Montana, Capt. Beddoe, carrying the royal mails from Liverpool via Queenstown, Jan. 4, arrived here at 7 o'clock this morning. This is the first steamer arriving under the new arrangement made by the British postal authorities. The passage was made in eight days and 18 hours.

THE NEWARK PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The annual report of School City Superintendent Sears, of Newark, N. J., made to the Newark Board of Education Friday night, shows that the total cost of maintaining the schools last year was $208,032 85, leaving an unexpended balance of $9,004 94. The total number of children in the city within the school age is 37,206. The number of pupils in the day schools is 17,356; in the night-schools, 973, and in the Normal School, 135. The total number of teachers 221, besides 15 principals, and one German and three music teachers. The total value of school property, including grounds, buildings, and furniture, is $1,015,000.

THE DUNCAN-SHERMAN BANKRUPTCY.

The examination of Mr. William Butler Duncan was resumed yesterday before Register Ketchum. Mr. Duncan said that in his testimony at the last sitting he had been somewhat in error with regard to the firms of Watts & Co. and Winman & Co. These firms had no deposit accounts with the firm of which Mr. Duncan was a member, but they merely acted as brokers. A similar explanation should be made with regard to Mr. Hillaire, who was paid a check of $2,250 on July 26, to close up an account of the same nature. The rest of the testimony was of an unimportant character.

ARRIVALS AT CASTLE GARDEN.

There were arrivals of immigrants at Castle Garden yesterday by four European steam-ships. The Britannic, of the White Star Line, brough 62 steerage passengers; the Italy, of the National Line, 36 steerage passengers, and the Neckar brought 43. The Montana arrived too late to come over the bar by the early tide, and a tug was sent out to bring up the passengers and mails.

THE TREASURY ROBBERY.

HOW THE MISSING PACKAGE WAS RETURNED.

THE MONEY LEFT IN A NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENT'S DESK—PRELIMINARIES OF THE AFFAIR.

Correspondence of the Chicago Inter-Ocean.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Evidence was given before the Grand Jury to-day in the Winslow case, which removes the seal from the lips of your correspondent. He has been intimately acquainted with Winslow for some years and always believed him to be a man of strict integrity and high honor. About two weeks ago, from my known friendship with Winslow, I was taken into the confidence of detectives, who stated their belief in his guilt, and desired me, being familiar with his penmanship, to examine the package which was substituted for the stolen one, and give my opinion as to whether or not the address was Winslow's writing. I examined it carefully, and pronounced it to be his writing. The evidence against him was shown to me, but it could not convince me, against the strong faith I had in him, that he was guilty, although I admitted it was a case of strong circumstantial evidence.

Mr. Brooks, Chief, and Mr. Benson, Assistant Chief of the Secret Service, with Mr. Wyman, Treasurer, then made a very strong appeal to assist them in recovering the money. I declined at first to do so. Further evidence against him was procured and shown me, which made the case very much stronger. Their appeals for my assistance were repeated, but I declined until Saturday last, when Mr. Brooks called at the Inter-Ocean office, No. 1,314 F street, and said that Winslow would certainly be arrested, and they feared he would destroy the money in order to remove evidence against him. I then consented to undertake the recovery of the money for the sake of Wyman, who was personally responsible for its loss. Mr. Brooks laid down to me the chain of evidence which he desired I should repeat to Winslow in order that he might see he had no chance of escaping conviction, and then authorized me to make an appeal to him to return this money in any way he and myself might arrange. I wrote a note to Winslow, which Mr. Brooks carried, asking him to meet me at the Inter-Ocean office at 7 o'clock that evening, which was Saturday. Winslow came.

The interview was a very painful one. I presented to him the evidence in the possession of the detectives in the strongest light. I appealed to him, in behalf of Treasurer Wyman, who has befriended him in many ways, and whom he ought not to let suffer. Finally, as shown in my report below, I made a proposition to him. I did not want to become privy to his guilt any further than was absolutely necessary; so I arranged that the money should be placed where I could find it, but in such a way that I should not see it placed there. After my interview I was satisfied that I should receive the money, and reported to Mr. Brooks. I arranged with him that I should never be questioned in regard to the recovery, and should place the money, in case I recovered it, in Mr. Wyman's hands in such a manner that he could not be able to testify in court that I gave it to him. Mr. Brooks, with the consent of Secretary Morrill, who was acquainted with the circumstances all along, agreed to my proposition.

Not wishing to have the money in my possession longer than absolutely necessary, I arranged to see Mr. Wyman at once. After 3 o'clock I found the package in the place had indicated, and met Mr. Wyman at the door of the Inter-Ocean office. Two minutes afterward I followed him to Mr. Brooks' room, where it was arranged that I should follow. Mr. Wyman went into his house. He had scarcely closed the door when I rang his bell and placed the package on his door-step. I walked away, but returned in a once, and saw Mr. Wyman count the money. Mr. Brooks then came in, and I made to them as strong an appeal as I could in behalf of Winslow. They said they had no authority in the matter, but would stop the pursuit if Secretary Morrill would consent. Mr. Wyman then arranged an interview with Secretary Morrill, which it was agreed should take place on Monday morning.

In the meantime the detective shadowing Winslow had observed him buy a railroad ticket, and feared he would attempt to leave the city. Mr. Benson, the Assistant Chief, called on me and informed me of the fact. He feared he had already gone to the depot. I went to the depot in a train leaving Washington for the West in about an hour, and agreed to go to Winslow's house, and if he was gone to the depot I would consent to his arrest. In case he was not it must be postponed till I had an opportunity to see Secretary Morrill and urge him to stop all proceedings. Winslow was not there, but the detectives were not satisfied, and it was agreed to leave the decision to Secretary Morrill whether they should arrest him or not. Secretary Morrill said he must not be arrested until I had an opportunity to present the case to him in the morning. Winslow's house was guarded all night. In the morning, in company with Treasurer Wyman and ex-State's Attorney Reed, of Chicago, who happened to be in Washington at the time, and from whom I had asked advice in regard to my action in the matter, I went to Secretary Morrill, and with Mr. Reed urged that Mr. Winslow should be given, on account of his family, as much leniency as possible. After a long talk the Secretary agreed that he would not arrest Winslow unless the department was in possession of evidence sufficient to convict him without anything that I could give, for I had already obtained a pledge that the Government would use me as a witness against him. The Secretary would not consent to any compromise with a criminal, but said he would not allow Winslow to be arrested and his family disgraced without the most positive proof of his guilt.

After we left him the Secretary sent for Brooks, Benson, Treasurer Wyman, and Solicitor Talbot, and the evidence against Winslow discussed. Solicitor Talbot pronounced it, in his judgment as a lawyer, sufficient for conviction, being at the time ignorant that the money was recovered, and of my connection with the case. Then Winslow's arrest was ordered. He virtually confessed his guilt to the officers who attempted to search him, saying: "You need not search me, for the money has all been sent back except what has been spent." Nevertheless, upon searching, there was found in one of his pockets an envelope such as is given with railroad tickets, and in it a ticket to New-York and two $100 bills, which were identified by their numbers to have been in the stolen package.

That he should have taken the package before returning it to me was a breach of faith on Winslow's part, for in our interview one of the conditions I made was that he should not hold back a dollar of it more than he had already spent, which, of course, he was not in condition to replace. It was evidently his intention to make his escape after placing the money in the hands of the bondsman his ticket and taken out this money to pay his expenses. Your correspondent, therefore, believing him guilty not only of the theft, but of a breach of faith, made a report of the whole circumstances in writing to Mr. Brooks, as follows:

WASHINGTON OFFICE OF THE INTER-OCEAN, }
WASHINGTON, Jan. 9, 1877. }

Mr. James J. Brooks, Chief Secret Service Division, United States Treasury Department:

SIR: I have the honor to report that, acting under your verbal instructions of Jan. 6, 1877, I addressed a note to F. S. Winslow, in the cash-room of the Treasury Department, requesting an interview with him at my office on the evening of that day, to which note I gave to you enclosed, with the understanding that you should personally deliver it to him, which, I am informed by yourself, was done according to agreement. At the hour appointed Mr. Winslow came to my office, where I had a conversation with him in private, lasting an hour or more. I stated to him that he was strongly suspected by yourself and others of having abstracted the package of money from the cash-room on or about the 5th of December, and that such evidence had been submitted to me as to convince my reason against my will that he was guilty. I told him I did not desire him to make any reply to what I should say, for I did not want to know whether or not he was guilty. My only object in speaking to him, I said, was to urge him, if he was guilty and had the money in his possession, to return it to Mr. Wyman or to Mr. Crounse. The notes were so marked that he could not use them without detection, and that retaining the money in his possession would not only endanger him by keeping up the pursuit of the detectives, but be a gross injustice to Mr. Wymas, who was his friend. I promised that if the money was returned to Mr. Wyman, I would entreat that gentleman, the Secretary of the Treasury, and yourself, and the President, if necessary, to suspend proceedings, and make no effort to detect the thief. After a long-continued conversation to the same effect I told him I would leave unlocked the door of my office until 3 P. M., on Sunday at which time I should go there, and hoped to find in a certain drawer of my table, which I pointed out, the package of money. After my talk with Winslow I had an interview with — at his residence, and made a verbal report. At 3 P. M. on Sunday I went to the office as agreed, and in the drawer indicated I found a linen envelope sealed and marked "$11,200." I inclosed it in another envelope, wrapped it in a newspaper, and left my office. Just as I went out of the door I met Treasurer Wyman on the street. He said: "I will be at my house at once, if you have anything for me."

I replied, "All right," and followed him to your room at the Massie House, where I requested him to return immediately to your house, asking you to go there also. After an interval of half an hour I followed Mr. Wyman to his house. After he entered I rang his door-bell, and laid upon the side of his door the package I found in the drawer of my desk, wrapped as I have described. I left the door and went to the corner of Eleventh and F streets, then, returning, rang at Mr. Wyman's door again, and was immediately admitted by that gentleman himself. After a little general conversation, I asked him if he had recovered the money stolen from the cash-room. He replied that he had just picked up a package from his doorstep, but had not yet examined it. He then proceeded to open the package which contained the money, which he counted in my presence, and stated to me that there were $11,200. I afterward had an interview with Secretary Morrill, Treasurer Wyman, and yourself, and urged in behalf of Winslow and his family that all proceedings against him be suspended. I have the honor to be your obedient servant, JOHN E. CURTIS, Jr.,

Correspondent of the Inter-Ocean.

Thinking that I knew Winslow so well, I could not believe him guilty until I had the package of money in hand. My only object then was to save his family from disgrace, but the cords of evidence were wrapped so strongly around him that all efforts were useless. His wife, with sublime faith, believes him innocent still. Since his arrest evidence has been pouring into the department, which although yet uncorroborated, gives an exceedingly bad color to his past life, especially before he came to this country. It is said his real name is Golden, and he has before been accused of criminal acts.

AMUSEMENTS.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

LOCAL MENTION.

"Our Boarding-house" is not to be brought out until Feb. 19.

"Dan'l Druce" is still announced for nightly repetition at Booth's Theatre.

Mr. Heller carries on his enjoyable entertainments at the Wonder Theatre with the co-operation of Miss Heller and that of Mr. Punch.

Rumors are current in relation to a change in the management of Booth's Theatre. The possible retirement of one of the two managers of the house is referred to.

At the Eagle Theatre, the Christmas pantomime called "Santa Claus" continues to attract large audiences, and its maintenance upon the boards is announced until further notice.

"The Happy Moke" continues to be the pièce de résistance at the San Francisco Minstrels' Opera-house. Its performance rounds off the usual miscellaneous programme of songs, dances, and minstrel "acts."

A matinée performance of a miscellaneous character will be given, under the direction of Mr. John Brougham, for the benefit of the poor of St. Stephen's Parish, at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, on Wednesday afternoon next.

The New-York Aquarium can still be recommended as an instructive and agreeable place of resort, and new additions to its finny residents make weekly visits profitable to all who would keep au courant of the latest arrivals from the briny deep.

The Philharmonic Society of New-York gave its third concert this season, at the Academy of Music, yesterday evening. The performance was one of considerable variety and interest; a detailed reference to its traits must be deferred until to-morrow.

Mr. Booth will remain at the Lyceum Theatre but two weeks longer. The fortnight commencing to-morrow will be occupied, we believe, with performances representative of the artist's whole répertoire. To-morrow and Tuesday evening, "Hamlet" will be the play.

Many desirable modifications have been introduced into the spectacle of "Azurine" at Niblo's Theatre, and the admirer of composite performances will now find abundant material for enjoyment in its varied and glittering elements. It is announced for nightly repetition throughout this week.

Several concerts are to be given at Steinway Hall during this and next month, for the benefit of the "Association for Improving the Conditios of the Poor." The first will take place on Friday next, when Miss Arabella Root, Mr. George Werenrath, Mrs. Rolph, and Mr. F. F. Mueller are to be the artists.

"Les Danicheff" was to have been acted at the Germania Theatre last evening, but an injunction against the performance having been served upon Mr. Neuendorff five minutes before the curtain was raised, an apology was addressed to the audience, and "Centennial Schnurren," a local play, was represented in its stead.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" will be acted on and after to-morrow evening, at the New Broadway Theatre. Mrs. G. C. Howard and a strong force of "Jubilee Singers" are to take part in the performances of this perennial and highly moral drama, the attractiveness of which, as has been proved of late, appears to increase with age.

Mr. Reinhard Schmelz's third and last symphony concert takes place at Steinway Hall on Tuesday evening week. A new overture by Gernsheim, called "Waldmeister's Brautfahrt:" a new serenade by Jadassohn, in three movements, and Rubinstein's "Ocean" symphony are to be the principal numbers of the programme, and Mme. Pappenheim will be the soloist.

The admirers of out-door sports will be glad to learn that races, polo matches, and the other attractive elements of the past fortnight's entertainments at Gilmore's Garden will be offered there until further notice. The pleasure of witnessing performances which could not be enjoyed elsewhere save at great discomfort and possible risk to health, appears to be widely appreciated.

The present week will be the second and last of the new run of "Forbidden Fruit" at Wallack's Theatre. "Forbidden Fruit" is certainly not possessed of those excellences which entitle a piece to a place in the standard literature of the age, but its brisk and bustling action, its droll characters, and the admirable interpretation it receives demand that it should be referred to as well worth witnessing by playgoers in quest of a lively entertainment.

Miss Lotta's engagement at the Park Theatre terminated last evening, "Zip" having been played during the week just ended. This piece, which may fairly be considered as the worst of Mr. Marsden's numerous bad dramas, received a much better exposition than it really merited and one personation—that of the Italian Galetti, by Mr. P. A. Anderson—calls for special commendation. Mr. J. W. Carroll's Grandfather Trent, in "Little Nell and the Marchioness," is to be spoken of as one of the few artistic efforts of the season, and Mr. Crane's Dick Swiveller, in the same work, should also be praised. Miss Lotta's sojourn at the Park, however, will scarcely be remembered as having done much toward bettering the fortunes of that rather unsettled house. To-morrow melodrama will take the place of the hybrid plays lately represented there, and "The Marble Heart," with Mr. C. R. Thorne, Jr., Miss Catherine Rogers, and Mr. W. H. Sheridan in the principal rôles, will be brought out.

A new adaptation from the industrious and facile pen of Mr. Augustin Daly is to be made known at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, to-morrow evening. It is entitled "Lemona," and is divided into three acts; its action is bustling and its personages are clearly defined and amusing. In these sombre days, works of this order are welcome and ought to succeed. "Lemona" is to enlist in its interpretation the services of Messrs. Coghlan and Brongham, and those of Misses Davenport and Rigl, and of Mrs. Gilbert; no apprehension need therefore be had as to the brisk and impressive rendering of the comédie vaudeville—for such it is. There is no occasion to dilate upon yesterday's representations of "The Lady of Lyons." Miss Davenport, who does nothing ill, was indeed a very sympathetic Pauline, but Mr. Coghlan's Claude was so utterly unlike any possible conception of that personage that an instant's consideration of the whole performance was out of the question. It is surprising that the authors of the pleasantry, the fruits of which are Mr. Coghlan's occasional assumption of a rôle of this sort, should not think of reducing the hero's attire as well as his delivery and manner to the practical plane to which the actor brings the personage. Mr. Coghlan's Claude Melnotte, in an English walking-suit, with a slender umbrella under his arm, would at least have the merit of consistency.

THE RIGHT TO PLAY "DIE DANISCHEFFS."

On the application of Messrs. Shook & Palmer, Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court Chambers, yesterday, granted an injunction restraining Adolph Neuendorf, the proprietor of the Germania Theatre, from giving representations of the play "Die Danischeffs," which was announced for last evening. The plaintiffs claim the exclusive rights to give representations of the play, on the ground that they purchased the right of the authors through an agent in Paris. The injunction order was served on Mr. Neuendorf at 7:55 o'clock last evening. Mr. Neuendorf, not desiring to be guilty of contempt of court, promptly changed the programme for the evening. "Die Danischeffs" was not performed, but the audience was not disappointed, for Bard Lindean's German version of the play of "Married in Haste" was given in its stead. The play of "Die Danischeffs" is the German title of a French drama. It was translated into German in Europe, and representations of it were given in Berlin, Vienna, and Konigsburg, and printed copies of the play have been exposed for sale in Europe. Mr. Neuendorf obtained one of the printed copies of each of the two German versions extant. Mr. Neuendorf claims that the play has been presented in its German dress at Milwaukee, Wis. Several of the company at the Germania Theatre have acted in the play abroad. The injunction granted is made returnable on Wednesday. Mr. Neuendorf expects to be able to dissolve the injunction, and will then sue for damage.

I can say with the utmost confidence that I think DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY the best cough remedy I have ever known, and believe I owe my present existence to its wonderful curative powers, having at one time been brought very low by a distressing cough, accompanied with spitting of blood and other symptoms of that dread destroyer, consumption. I tried many remedies without effect, until a report to the Balsam was had, which, by the blessing of Divine Providence, soon restored me to health.

The Balsam is now our report whenever any of our family is attacked with a cough or colds, and it has never failed to give the desired relief. I keep constantly a supply on hand. During the past ten years I have influenced many persons to make use of this remedy, and always with the same success. Fifty cents and $1 a bottle. Sold by all druggists.

TALES OF MY GRANDFATHER

A TRADE WITH JOHN JACOB ASTOR.

OLD-FASHIONED IDEAS—THE MIDDLEMEN—HOW MEN DID BUSINESS 50 YEARS AGO—THE FUR BUSINESS—THE STORE IN VESEY STREET—CASH OR CREDIT—GETTING AHEAD OF ASTOR.

"You see in those days," said my grandfather, "we knew nothing at all about telegraphs. I am quite sure that with your ideas you will not think as I do, and fancy that we must have had no end of trouble to obtain information about the markets of the world."

"Why, grandfather, the world must have been really small in your time, at least for business—there was, for instance, no Australia," said one of the grandchildren. "Granted my son, but there were no end of countries which then had no manufactures or goods, and we used to supply them. Five or six great cities in Europe and two or three in America used to be the great depots, and distributed the goods. But, as I was saying, we got along quite well without telegraphs, for 50 years ago a merchant was one in every sense of the word, and always had his eyes and his ears open. We got up early in the morning and went to bed late. Now, no one of you goes to his office before 10 o'clock, and you come home at 3 or 4 o'clock, and complain of a hard day's work! I am certain that most of the money I made was earned before 10 o'clock in the morning. Special knowledge, to return to the merchants of my time, existed quite as much as it does to-day, but the general acquaintance with mercantile matters was much more universal. A merchant knew about the products of every country, and could carry out the whole business for himself. No middlemen were wanted. I could buy anything I wanted, because I could rely upon my own judgment as to price and quality. If I wanted to sell, I knew the wants of the purchasers, or I could wait for people to buy from me. I wonder if I didn't know as well as the next man what my cargo of sugar, or coffee, or tea, or of hides was worth. I know, again, that there is not one of you who will agree with me, but middlemen are just eating up the substance of the country. Brokers are worse than ship-rats, for they keep nibbling and nibbling until all the profits are gone. Let a lot of goods pass a half dozen times between wholesale purchasers, when a speculative period comes on, and just add the different brokerages, and see how much it comes to. I never used a broker in my life save when I wanted to purchase some money securities in the market. When I did a big business and rented a large store on Water street, saving my insurance brokerages, which I attended to myself, paid my rental. I went out of business many years before the present system of collecting duties was imposed. I am not going to argue with you about free trade or protection, though on my word of honor, with all your boasted science, we old fellows—or young fellows then—used to study our Adam Smith, which is something more than either your smart traders or sagacious legislators do nowadays. Now you tell me that we couldn't get along without a Custom-house broker, because the whole system is so complicated. It seems to me a crying injustice when the simple clearance of a box, or a bale, or a barrel, through a Custom-house becomes so difficult a thing to do, that a special man has to be hired. It is against common sense. It a man, because he imports a single case of goods, to be considered as a law-breaker! And must a Custom-house be held as a court, and the simple act of making an entry, require the services of a Custom-house lawyer? It is an absurdity, and one which I am told does not exist in any other country in the world. I don't want to think that the men of the present day are all thieves and rascals, intent on swindling the Government. Good, sound common sense must come round some day, and the system of collecting duties or of clearing goods, will have to be simplified. The money from Customs was not made to benefit brokers, but the country. Most of you smile," said our jolted grandfather, as he took off his spectacles; "for aught I knew, some of you may be brokers, but I have always regarded you as the Delilahs of trade. There!"

"But grandfather, you had a limited market in those days, you know, and"—

"Stuff, nonsense; you young fellows always bring forward that argument—like that new-fangled idea of other worlds. Was there no business done in Philadelphia, New-York, or Boston 50 years ago? I put Philadelphia first, because, before the big fire, she did more business than New-York. You take and study the population of these cities half a century ago, the population of the country, and the amount of business done, and you will see at once what nonsense you are talking. The ratio of business was larger. Trade was more constant and more satisfactory. We were not in an awful hurry to get rich. We knew well enough that a fortune gained in a day was lost in a minute. Things did not tumble down to nothing in an hour's time. Coffee might shade off a quarter of a cent in a month, or tea advance a half cent, and nobody was hurt. When we made importations we could rely on something. Freights, exchange, value of money, were not at sixes and sevens. The telegraph did not come in every five minutes and occasionally change things. We didn't tinker with tariffs." The old gentleman was evidently losing his temper.

"But, grandfather, what about your first business transaction with Astor?" one of us asked. Now, our much-beloved grandfather had told this story a hundred times, but as it gave him pleasure to repeat it, he regained his good temper at once, and thus commenced:

"Oh, about John Jacob Astor! I know you have heard me tell the story before. Ah! he was a merchant in every sense of the word. A fairer or squarer man you never came across, a trifle hot and peppery at times, but when you knew him and he believed in you, he was the best and most liberal man to deal with I ever met with. It is not true that he was grasping, and tried to crush out other people. It is certain that he had that China fur trade all to himself, but once or twice I cut into him, in a small way, of course, and he didn't mind it as all. Once I made a venture of some $5,000 worth of furs from this side to China, and brought home teas, and made just eight for one on the business—that was a whacking profit. You see, in 1823, some of my Canada friends were part owners in the good ship ——."

"But, grandfather, stick to the John Jacob Astor story, please."

"It was in 1822, then, that I received from England the information that all kinds of fur stock were likely to be rare in Europe. I had the advices early from some friends in Leipsic, but didn't want to go in, for as a rule I studied the markets well on both sides, and found that the supply would be short. Strange to say, for five years before there had been no money made in furs, and a big stock had accumulated in New-York. I was hesitating what to do, when an order came from a strong house in London for a big line of furs, and among the sorts was 5,000 land otters. Now, otters were dull. If I had, however, gone around and bought them up in small lots in Philadelphia or Boston, I should have raised the price in an instant. Talk about your telegraph—stuff! Fifty years ago, a man never bought anything in a large way that all the people didn't speculate why he bought the goods for, or where they were going to. People were sharp. I should like to have seen any of your new-fashioned brokers doing my business for me! Now, I knew that Astor had a big lot of these very otters. How did I know that? Why I had ticketed off every skin the old man had bought for the last three years in New-York. I had found that out without your telegraph. It was on an Autumn day when I went into Vesey street to see Mr. Astor. I did not know him save by sight. For a young man I was quite bold, because I had the privilege to draw on the Rothschilds for the amount of my purchase, and Rothschilds' bills were scarce and much in demand in those days. It would never have done for me to let the old man, or anybody else, know that I was buying for the Continent. I had just been paid, too, quite unexpectedly, a round sum of money, which I had made up my mind new I would put into furs. The Astor store, in Vesey street, wasn't half as fine a place as it would be occupied to-day by any one of your twopenny brokers. Astor was there, busy examining a bale of beavers. A porter was assorting them, and the old man would every new and then stoop and pick up a particularly fine skin and smooth it over with his hand. It was early in the morning—not much more than 9 o'clock. Heads of houses don't do that kind of thing nowadays, but in old times the principals used to examine goods for themselves. I must have stood between the light and Mr. Astor, for he turned on me, saying, 'Well, my young man, what is it I can do for you?' He had a very slight German accent, and would occasionally mix b's and p's and d's.

'It is only a few beavers I want, Mr. Astor,' I said.

'Only beavers you want, and pray who are you?' he asked.

I told him the name of my house. To my surprise Mr. Astor said: 'Oh, I know you; thought you would come round to trade sometimes. You are a beginner. I knew your father—honest man. You larn your business in London with ——, a good house, and mostly turned out smart young men. Well, my boy, here is beavers. Make your choice. How many do you want? Price, $5 a pound and not a cent less. This pack runs even right through.' I made a selection of beaver pelts, though I did not really want them. Astor helped me to examine the skins, and I bought at about the market rate, some 300 pounds.

'That is all you want—nothing else?' Mr. Astor asked.

'Nothing else,' I said in an indifferent way, though I added, 'I might take just a few otters if I could buy them right.' I knew Astor was loaded with them.

'Oh, otters! Well, I has a lot, a big lot, but I is willing to divide them. There may be as many as 7,000. You like for you to handle, my boy? They are very dull of sale; and I would be most happy to sell anything like such a big lot. You wouldn't divide the lot into two, would you, Mr. Astor?'

'In two, what, halve them! That's a fair lot anyhow.'

'Yes, it is a big lot, seeing how slow they are of sale.'

'Slow! Suppose if they were slow, and you didn't know what to do with them, would you buy them? See here, if you want half the lot you will have to pay more for them. My price is for the whole of them three dollars a skin; if you divide them it will be a quarter of a dollar more. Now young man I am busy. It's too big a line for you. The clerk will make out your bill.' I think I would like to look at the rear of the skins.' I said.

'Well, then, all right; my porter will sort them, and call here to-morrow, and you can see how they turn out,' said Mr. Astor. Now, to have delayed the purchase a day or more would never have answered. A London packet might come in that afternoon, and next morning the boys of a rival in the fur market might have prevented my cutting the furs at my figures.

'I cannot conveniently wait over to-day. I must be off to Philadelphia by noon to-morrow. If you will give me a couple of men I will examine these furs myself.'

'Why, my boy, it will be night before we are through, and the sun goes down early now. All right, though; I will give you two men. The skins are up stairs, and you can work on them—you say 6 o'clock? I will be here, and you will say yes or no.'

At work I went, and, getting through the examination as fast as I could—by 6 o'clock—had only half assorted the otter skins.

At 6 o'clock, punctually, Mr. Astor came up stairs.

'I am not half through,' I said; 'Mr. Astor, now, from what I have seen, I should make the run of the skins pretty much as follows: Twenty-five per cent. prime skins, 40 per cent. seconds, 30 per cent. thirds, and the remainder damaged.'

'No,' said Mr. Astor; 'there are some bales you haven't looked through which belong to the lot, which would make the poor skins something like 25 per cent. But, as you want to divide, I'll make up a fair average. You are a good worker. I like to see young people work; but I want my supper—what you say? You takes 3,500 skins at $3 50?' The skins were cheap at that, and within my limit. Now, for a good stroke of business, I thought to myself.

'I will tell you what I will do, Sir, I will give two dollars and three-quarters for the whole lot.'

'So! so! My boy, with fifteen hundred dollars of beaver and all them otters, that makes most twenty thousand dollars.'

'And at four months credit,' I added.

'Four months credit and most twenty thousand dollars! So! You go fast for a young man,' and here Astor looked me square in the face. 'You are married?' he asked.

'Yes, Mr. Astor,' I replied with a smile.

'Babies?'

'Yes, Sir—two.'

'Any more expected?'

'I am sure I don't know,' I answered, rather losing patience.

'A big family for a young man! You spend all you make?'

'No, Sir.'

'Wife wear fedders in her hat, big sleeves, give parties?'

'Yes, Sir, she wears feathers when they are in fashion, and gives a party when she thinks her husband can afford it.'

'So! I did business with your fadder many years ago. He was an honest man. It is a risk. Two seventy-five for a lot of skins worth three dollars! You wait now,' and he took a bit of chalk and made some figures on the lid of a black desk. I remember his figures to this day. 'Young man,' said Mr. Astor, 'you say two dollars and eighty cents, and you promise me your wort of honor that you never tells nobody that John Jacob Astor was fool enough to trust a young man—a boy, though he has two babies—with twenty thousand dollars' worth of goods.'

That speech of the old man made me mad. 'I don't want your goods Mr. Astor,' I said; 'I don't want anybody to sell me goods as a favor.'

'What! you show your temper because I put five cents more on the skins? Here my boy, you just show me, that the son is as honest as the fadder, and I tell you sometithers—your old man long before you was born, trust me once in London with £50. You go now; time for my supper.'

'You will pack the goods in good hogsheads?'

'Yes, yes; everything. You ask me to pay freight on them next, and guarantee profits? I suppose. Now go away; that is enough trading for to-day. You have your bill to-morrow. Anything more you want?'

'Yes, Mr. Astor, nineteen thousand seven hundred dollars' worth of notes payable is almost too much for a young house like mine to put out at one time.'

'What, you don't want to give notes! Young man! you must think John Jacob Astor crazy.'

'I want to pay the money for my purchase, Sir, and must have a discount for cash.'

'The cash! Young man, how you manage your business! I don't want any money. What's $20,000! Well, well, you does things so cunning, that I must oblige you. I will take off the legal interest for four months.'

'That won't do, Mr. Astor. If you have so much money, other people have not. Say two and a half per cent., and to-morrow morning I will pay the amount.' 'My boy,' said Mr. Astor, 'you beat me down all around. See here; is a bargain. You is a support than your father. Now I tell you, I has given you a good bargain to-day; tell me in confidence what you do with these skins.'

'I will ask you to take two and a half per cent. more off the cost of the goods for this information.'

'Dat would be paying too much. Good bye; you come see me in the morning—and my supper, dat is cold.'

Early in the morning I sold my bills on London at a good rate, and in order to conceal the whole transaction, carried round the money to Vesey street.

Presently, Mr. Astor came in. 'You are cunning; I buy your bill myself on the Rothschilds. A bargain is a bargain. The Liverpool packet came in last night. Otters is worth a pound in London, on a rising market. It's all right. If you hadn't worked with my men, examining the skins yourself, I never would have trusted you—may-be never would have sold them otters at your figures. How you got the news first, I don't know. Come I see you again. Buy fedders for your wife, and give parties. I treat you first-rate about them otters; but, young man, John Jacob make a good thing out of them skins himself, even if he sell them at two dollars.' I had many a transaction afterward with Astor, and had an unlimited credit which, however, I never abused. Whenever I went into his store to do any business with Mr. Astor, he would say, 'Cash, or credit this time? How your wife's fedders? Any more babies?'"

THE DELIGHTS OF THE CHASE.

A GOOD RUN WITH FOX-HOUNDS — THE COST THEREOF.

From the Saturday Review.

Why do people hunt? Nominally to obtain amusement and take exercise; practically, in many cases, because it is the fashion. Can we be seriously asked to believe that men who abhor every kind of discomfort and exertion would naturally, for their own pleasure and gratification, get up at abnormal hours, dress by candle-light, and drive, or go by train, for a long distance, to undergo danger and fatigue, returning home by a perhaps still longer journey? That men of hardihood and energy can enjoy such labors we can easily understand; but besides such, our hunting-fields are crowded with delicate and luxurious fellows who only go out because it is the fashion so to do. To these are daily added the debutantes of the season. Not only does it afford a pleasant channel for social intercourse, but there is a sort of intoxication about a run with fox-hounds with which no other pleasure can vie. The very blood runs more quickly through ones veins at the bare recollection of it. Our memories at once recall the self-control which it is necessary to exercise when the hounds break away from the cover, and the calm but rapid survey of the surrounding fences which we have to make when our blood is at boiling point, the mad charge which must then be made to obtain a good start, to be succeeded by a steady but bold flight over the adjoining country, be it good, bad, or indifferent; the keen emotion which must be divided between the turns of the racing pack and the approaching fences, and finally the judgment necessary to get as much speed as possible out of our horse without distressing him; and many of us can further recall the sudden dizziness, followed by a tremendous wrack upon the head and a heavy shake, which apprised us too late of the fact that we had neglected the latter precaution, and that our steed, being exhausted, had failed completely to clear a stiff fence, and given us a severe fall in consequence. That there is an indescribable ecstasy in all this, we readily admit; but at the same time, in calmly reviewing the enjoyments of the game, we must not shut our eyes to the worth of the candle. The 20 or 30 minutes of ecstatic bliss afforded by a good run with fox-hounds, is purchased at the cost of great trouble, fatigue, and expense. From beginning to end hunting entails worries and bothers. The difficulty of getting a good stud groom to start with is very great, and that of finding good horses is even greater. Then these precious creatures, when found, are not only liable to the many diseases to which horseflesh is heir, but also to the accidents and injuries which they are so likely to incur when galloped for long distances through heavy ground, and ridden over severe and dangerous fences. Probably no horse perpetually undergoes so many risks as a hunter. Then there is the drawback of having to make so many other duties and pleasures of life subservient to hunting. Indeed we are sometimes almost induced to fancy that one of the great attractions of hunting consists in the opportunities which it offers for the indulgence of the British taste for grumbling. As to the fatigue, any man of only moderate strength, who has been accustomed to hunt four or five days a week, must be well aware how thoroughly wearied a succession of hard days will make him, especially when the distances to the meets and the rides home are long. The motion of a good hunter flying over fences is very delightful, but it is not so pleasant to ride imaginary horses over the fences at home and abroad throughout the night, and when we jump in our sleep we come down with a disagreeable jolt upon the mattress, utterly foreign to the springy manner of alighting which is peculiar to a well-bred horse. But most hunting men must, when thoroughly over-fatigued, have occasionally experienced these "hunting nights," during which they never could get near the hounds, despite much hard riding and many falls. On such occasions the summons of the valet at an early hour, just as they had at last dropped off into a comfortable sleep, was almost as unwelcome as would have been that of a detective policeman; and the sight of the white leathers and top-boots, and other paraphernalia of the chase, which he carried in his hands, were suggestive of the last straw for the back of the camel.

FOREIGN MISCELLANY.

AN ENGLISH CURATE'S CAREER.

THE REWARD OF A LIFE SPENT IN THE SERVICE OF THE CHURCH—A CLERGYMAN LEFT TO STARVE IN THE CITY OF LONDON.

A sexagenarian curate writes to the London Standard: "I was admitted to holy orders some 35 years ago, and began my ministry in the diocese of Ely. For a time things went on smoothly. Comparatively a poor man from the beginning, I lived and labored, hoping that the reward of a small benefice might some day crown my patient waiting. So I moved about from one curacy to another, remaining in one parish as curate in sole charge for nearly twenty years. During the time I was so employed I outlived four of my Bishops, two in the diocese of Ely, and two in the diocese of Norwich, for I served under Bishops Allen and Turton in Ely, and under the father of the present Bishop of Wakefield and Dr. Bloomfield in Norwich. But hope, like the bird in the story, led me onward, and at last took flight and left me in broken health, old, and disheartened. I was never a pushing man, and did not then believe that in the pursuit of church preferment the race is indeed to the swift and the battle to the strong. The death of my last Rector and the loss of a small patrimony by ill-advised investments drove me to London to seek rest and medical advice. There my trials began. The little money I had left was soon spent, and being at that time an invalid, and unequal to the exertion of reading or preaching, I looked about for employment with the knowledge of books and skill as a linguist pointed out as the most likely way by which I might earn the daily bread. Journalism, magazine writing, giving lessons in French, fair copying, and even directing envelopes at five shillings a thousand, were all tried, but every Saturday night the payment of the rent of the single room I occupied reversed the bulk of my six days' earnings, and often left me not more than half a crown to battle with the wants of the coming week. I felt myself drifting into a state of penury and want. My books and my sermons were sold, and clothes that were good for anything went piece by piece to the pawnbroker. But I still struggled on, eating the scanty bread of independence, but suffering the most pinching poverty. This kind of existence lasted more than two years. I wrote to some brother clergymen of the same university, who were my contemporaries, an account of my position. One of them sent my letter to the Mendicity Office, another forwarded my communication to the Charity Organization Society. I was interviewed by officials from both institutions. They treated me much as is the wont of such men to treat the ordinary mendicants and impostors of London. First, my landlady was asked if her lodger was a drunkard or owed her any rent. This inquiry being answered satisfactorily, my room was next invaded, and a black note-book produced, in which all my replies to their questions (the inquisitorial and degrading nature of which it is not possible to describe) were carefully entered. The Mendicity officer advised me to apply to the church societies, which profess to aid necessitous clergymen. The agent of the Charity Organization Society gave similar counsel. So I appealed to three of the best known of the church societies in turn. My references to beneficed clergymen who knew me personally were satisfactory, but I had never held or taught any doctrine contrary to that of the Church of England; I never incurred censure from my Bishops, or blame from any one of my numerous incumbents. No reason was assigned, but to each application there came a reply of regret from the Secretary, civilly worded, but meaningless. Things were now looking very gloomy. I had sunk into a state of semi-starvation, pacing the streets in search of employment, with worn-out boots and threadbare clothes. I have at times been without food for two consecutive days. Hunger, beyond a certain point, loses its torturing power. After the first twelve hours of fasting the sharper pains disappear, and a dull feeling comes on—not a feeling of pain so much as a sense of intense weariness. The sight of the provision stores and the bakers' shop windows, at first so appetizing, loses its attraction, and you pass them without turning the head. So I made up my mind that I must die—die of sheer want, in the midst of the richest city of the world, surrounded by treasures of untold wealth, encompassed by abundance in every form. To all appearance the end was fast coming. One day in the past Autumn I had managed, I scarcely knew how, to drag myself to a seat near the 'Round Pond in Kensington Gardens. There I sat for hours, barely giving their race a thought. Boys were sailing their toy ships on the water; men were giving their dogs a swim; nurse-maids with bright-eyed children were throwing bread to the wild fowl; a flood of golden sunshine poured itself on the trees and on the shining roof of the palace hard by, and lighted up the many-colored dresses of ladies who were taking their afternoon walk. It was Saturday, and I had scarcely tasted food since the previous Thursday. It was, however, a day that brought an end to my suffering from absolute want. An old college friend, whom I had not seen for many years, was passing. He saw me and recognized me. My story was soon told and relief promptly given. But for the timely arrival of this good Samaritan I should have perished, and another death from starvation would have formed the subject of a paragraph in the columns of the press, with the information that the latest victim was a clergyman and a graduate of ——. I can write bitterly, but I would fain have this picture of what may be the possible end and reward of a life spent in the service of the Church taken into consideration by those who are starving in the race."

POSTAL STATISTICS OF EUROPE.

CHEAP AND SPEEDY MEANS OF COMMUNICATION—THE REGULAR DISTRIBUTION OF LETTERS PER DAY.

From the Economist.

In consequence of the reduction of rates, the opening up of cheap and speedy means of communication, the growth of commerce, and the spread of education, the development of the postal service during recent years has attained wonderful dimensions. How rapid has been its growth will be seen from the following table, which we extract from the Economiste Français:

NUMBER OF LETTERS POSTED.

England	1,100,000,000	990,000,000	720,000,000
Germany	643,000,000	582,000,000	223,000,000
France	366,000,000	305,000,000	313,000,000
Austro-Hungary	285,000,000	269,000,000	120,000,000
Switzerland	73,000,000	56,000,000	37,000,000
Belgium	68,000,000	64,000,000	34,000,000

The figures for the other European countries during the past 15 years cannot be ascertained, but from an official document issued from the Austrian Ministry of Finance, it appears that about 2,922,000,000 letters were posted in Europe during 1875. The Economists Français calculates that in the same year the number of letters posted in other than European countries amounted to about 980,000,000, so that altogether 3,900,000,000 letters were forwarded in that year. "A simple calculation therefore demonstrates the interesting fact that the correspondence of the world requires the regular distribution of 10,600,000 letters per day." In the above table it will be observed that the rate of increase from 1870 to 1875 has been less than the former average, and the Economists Français is probably correct in attributing that to the long-continued commercial depression, and in tracing to political events the rapid growth in the correspondence of Germany, and the comparatively stationary condition of that of France. The following table, showing the number of letters, &c., posted per head of the population in the various European countries, is especially interesting. The first column gives the letters, the second the newspapers and patterns:

Country.		Country.
United Kingdom	34.5	5.2	Norway	5.6	....
Switzerland	27.3	17.2	Sweden	5.5	5.6
Germany	15.3	11.7	Spain	4.8	....
Holland	14.6	7.0	Italy	4.5	2.4
Luxembourg	14.2	8.3	Hungary	4.4	1.8
Belgium	13.0	12.5	Greece	2.1	....
Denmark	11.7	10.7	Russia	0.8	0.5
Austria	10.6	2.1	Roumania	0.5	....
France	10.3	4.1	Turkey	0.2	0.1

WHY THE RATE IS SO SMALL IN FRANCE—THE HIGH RATE OF POSTAGE.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times, commenting on the article above quoted, says: "The high rates of postage which have always existed in France, have doubtless exercised no small influence on this backward condition of France. It has often been pointed out by economists that in raising a duty the estimate of revenue from it must make allowance for the diminution of consumption that will result from the increase in price of the commodity on which the duty is raised, and that there is a point beyond which the increase of duty will diminish the consumption so much that the duty will not increase the revenue. This is a fact which French fiscal legislation has often tended to forget, and in no case more than in the increase of the rates of postage at the close of the year 1871. The average rate of increase had been, till 1870, about 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 letters a year. During the war the number diminished. It was afterward low on account of the loss of Alsace-Lorraine, but not so low as a loss of a nineteenth part of the population would account for—namely, about 18,000,000 letters—while the actual decrease was 60,000,000. Considering for the portion of the war that lasted into 1871, say a half, which is considerably more than is likely to have been its effect, we have 30,000,000. Even during the year 1872 the number was 25,000,000 below that of 1869. I am not able to give the number of postcards which in 1873 diminished the number of letters, as they are thrown together with newspapers and samples in the table of the 'Annales du Commerce' before me. In that year, though the number of letters slightly increased, the amount of revenue diminished, and at the present moment, despite the addition of the post-cards to the items with which they are confused, the number in that class is only 1,500,000 larger than it was in 1869, while that of letters is 14,000,000 less. This shows the positive injury caused by the higher rate of postage. M. Léon Say has said a reduction of the rate will be his next reform, and it certainly is impossible for anyone to go about questioning them in this case. The difficulty is in the loss the reform will at first inflict on the revenue."

BROTHERS IN MISFORTUNE.

EXPERIENCES OF A FROST-BITTEN TRAVELER IN RUSSIA.

Capt. Fred Burnaby, in his book A Ride to Khiva, relates the following sketch. He had accidentally exposed his hands in sleigh-traveling and had got frost-bitten: "In a few minutes I awoke, a feeling of intense pain had seized my extremities; it seemed as if they had been plunged into some corrosive acid which was gradually eating the flesh from the bones. I looked at my finger-nails; they were blue, the fingers and back part of my hands were of the same color, while my wrists and the lower part of the arm were of a waxen hue. There was no doubt about it, I was frost-bitten, and that in no slight degree; so calling to my servant, I mean him the skin with some snow, in hopes of restoring vitality. This he did for several minutes, but all this time the same pain previously described was gradually ascending up my arms, while the lower portion of the limbs were lost to all sensation, dead to pain—dead to every sense of feeling—hanging quite lifelessly by my side. Nazar in vain using all his energies so as to restore circulation. 'It is no good,' he said, looking sorrowfully at me; 'we must get on as fast as possible to the station. How far off is it?' he inquired of the driver. 'Seven miles' was the answer. 'Go as fast as you can,' I cried. The pain, which by that time had ascended to the glands under my arms, had become more acute than anything I had hitherto experienced. Apparently extreme cold acts in two ways on the nervous system; sometimes, and more mercifully, by bringing on a slumber from which the victim never awakes, and at others, by consuming him, as it were, over a slow fire, and limb by limb. All this time the perspiration was pouring down my forehead, my body itself being as if on fire, the pain gradually ascending the parts attacked. There are moments in a man's life when death itself would be a relief; it was about the day that an unfortunate criminal would have to undergo the last dread sentence of the law, and I remember distinctly the thought occurring to my mind, as to whether the physical pain I was then undergoing was less than the mental agony of the poor wretch on the drop. Would the distance that separated us from the station ever be traversed? Each mile seemed to me a league, and each league a day's journey. At last we arrived. Hurrying to the waiting-room, I met three Cossacks, to whom I showed my hands. The soldiers led me into an outer room, and having taken off my coat and bared my arms they plunged them up to the shoulder in a tub of ice and water. However, there was no sensation whatever, and the limbs, which were of a blue color, floated painlessly in the water. The elder of the Cossacks shook his head and said: 'Brother, it is a bad job, you will lose your hands,' 'They will drop off,' remarked another, 'if we cannot bring back the circulation.' 'Have you any spirit with you?' added a third. Nazar on hearing this ran out and brought in a tin bottle containing naphtha for cooking purposes, upon which the Cossacks, taking my arms out of the icy water, proceeded to rub them with the strong spirit. Rub, rub, rub, the skin peeled under their horny hands, and the spirit irritated the membrane below. At last a faint sensation like tickling pervaded the elbow-joints, and I slightly flinched. 'Does it hurt?' asked the elder of the Cossacks. 'A little.' 'Capital, brothers,' he continued, 'rub as hard as you can;' and after going on with the friction until the flesh was almost flayed, they suddenly plunged my arms again into the ice and water. I had not felt anything before, but this time the pain was very acute. 'Good,' said the Cossacks. 'The more it hurts the better chance you have of saving your hands.' And after a short time they let me take them out of the tub. 'You are fortunate, little father,' said the elder of the Cossacks. 'If it had not been for the spirit your hands would have dropped off. If you had not lost your arms as well.' Rough, kind-hearted fellows were these poor soldiers; and when I forced on the elder of them a present for himself and comrades, the older soldier simply added, 'Are we not all brothers when in misfortune?' Would you not have helped me if I had been in a like predicament?' I shook his hand heartily, and went to the waiting-room to rest on the sofa, as the physical shock just undergone had for the moment thoroughly prostrated me. My arms also were sore and inflamed, the spirit having in some places penetrated the raw flesh; and it was several weeks before I thoroughly recovered from the effects of my carelessness."

A GUILELESS JEWELER.

HOW AN ITALIAN SHOP-KEEPER WAS SWINDLED BY A GENTLEMAN AND HIS DAUGHTER.

Not long since a very gentlemanly-looking man, accompanied by his daughter, a good-looking young lady, of about 18 Summers, alighted at the chief hotel of the town. They gave themselves out to be English, and had among other luggage, four large boxes, containing two complete sets of drawers, like those used by officers in camp. They chose a saloon and two bedrooms, one of which opened into the saloon. As soon as they were settled these drawers were unpacked, and one set was placed against the door in the saloon, the other on the other side of the door in the gentleman's bed-chamber, the door in question being (like most of those in Continental hotels) very thin. For some time all went on very satisfactorily. The gentleman was not extravagant, but liberal, and was most particular in calling for his bill every week and paying it to the moment. Before he had been many days in the town he paid a visit to the principal jeweler, and made some small purchases—in each case paying cash and showing that he was well provided with bank-notes. The jeweler was most anxious to press his new custom, and brought out all kinds of beautiful articles to tempt him, but at first his purchases were moderate, though liberally paid for. At the end of a month the gentleman paid a visit alone, and, after making another purchase, observed that his daughter was extremely low in spirits, and that he thought of sending to Paris for a set of diamonds. The jeweler could not allow such a chance to slip through his fingers. He had the most beautiful set in Europe, the property of a Princess; he was sure that only a Milord Inglese could buy them, and begged his customer just to inspect them. The price was only 400,000 francs. The inspection was made, but no conclusion was come to that day. The next day another inspection was made and Milord agreed to take them. The jeweler was delighted. He thought it would be best to ask if he should send them round that evening, but he received a perfectly straightforward answer. I do not keep so much money about me. I must draw upon my bankers in London. I will give you 500 francs to close the business, and the jewels you can deliver against cash in the course of next week." The deposit was paid, and the jeweler satisfied beyond a doubt that he was dealing with a most perfect gentleman. Eight days after, he was requested to call the same morning at 11 and bring the diamonds, for which he would be paid. He arrived at the moment and found his customer in his dressing-gown, sitting alone at the set of drawers referred to, a certain number of which were open so as to form a writing-table. The jeweler advanced respectfully, and laid the casket open on the flap in question. "Milord" just examined the jewels, remarked that of course he did not wish his daughter to know anything of the transaction at present, and then preceded to take out a large handful of beautiful crisp notes, at which moment the door opened, and in bounded the young lady in question, as the jeweler afterward said, "just like a golden fawn." Nothing was more natural than that Milord should close up the flap, and ask the young lady to go way, as he wished to be alone. But she was a spoiled child and would have her own way. She had come in, only to "papa" that the tailor was waiting for him in the next room and he must go, and that she was quite sure the jeweler would like her company better than his; besides, she had a locket she could not open, and the jeweler must help her. The jeweler was not proof against the playful charms of this young lady; he saw his goods safe, not crackly under his eyes, but next door to it. So he begged her father to go and he would wait. "Milord" left the room and the poor dupe enjoyed half an hour of delightful flirtation with the young lady. There was something very winning in her ways, and there she was a young bride. The time passed like a dream, and at last the young lady passed off to go and hurry her father. The jeweler sat in meditation; his thoughts were at first all engrossed with the sweet girl who had just left. Then he began to wonder how long his customer would be. Then he went and tried the flap of the drawer. It was "all right;" it was locked. So he sat down and mused again. After some three hours he began to think that he must be forgotten. So he rang the bell and requested the waiter to just remind "Milord" that he was waiting, but to do it very politely. The waiter replied that Milord and the Signorina had gone out an hour ago. There was nothing to do but to wait, and wait he did. Neither returned. Table d'hôte passed, and, although the poor man began to have a presentiment that something was wrong, the landlord was consulted, but was sure that his guest was a real gentleman, whose only fault was forgetfulness. So again he waited until past the small hours of the night. At early morning the landlord again returned, and he also began to think the case suspicious. The jeweler was furious. He made a dash at the drawers, and with the aid of a poker broke open the flap. His next move was to take the casket. He thrust his head into the compartment, and sank back into the arm-chair. He saw nothing before him but a square open void leading into the set of drawers in the next room. The landlord did likewise, and so did the waiters. Then they sat and looked at each other, and at last ordered restoratives for the jeweler, who had fainted.

CHRISTMAS AT OXFORD UNIVERSITY.

The London Telegraph of Dec. 26, says: "Christmas was ushered in at Oxford by the ringing of the numerous peals of bells of the university and city last night. The university sermon was preached in the Cathedral this morning by Very Reverend the Dean. The attendance was very numerous, there having been full choral service. The anthems at New and Magdalen attracted unusually large numbers, while the services in the various churches and chapels were correspondingly well attended. In the evening the ancient custom of serving up a boar's head at Queen's College was observed with all due ceremony, the public, by the permission of the Provost and Fellows, having been admitted to the college hall. The boar's head, which was provided by the collegiate mansion, Mr. William Howe, was a splendid specimen, weighing 70 pounds, and was decorated with the proverbial 'bays and rosemary,' and surmounted with the college arms, flags, &c. On the assemblage of the public, who mustered in unusually large numbers this year, the procession of singing men and choristers entered the hall, preceded by the Rev. Thomas Hackett Hope, Chaplain of Queen's College, who took the solo part of the carol which has recently been set to music by Dr. Hayne, a former member of that society."

EFFECTS OF PAIN ON THE HEART.

From Galignani's Messenger.

In a paper sent in by Dr. F. Franck to the Academy of Sciences, the effects of painful excitement on the heart are discussed, on the strength of experiments executed during the months of February to August. The starting point of these experiments dates back to the fact, accidentally noticed, of a prolonged interruption of the beating of the heart and respiratory motions in a rabbit, under the nostrils of which a sponge, impregnated with chloroform, was placed. This phenomenon, already discussed in various ways by different physiologists, is independent of chloroform, since any acrid and volatile substance, such as ammonia or acetic acid, will produce the same effect, and is only a particular case of a general law thus enunciated by Dr. Cl. Bernard: "The stopping of the heart, or syncope, may follow any violent or sudden disturbing action of any nature whatever." In man, a great many intermittencies of the heart, syncopes, and some sudden deaths, have no other cause than a violent, painful impression, either cerebral or peripheric, such as, for instance, epigastric contusions. But these reflex actions, produced on the region of the heart, must be distinguished from the mere mechanical disturbances, provoked by great emissions of blood, causes of the extirpation of tumors, &c. There are many contradictory opinions on this matter, but our author affirms, from his experiments, that the immediate effect of a painful impression is a stoppage or slackening of the throbbing of the heart. If the principal sensitive nerves be excited by various irritants, the following general results will be observed: Exciting the nostrils with ammonia, acetic acid, or chloroform is specially, but not exclusively, transmitted to the spinal bulb by the trigimini; the heart receives the impression through the medium of the pneumo-gastric nerves, and the effect on the heart is proportional to the intensity of the excitement. All experiments cement in confirming the fact that the union between the trigimini and the pneumo-gastric nerves is real. When pain is suppressed, chloral, chloroform, ether, morphine, produce by themselves no action on the heart; but this is owing to the paralysis of the pneumo-gastric nerves caused by these agents.

A DOUBLE ELOPEMENT.

The Montreal Gazette of Saturday says: "Two of the daughters of a well-known citizen, early in the present week, gave practical proof of their disbelief in the old saw that marriages are, or ought to be, 'made in heaven,' by quietly slipping away from the parental roof and uniting their fortunes for better or worse with two young gentlemen of the same name—cousins, we believe, and not unknown in Montreal society."

NEW AND ELEGANT HOU

THE HOUSEHOLD.

THE FEATURES OF THE MARKETS.

The markets present but few new features of interest. Meat, poultry, game, and fish are in good supply, and prices for these staple articles of food are no higher than they were last week, and in some instances a little lower. Wild ducks, quail, partridges, grouse, and rabbits are quite cheap, and prices for venison—the sale of which will be prohibited by the game laws in February—are falling. Butter, of a quality choice and finely flavored enough to suit the tastes of the very fastidious, is scarce and high-priced, but there is an abundance of pretty good butter which sells at reasonable rates. Good cheese is dear and eggs are in light supply and much higher. Fruits in season continue to be plentiful. Apples and Florida oranges are very cheap. Prices for cranberries remain the same. The supply of vegetables is light, owing to the snow on the ground and the cold weather of the past week. There is a tendency to an advance in the markets on the prices at which they have been selling. Among the dainties to be bought in the way of vegetables are mushrooms raised in hot-houses, which sell at $1 per pound.

THE COMPOSITION OF MEAT.

The Scholars' Handbook of Household Management and Cookery, written by W. B. Tegetmeier, and published by Macmillan & Co., has much general information of vital interest to housekeepers. The following extract on the composition of meat is a portion of the second chapter of the volume:

"Meat, or the flesh of animals used for food, consists of several very distinct substances, each of which possesses different qualities. Some of these substances are hardened, others softened, by heat; some dissolved and others rendered tough by boiling water. It is therefore necessary to understand the nature of these different substances, in order to perform the different operations of cooking in the best and most economical manner. If we take some small shreds of lean meat and wash them repeatedly in clean water, rubbing them at the same time, we shall wash away all the soluble part, and at last there will remain nothing but some white threads, which constitute the fibrous part of the flesh of the animal from which they were obtained. We could in this manner obtain about 15 pounds of flesh. This substance of which these threads are composed is termed fibrin; it is an albumenoid article of food. Fibrin also exists dissolved in the blood of living animals, and when the fresh blood of a pig or other animal is stirred, as is done in making black puddings, the fibrin separates and adheres to the stick in long fibres. The action of heat on fibrin is very important. It is hardened and contracted by a heat as great as that of boiling water. This is easily shown by pouring boiling water on the threads obtained by washing meat, or by cutting a thin shred of meat in the direction of the fibres, boiling it for a few minutes, and then noticing the alteration in its size and the hardening it has undergone. In water that is considerably less hot than boiling, the fibres of lean meat become soft; consequently, any meat, even if old and tough, can be rendered useful for food by long-continued stewing, at a heat much less than that of boiling water.

"When meat is thoroughly washed to obtain the fibrin, a soluble substance, similar to the white of an egg, passes away in the water. This is termed albumen. There are from three to five pounds of albumen in every hundred of meat; it also forms a very large proportion of the brain and of the blood. In cold or warm water, it is easily dissolved, but if heated to nearly the boiling point of water it becomes solid. If a piece of fresh meat is suddenly plunged for a few minutes into water quite boiling, the albumen on its surface is hardened, and becoming solid prevents the escape of the juices which form the gravy. Exposed to a heat greater than that of boiling water albumen becomes very horny and indigestible, but when properly cooked it is one of the most valuable articles of diet.

"The tendinous or gristly parts of the flesh, such as cow's heel, the sinewy parts about the joints, also the skin and the nutritive parts of the bones, consist chiefly of a peculiar substance termed gelatin. This is a valuable albumenoid article of food when used with other substances. Gelatin and gelatinous articles of food may be dissolved by boiling, and the solution becomes a jelly when cold. Gelatin is rendered hard and horny by a dry heat, and therefore the sinewy and tendinous parts of meat are better adapted for stewing or boiling than for roasting, broiling, or frying. If a quantity of lean meat be cut small and placed in a closely-covered earthen pot, without water, and the pot be then put in a sauce-pan of water by the side of the fire, so as to be very gradually heated, the juice of the flesh will escape. At first this will be of a red color, being tinged with a little blood, but if heated to a greater degree it will become brown. The juice of the flesh contains many substances of the greatest value as food, and meat from which it is extracted is of very superior value All operations of cookery should be conducted so as to prevent, as far as possible, any loss of this valuable fluid. When meat is salted a large proportion of the juice of the flesh is extracted and forms the brine. This contains so much albumen as to become partly solid if heated. It is from the loss of this valuable juice that salted meats are so much less nutritious and wholesome than those that are used in a fresh state. What is termed 'gravy' of meat is merely the juice of the flesh from which the water has been evaporated so that it is nearly solid."

RECIPTS FOR THE TABLE.

PLAIN SOUP, I.—A piece of beef which you can buy for 14 or 15 cents; put it on six hours before you intend to use it; cover the meat with two quarts cold water, and let simmer slowly; one hour before taking off add one carrot, one turnip, one small onion, and a little celery, all cut up fine; drain and serve; add salt and pepper.—CAMPBELL.

PLAIN SOUP, II.—Save your beefsteak and roast beef bones; cover with hot water, and let them boil slowly all day; if the water boils away, add more boiling water; you can have a pint or a quart of soup from this, according to the amount of bones; any tough pieces of the beef can be boiled with the bones; at night strain and set in a cool place; an hour before dinner the next day remove the fat from the surface; add a small onion sliced fine, a pinch of thyme, salt and pepper, and let boil half an hour; then add two sticks of macaroni and boil till done. Leave out the macaroni, add vermicelli, which requires only ten minutes for cooking, and you have another soup; put in stewed tomatoes—a few spoonfuls—with half a tea-spoonful of sugar, and you have another nice soup. Sometimes the soup will be a jelly, when cold. Do not add water to this, it will melt.—E. M. N.

MUTTON SOUP.—Take the bone left from a leg of roast mutton; crack it once or twice; add any bits of meat that are left, and boil all day, first covering with hot water. You can have three pints of soup from these bones. At night, or after it has boiled at least eight hours, strain and set it to a cool place; the next day remove the fat and add one onion, half a carrot, one turnip, some parsley, a little celery, or celery salt, a pinch of thyme, salt and pepper; chop the vegetables very fine, and let boil half an hour by themselves, then turn into the stock and boil half an hour longer. A little tomato, or tomato-catsup, is an improvement. If you choose, thicken with three tablespoonfuls of flour, mixed quite smooth in a little water.—E. M. N.

TOMATO SOUP.—Take the thin part of a can of tomatoes; stew half an hour; season with butter, salt, pepper, and sugar; have ready one pint of milk heated with two tablespoonfuls of flour enough to make it like drawn-butter; salt; at dinner-time pour both through a colander, stirring them in the tureen; be careful to have it served hot; tureen should be heated.—E. M. N.

PEA SOUP.—One quart of split peas soaked over night; in the morning take one pound and a half of fresh beef and half a pound of salt pork; drain the peas well and put on the fire with four quarts of water, and the meat and a tablespoonful of dried and powdered mint, and two heads of celery; simmer slowly until the peas are all boiled to a soft pulp; have some bread toasted very brown and cut in dice in the tureen; strain the soup and send to table at once; must be stirred just as you serve it; season with pepper and celery salt.—AUNT ADDIE.

ECONOMICAL SOUP.—Take what remains of a cold goose or turkey, and put to boil in sufficient cold water to cover all the bones, and boil steadily four hours; season with salt and pepper, and add a few vegetables, as for other soups; thicken with a little rice and it makes a relishable dish.—ECONOMY.

A WEDDING DINNER.—First course, raw oysters on shell; second, soup; third, fish; fourth, oyster patties; fifth, tenderloin of beef with potato croquettes; sixth, roast chickens; seventh, canvas-back ducks; eighth, salads; ninth, ice-creams and jellies; tenth, fruits and nuts; eleventh, coffee.—CAMPBELL.

AN ECONOMIC BREAKFAST DISH.—Small pieces of meat, one teacupful milk put in the frying-pan with a little salt and pepper, small tablespoonful butter, six eggs beaten up and stewed in with the meat.—ESSIE.

PORK CAKE.—One cup of chopped pork, one cupful of raisins, the same of molasses and milk, one teaspoonful each of salt and soda, and four cupfuls of flour.

PLAIN MINCE-MEAT.—Procure a good piece of beef without bone, and cover with boiling water; let simmer until tender and the water nearly exhausted; do not let it brown; when cold mince fine, rejecting all fat; have the water, and when cold, take the fat from it and the water you have left. To one bowlful meat add two bowlfuls minced, juicy apples, one bowlful raisins, one half bowlful currants, and one teacupful minced suet; sugar and spice to taste, a pinch of salt, and cider sufficient to moisten.—AUNT ADDIE.

BAKED INDIAN PUDDING.—One cupful "granulated" yellow meal, one-half cupful wheat flour; mix with these enough cold water to thoroughly moisten; stir into one pint boiling milk; put into a pudding-dish, add a small piece of butter, one beaten egg, one small teacupful molasses, one tablespoonful sugar, one pint cold milk, salt and ginger to taste; bake three hours. The "granulated" is by far better than the finely-ground meal.

INDIAN MEAL PUDDING, II.—The meal may be prevented from settling at the bottom of the dish by stirring the pudding several times during the first hour it is put in the oven.—CAMPBELL.

If the Indian meal used for pudding is soaked and steeped for two hours, and a sufficient number of eggs are used, the meal will not sink to the bottom of the pudding dish.—AUNT ADDIE.

MINCE PIE, I.—Five pounds of beef boiled and chopped finely, four pounds of suet boiled, and chopped, two pounds of sugar, one pound of citron, eight firmly-pounded crackers, two lemons chopped finely, one pint of cider, the same of wine and brandy, one quince boiled and chopped, two tablespoonfuls of salt, one teaspoonful of black pepper, one ounce each of cloves, cinnamon, and mace; grate nutmeg on top; also bits of butter and sugar before baking; mix molasses and cider together with the crackers, beat to a spoil, then mix them with the remainder of the ingredients; mix the sugar with the wine.

MINCE PIE, II.—Seven pounds of meat chopped fine, three pounds of sugar, three pounds of raisins, one pound of currant jelly, two ounces of mixed spices; add stewed apples when ready to make the pies, as the meat keeps better without them; make a crust of two-thirds of the usual quantity of lard and one-third of finely-chopped fat salt pork; rub well into the flour and wet with cold water, and bake in a slow oven for one hour.—L.

MINCE PIE, III.—One pint finely-chopped beef; two pints finely-chopped apples; cinnamon, nutmeg, and cloves finely pulverized, (two-thirds cinnamon,) one-third nutmeg and cloves, molasses, cider, fresh raisins.

BUCKWHEAT CAKES, I.—Four cupfuls buckwheat, one of Indian meal, one teaspoonful salt, four cupfuls luke-warm water, one 2-cent compressed yeast cake; dissolve the yeast in another cupful luke-warm water, and stir all together thoroughly; set at 6 o'clock in the morning on two sticks or a brick placed on the cool part of the range, and they will be ready to bake at 7:30. This plan only works well when the fire is kept all night.—E. M. N.

BUCKWHEAT CAKES, II.—If Sibyl will buy the prepared buckwheat which comes in paper packages, and is sold by all grocers, she will find her desideratum for griddle-cakes, for they are quickly made. Adding a little molasses will help to brown them. Directions come with the packages.

BUCKWHEAT CAKES, III.—Two parts buckwheat flour, one part Graham flour, salt, good yeast stirred up in warm water over night in a thin batter. Two boiled potatoes added will make them brown nicely.

BUCKWHEAT CAKES—IV.—One quart buckwheat flour, one half pint of Indian meal, two teaspoonfuls salt, one half tea-cup of molasses; stir into rather a stiff batter with tepid water. When they are very light, if too stiff, thin them with a little tepid water. A raw yellow turnip cut in half is very nice to grease the griddle with, saving all the strong odor of frying fat.—AUNT ADDIE.

CURRANT LOAF BREAD.—Make a batter of one quart of flour and one pint of warm sweet milk, two teaspoonfuls salt, and half a cake of compressed yeast dissolved in a little water; cover and set in a warm place until very light. Then rub to a cream one cupful granulated sugar and a piece of butter the size of an egg; add this to the sponge and one teaspoonful powdered cinnamon and the half of a small nutmeg grated. Have one-half pound of currants cleaned; rub through them a little flour and put in the dough; let stand up very soft and place in the pan or dish you intend baking it in; cover warm and let it get quite light.—AUNT ADDIE.

GRAHAM BREAD, I.—One cupful of flour, two cupfuls of Graham flour, one cupful warm water, half a cupful of bakers' yeast, a little molasses and salt, half teaspoonful of soda dissolved in the water; let rise over night; this quantity makes one loaf.—LILLIE.

GRAHAM BREAD, II.—One pint sponge, one pint warm water, one teaspoonful molasses, salt, one-half teaspoonful soda; stir in Graham flour; raise and bake.

GRAHAM BREAD, III.—One quart fine flour, two quarts Graham flour, one tablespoonful salt, one gill molasses, one-half cup compressed yeast, dissolved in a teacupful warm water; make into a stiff sponge and cover warmly. Let it get very light; then knead into a soft dough, with fine and Graham flour mixed in the proportion of one-third fine and two-thirds Graham. Let it raise again, and mold out very soft; place in pans; let stand a few moments in a warm place.—AUNT ADDIE.

SODA GRAHAM BREAD.—One pint sweet milk; two teaspoonfuls cream tartar, one teaspoonful soda, two tablespoonfuls molasses, one quart flour, half teaspoonful salt.

CHOCOLATE CAKE.—One cupful butter, two cupfuls sugar, three cupfuls milk, one-half teaspoonful soda, one teaspoonful cream tartar, five eggs, leaving out two of the whites, three and a half cupfuls flour; bake in a large sheet-iron pan. The cake should be about one and a half inches thick when baked. For frosting, two whites of eggs, one and a half cupfuls pulverized sugar, two teaspoonfuls vanilla, six tablespoonfuls grated chocolate; spread on bottom side of cake when taken from the oven.—EVA.

LEMON CAKE.—One and a half cupfuls sugar, three-fourths cupful butter, one teaspoonful cream tartar, one-half teaspoonful soda, one-fourth cupful milk, one and a half cupfuls sifted flour, two eggs; squeeze in the juice of two lemons; bake in jelly tins; grate the rind of the lemon off, mix with powdered sugar and the white of an egg; not very stiff; when the cake is cold spread this between the loaves as in jelly cake.

BOILED CUSTARD.—One quart boiled milk, four eggs, one cupful sugar, one even tablespoonful corn starch; beat the whites separate, and stir in when cold.

SNOW PANCAKES.—One quart of snow-water to about one pint of sifted flour, or sufficient to make a nice batter; one teaspoonful salt; one egg would improve it, though not altogether necessary. Beat until very light and smooth. Fry on a quick fire in lard, drippings, or "butter scrapings."—EAST ORANGE.

MUFFINS.—One quart sour milk, one even teaspoonful of soda, a little salt, flour to thicken sufficient to drop.—LILLIE.

ONE EGG TEA-CAKE.—One cupful sugar, butter the size of a black walnut, rubbed together to a cream, one-half teacupful milk, one and a half of flour, pinch of salt, one teaspoonful of vanilla, one teaspoonful of yeast powder; bake in a thin cake; before putting in oven sift powdered sugar over it.—AUNT ADDIE.

GINGER SNAPS, I.—Mix together in a deep pan one pint West India molasses, one-half pound butter or lard, one-quarter pound brown sugar, two large tablespoonfuls ginger, one teaspoonful cinnamon, a little cayenne pepper, also a little salt if lard is used, one teaspoonful soda dissolved in warm water, sufficient flour to roll out conveniently; let the whole be well incorporated into a large lump; knead it till it leaves the hands clean, then beat hard with a rolling-pin, when it will make it crisp when baked. Roll out in thin cakes.—LILLIE.

GINGER SNAPS, II.—Put two cupfuls molasses and one of butter in a tin pan; boil five minutes, then let it cool; dissolve two teaspoonfuls soda in a little warm water, and pour into the molasses and butter; two teaspoonfuls ginger, one of cinnamon, flour enough to roll without sticking; roll very thin.—M. B. W.

GINGER SNAPS, III.—Two coffee-cupfuls New-Orleans molasses, one teacupful sugar, one-half cupful larder butter, three heaping tablespoonfuls Jamaica ginger, one heaping tablespoonful soda; dissolve in one-half cupful warm water; tablespoonful vinegar; make quite stiff, roll very thin; bake brown in a hot oven.

GINGER SNAPS, IV.—One quart sifted flour, one pint of molasses, one-half pound melted butter, two tablespoonfuls ginger, one-half teaspoonful cloves, one teaspoonful cinnamon, one wine-glassful milk, quarter pound light brown sugar, two heaping teaspoonfuls baking powder, or two teaspoonfuls saleratus dissolved in the milk; roll very thin, and bake in quick oven. More flour must be added to make the dough stiff enough to mold.—AUNT ADDIE.

FOR FRYING SCALLOPS, I.—Roll soda crackers fine, dip the scallops in well-beaten egg, then in the cracker crumbs; fry with lard and butter; requires considerable cooking.

TOMATO SALAD.—One can of tomatoes, same quantity of chopped celery, three eggs beaten light; season with salt and pepper; boil tomatoes and celery together until they are thick, take off fire and stir in the eggs, and when nearly cold add one tablespoonful of mixed English mustard.—AUNT ADDIE.

USEFUL FAMILY HINTS.

TO PREVENT MILDEW ON PRESERVES, I.—"F. A." will find that tissue-paper cut the exact size of her jars of preserves and laid on double will prevent mildew; or a muslin cloth dipped in melted butter or sweet oil will also answer the purpose, or equal parts of tallow and beeswax melted and a cloth dipped in it and put on warm.—AUNT ADDIE.

TO PREVENT MILDEW ON PRESERVES, II.—Take the white of an egg and wet slightly both sides of a piece of letter paper sufficiently large to cover over the top of the preserves snugly; I have kept them free from mold and spoiling two years.

CURE FOR CHAPPED HANDS.—One part of glycerine, four of Pond's Extract or Witch Hazel, four of water; put in a bottle and shake well; it is ready for use immediately; it is well to shake thoroughly each time of using.—GOOD WILL.

TO POLISH BRASS, I.—Let "Sibyl" use for brass door-knobs soap and brickdust.—EAST ORANGE.

TO POLISH BRASS, II.—Grated rotten-stone mixed in either sweet-oil or alcohol will polish brass; or kerosene-oil and a flannel cloth; or sapolio.—AUNT ADDIE.

Company B, Seventy-first Regiment, Lieut. John H. Sturcke commanding, is under orders to assemble in fatigue uniform, at the Regimental Armory, for drill next Tuesday evening. At the annual meeting of Company I, in this command, the following civil officers were chosen: Treasurer, F. J. Benjamin; Financial Secretary, C. A. Du Moulin; Recording Secretary, W. F. Galwin. At an election held in Company G, Seventh Regiment, last Friday evening, Sergt. E. Graham Haight was elected First Lieutenant, vice Behringer, transferred to Company A. At a caucus of the company a few days previous to the election, First Sergt. John McGreevey was the first choice, and owing to his ability and long and faithful service, he would have been elected had he consented to run. After the drill of this company, last Monday evening, Private Charles F. Bennett, of that command, was the recipient of a handsome veteran's badge, for long and meritorious service. Capt. Abrams made the presentation speech. Mr. Bennett joined the company on March 1, 1858, and has performed military duty faithfully since that time.

The Eleventh Brigade Examining Board, Brooklyn, has been dissolved, and a new board has been appointed, comprising the following officers: Lieut. Col. William H. Brownell, Forty-seventh Regiment; Lieut. Col. John N. Partridge, Twenty-third Regiment, and Lieut. Col. Louis Bossert, Thirty-second Regiment. The board will assemble at Brigade Head-quarters on the second Thursday, at 8 P. M. The following officers have been appointed by Gen. Beebe upon his staff: Major Julius E. The Second Brigade Staff Association held its annual meeting at the First Division Rendezvous on Friday evening, and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Col. W. E. Van Wyck; Secretary, Capt. W. E. Webb; Treasurer, Major Eugene M. Earle. The staff officers, under command of Gen. Frederick Vilmar, will practice rifle-shooting at the State Arsenal every Saturday evening for six weeks, by way of keeping in training for effective work at Creedmoor next Summer. Gen. Vilmar proposes to detail one of the members of his staff to supervise the wing drills of the several regiments in his brigade during the Winter. The Brigade Examining Board was discharged on Friday last, and a new board was appointed, consisting of the following officers: Col. F. Unkhart, Eleventh Regiment; Col. Cortlandt Hadock, Seventy-first Regiment; and Major Pryor, Ninth Regiment. The board will convene on the first Monday in each month at the armory of the Seventy-first Regiment, when all newly-elected officers in the brigade will be expected to appear before the board for examination. Gen. Vilmar and staff will attend the sessions of the Military Association at Albany on Jan. 20.

The following officers in the First and Second Divisions have been commissioned during the past month: First Brigade Staff—Major, Charles A. Peabody, Jr.; Eleventh Brigade, Brooklyn—Major Julius F. Simons, Engineer; Major Thomas R. French, Surgeon; Capt. W. W. Rossitter, Ordnance Officer; Capt. John W. Marshall, Aide de Camp on the Staff of Gen. Beebe. Third Regiment Cavalry—First Lieut. Wilkinson; Thirty-second Regiment—First Lieuts. Valentine Ebel, H. Holzapfel; Second Lieuts. Jacob Seibert, H. Schnurbusch, Charles Stochelroth, F. W. Parisette, G. J. Swenck; Forty-seventh Regiment—First Lieut. C. O. Olcott, and Second Lieut. H. A. Sperry.

The newly-elected civil and military officers of the Old Guard, Major George W. McLean, commanding, entertained their comrades at their armory last Thursday evening. A collation was served in good style, and a pleasant reunion followed. The jovial and popular trio, Capt. L. D Buckley, Lieut. Benjamin Gursey, and Orderly Sergt John Martine, who have so acceptably and faithfully served as officers in this organization for several years past, were there in their new positions as high privates, having voluntarily yielded up their commissions to enable other members to assume the honors of officers' positions. This course of action is one of the features of the Old Guard, and affords evidence of the fraternal feeling existing in its ranks. Officers who have held high rank in the late war and in the National Guard enter the lists as privates, and serve in the line with as much enthusiasm and as great a regard for discipline as he[illegible] in the possession of [illegible] as shoulder-strape. An original device was adopted at the last annual meeting of this organization, to designate the highest military rank of those members who had served in the National Guard or the volunteers. It consists of an imitation of the regulation United States Army shoulder-strap, reduced in size, being two inches long and seven-eighths of an inch in width, and bearing the insignia of the rank of the officer wearing it. The badge is worn on the right sleeve, midway between the shoulder and the elbow and the service chevron.

Col. David E. Austen, commanding the Forty-seventh Regiment, Brooklyn, has issued an order fixing the dates for drills of instruction as follows: Line officers, on Mondays, Jan. 15 and 22, under the supervision of Lieut. Col. W. H. Brownell; non-commissioned officers, Wednesdays, Jan. 17 and 24, under command of Major George C. Bradley; officers and non-commissioned officers, (string drill,) on Fridays, Feb. 2 and 9; right wing, comprising Companies B, I, E, and D, on Tuesday, Feb. 13; left wing, Companies C, H, G, and A, on Thursday, Feb. 15. Fatigue uniforms will be worn at these drills. The entire regiment will receive instruction in street firing drill on Fridays, Feb. 23 and March 2. Edwin R. Trussell, of Company K, has been appointed Sergeant of the Guard, vice May, promoted. Charles A. Elliott has been elected First Lieutenant, and Howard C. Sperry, Second Lieutenant of Company D. Lieut. David P. Watkins, Quartermaster, has resigned. Privates Joseph Elkins, of Company F, and Sidney J. Fletcher, of Company I, and Bandmaster George A. Connor, have been discharged. Privates James J. Hinrich, Daniel Rillings, and Joseph A. Keatner, of Company E, have been dropped from the roll. Left General Guide Victor C. Field has been returned to Company G. Private John M. Lander has been transferred from Company I to Company F Drummer J. W. Dalton has been expelled for neglect of duty. Thirteen men were enlisted during the last quarter.

An election will be held in Company E, Twenty-second Regiment, to-morrow evening at 8 o'clock, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Capt. Dunning. An election of non-commissioned officers will subsequently take place. The fortunate candidates will be required to pass an examination before the Regimental Board of Examination before they will receive warrants. At the annual meeting of this company the following committees were appointed for the present year: Finance Committee—Sergt. Robert Abbott, Privates Edward Morganroth and J. W. Miller; Recruiting Committee—Privates Victor F. Maldhoff, Frank Wallach, and Joseph A. Carberry; Armory Committee—Corp. John F. Craf, Privates E. Llewellyn Clapp and Charles H. Huber. The Court-martial Committee will continue to perform duty until a new committee shall be appointed. This company will hold a reception at the Lexington Avenue Opera-house on Monday evening, the 22d inst. As the members of this company are noted for their liberality in arranging entertainments, there has been a considerable demand for invitations ever since the affair was announced. The tickets are not sold outside of the regiment, consequently those who are so fortunate as to receive invitations may expect to find there a highly respectable class of guests. The music will be furnished by the regimental band, under the personal direction of Mr. Gilmore, who has chosen some entirely new music, which will be performed on that occasion. Among the invited guests are President Grant, Gov. Robinson, Mayor Ely, Major Gen. Shaler and staff, Brig. Gen. Ward and staff, Col. Josiah Porter and staff, and Col. Rodney C. Ward and staff, of the Twenty-third Regiment, Brooklyn. It is probable that the First Regiment of Pennsylvania will also be represented.

At a meeting of Company A, Twenty-third Regiment, last Monday evening, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Charles M. Dennison; Vice President, Henry W. B. Howard; Secretary, George B. Moffatt; Treasurer, Henry H. Leland; Sergeant at Arms, George W. Howland; Board of Directors, Charles M. Dennison, Henry W. B. Howard, George B. Moffatt, Alfred Stillman, and G. K. Oliver. The following standing committees have been appointed by Capt. Story: Court-martial—Lieut. F. H. Howland, Sergt. C. W. Ames, Corp. C. A. Coffin, Privates Theodore F. Read, and W. E. Lane. Recruiting Committee—Sergt. Charles S. Kennedy, Corps. Thomas O. Chisholm, Najah Taylor, Charles E. Perkins, and W. J. Bruff. Armory Committee—Sergt. Charles F. Waters, Albert G. Sissons, and J. Willard Parry. The last monthly report of this company indicates its strength to be 112 men, and an average attendance during the past three months of 73 men. At the annual meeting of the Board of Officers of this regiment, the following civil officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Major A. C. Barnes; Vice President, Col. R. C. Ward; Treasurer, Capt. W. L. Ogden; Financial Secretary, Lieut. E. W. Burd; Recording Secretary, Lieut. Wilkinson; Finance Committee—Lieut. Col. J. N. Partridge, Capt. Darius Ferry, and Lieut. F. H. Howland; Armory Committee—Capt. J. G. Story, Capt. H. K. Smith, and Lieuts. C. E. Sherezey and Max Leitgbaun; Court-martial Committee—Capt. W. L. Ogden, Capt. P. A. Hardy, and Lieut. W. A. Gowing. At a meeting of Company C, last Monday evening, civil officers were elected as follows: President, Alonzo C. Hasey; Vice President, Levi Cook, Jr.; Recording Secretary, Edward R. Chapel; Financial Secretary, Charles E. W. Chambers; Treasurer, Curtis P. Davies; Sergeant at Arms, Norman Campbell; Court-martial—Lieut. Robert H. Haviland, Sergt. Frank Morgan, Corp. Curtis P. Davies, Privates William S. Banta, and Willard L. Candee. Private William O. Shipman, of this company has been expelled for continued neglect of duty. Second Lieut. W. W. Montgomery, of Company D, and Second Lieut. Thomas M. Gale, of Company E, have resigned.

The Twelfth Regiment, Col. John Ward commanding, paraded at the State Arsenal for battalion drill last Thursday evening. Assembly was sounded at 8 o'clock, and the command was turned over to the Colonel by Adjt. Murphy 20 minutes afterward. The equalization was in eight companies of 16 files front. A short drill in the manual of arms next took place. Its execution was somewhat marred by the presence of new recruits in the ranks. The regiment was next formed in a column of fours and marched aronnu the room. The step and distances were fair. Several division and close-column movements were then executed, but the effect of nearly all was spoiled, owing to the limited capacity of the drill-room, which made it impossible to align the flank companies in the proper manner. Col. Ward accordingly reduced the companies to a frontage of 12 files. The movements in double column were well executed, also changing the direction by the right and left flanks, with a reformation of the line in two movements. In changing direction by the right and left flank, however, it was noticed that the companies dressed to the right, instead of the left, as they should have done. The movements of advancing and retreating in line of battle were correctly performed, and elicited applause from the military critics. The drill throughout was very well executed, and, being the first one of the season, is deserving of commendation. The following drills are announced in orders, to take place at the State Arsenal: Wing drills on Monday and Tuesday evenings, Jan. 29 and 30; Feb. 19 and 20, and Wednesday and Thursday evenings, April 18 and 19; battalion drills, Wednesday, Feb. 7; Friday, March 2; Monday, March 26; Friday, April 13, and Wednesday, April 25. Division drills will take place at the regimental armory, on March 21, 22, and 23. The monotony of the drill season will be varied by occasional receptions, a review by Brig. Gen. W. G. Ward, commanding the First Brigade, and the presentation of the guidons and marksman's badges won by the regimental team at Creedmoor last fall. The next regimental reception will be held at the armory on Thursday evening next. The Independence Dramatic Club of this regiment is rehearsing the comedy entitled "Americans in Paris," and the burlesque play called "Bombastes Furioso." The latter piece will employ the capabilities of the humorous quartet, Cruger, Brown, Epstein, and Hart. Capt. Edward Fackner, commanding Company K, has issued an order changing the drill nights from Wednesday to Monday evenings. The first drill will take place on Monday, Jan. 22. Business meetings of the company will be held on the last Monday evening in each month. Capt. Fackner urges upon his command the necessity for earnest labor in recruiting, and regularity and punctuality in attendance at drills. The following civil officers have been elected in this company for the ensuing year: Chairman, Capt. Edward Fackner; Treasurer, Lieut. Jethro Mosher; Financial Secretary, Henry Lovi; Recording Secretary, Rudolph Yenni; Court-martial, Lieut. J. Mosher, First Sergt. C. J. Helferich, Privates R. Bedell and J. Brengel.

MARRIED WOMEN IN THE ENGLISH ARMY.

From the London Echo.

An order has recently been issued by the War Office on the subject of the number of married women allowed to be borne on the strength of a regiment. Hitherto, the number of the rank and file allowed on the married establishment was 7 per cent. of the numbers of men in the regiment, and the wives and families of these men were in the enjoyment of certain privileges, such as being entitled to free quarters and being allowed to obtain rations at contract rates. This number has now been reduced to 4 per cent. Of course, this will not affect the families at present on the establishment, but vacancies will not be filled up until the numbers are reduced to the lower figure. This reduction is probably caused by the short-service system, by which a soldier is bound to serve only six years with the colors, in consequence of which the authorities seem to think he will have plenty of time to get married after he leaves the Army. Whether this will produce steadier soldiers we cannot say; but it would seem to an unofficial mind, that home comforts, even in such a home as the British Government allots to the married soldier, would do something toward keeping Private Neakes out of the public house, and the concomitant guard-room. During the Crimean war a Turkish officer on being informed of the small number of British soldiers allowed to be married, is stated to have exclaimed, "Allah! only six wives to a company!" What would he say to the contemplated reduction?

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A NEW BIOGRAPHY BY SAMUEL SMILES.

LIFE OF A SCOTTISH NATURALIST: THOMAS EDWARD, Associate of the Linnæan Society. By SAMUEL SMILES, Author of "Lives of the Engineers," "Self Help," "Character," "Thrift," &c. Portrait and Illustrations by GEORGE REID, A. R. S. A. London: JOHN MURRAY.

The remarkable ability of Mr. Smiles as a writer of biographies was never more conspicuous than in this volume. In his Lives of the Engineers he sketches the careers of men who had made themselves famous. Here he gives enduring reputation to one of the humblest and one of the most devoted, persistent, and self-sacrificing investigators into certain departments of natural history, but whose name, were it not for this volume, would in a few years have dropped entirely out of sight, or have been found only in the transactions of one or two of the local societies to which he now and then contributed the results of his researches. For the purpose of practically enforcing the lesson of Self Help, which Mr. Smiles has so faithfully and forcibly inculcated, the life of Thomas Edward is for this very reason especially instructive. To the young there is nearly always as much discouraging as there is encouraging in the lives which are related with the view of inspiring them to effort. They know that the chances are infinitessimally small that they can attain the distinction achieved by those who are cited as examples for them. Here, however, was a man in the very humblest station, absolutely without advantages in early youth, with no knowledge of books, and with no means of procuring them, hold down through life by poverty, compelled to rely upon his trade as a shoemaker for the support of his family, yet who, in spite of obstacles which can only be appreciated by reading the statement made of them by Mr. Smiles, gained a knowledge in several departments of natural history, so extensive and so accurate as to win for himself a position as Associate of the Linnæan Society, and to make himself an authority among those of the highest attainments and of the widest reputation. It is safe to say that not one of those who may read this volume will start under any of the disadvantages, or have to surmount a tithe of the obstacles, which Thomas Edward encountered and surmounted. A fraction of the perseverance and devotion which he displayed would bring to any of those who may imitate his example proportionate rewards. The record of his life, therefore, is not only instructive, but inspiring to a remarkable degree, and if this volume does not make a naturalist of every youth into whose hands it may fall, it will at least teach all readers some most valuable lessons which will be equally applicable in any pursuit or occupation.

In his preface Mr. Smiles, alluding to Dr. Johnson's well-known remark that "there was not a man in the street whose biography might not be made interesting, provided he could narrate something of his experiences of life, his trials, his difficulties, his successes, his failures," tells us that Thomas Edward is his "man in the street." Yet he is far from being an ordinary man. In his work on Self Help, published 18 years ago, Mr. Smiles mentioned him as one of the most extraordinary instances of perseverance in the cause of science that had ever come under his notice, and every reader of the remarkable narrative which Mr. Smiles here relates will confirm the justice of his estimate. To the objection which some may make against writing the life of a man still living, Mr. Smiles replies that Edward has "lived his life and done his work. With most of us Hic jacet is all that remains to be added. If the book had not been written now, it is probable that it never would have been written. But it may be asked, 'Is the life really worth writing?' To this question the public alone can give the answer." That this answer will be an emphatic affirmative there can be no question. Every reader, moreover, will be amused at Mr. Smiles' statement that Edward was alarmed at the idea of what he communicated being put into a book, especially because he thought that it might do his biographer an injury. "Not a copy," he added, by way of warning, "would be bought in Banff," the place where he had himself lived for so many years. Undeterred by this friendly caution, Mr. Smiles persisted in telling the story of Edward's life, which we shall here sketch but very briefly.

Thomas Edward was born at Gosport, Portsmouth, on Christmas Day, 1814. His father was a private in the Fifeshire Militia, and upon the disbandment of the force after the battle of Waterloo, he settled down at Aberdeen, where Thomas was brought up. How the boy became a naturalist he himself says he could never tell, but he certainly had more than the ordinary tendency to like living things. From his birth he was difficult to manage. His mother said that he was the worst child she had ever nursed. When only four months old he leaped from her arms in the vain endeavor to catch some flies buzzing in the window. She clutched him by his long clothes and saved him from falling to the ground. He began to walk when he was scarce 10 months old, and screamed when any one ventured to touch him. Among the most singular of the boy's fancies for animals was a liking which he conceived for a sow which was at all times ferocious, and specially so when she had a litter of pigs. One day he suddenly disappeared, and some gypsies, who were in camp a short distance away, were suspected of having stolen him. A search of their camp resulted in an assault upon the searchers, who were unmercifully pummeled and scratched by the women and girls before they could make their escape. The night passed without the missing boy having been found, and in the morning, as a body of men were starting out for another search, "in rushed the 'pig-wife,' and without the least ceremony threw the child into its mother's lap." "There, woman, there's yer bairn! but for God's sake keep him awa frae yon place, or he may fare war next time." "But whar was he?" they exclaimed in a breath. "Whar wad he be but below Bet and her pigs a' nicht." How the child got in the pen was a mystery, since he could not have climbed over the palings. There was a suspicion—but only a suspicion—that an old sweetheart of the quondam militiaman, whom he had deserted in favor of the woman he married, had maliciously put the child among the pigs from spite against her old lover. But it seemed a miracle that the sow had left him unmolested, and the fact may be accepted as an indication that the animal reciprocated the boy's liking for the brute creation.

Near Aberdeen was a locality known as the Inches, a place of deposit for the town's manure. The heaps were remarkably prolific in beetles, rats, sparrows, and numerous kinds of flies. Then, in the Denburn, at the foot of the Green, was no end of horse-leeches, tadpoles, frogs, and other creatures that abound in fresh or muddy water. The boy used daily to play at these places, and brought home with him his "venemous beasts," as the neighbors called them. As he grew older he extended his enterprise to the capture of horse-leeches, young rats—a nest of which he regarded as a glorious prize—field-mice and house-mice, hedge hogs, moles, birds, and birds' nests of various kinds. The fishes and birds were easily managed, but the neighbors complained sorely of the venomous creatures which strayed into their houses from the boy's naturalist's collection. The horse-leeches crawled up their legs and stuck to them, fetching blood; the puddocks and newts roamed about the floors, and the beetles, moles, and rats sought for holes wherever they could find them. Expostulations, injunctions, and flogging were alike useless, and as a last resort his father tried to keep him at home to guard against the disagreeable consequences of his mania for "collecting." But when left to rock the cradle he would take advantage of his mother's absence and disappear. Once, when sent to his father's workshop with his breakfast he carried that off and improved the opportunity to take a day for birds' nesting. Then his mother, as a punishment for his various misdoings, determined to keep him in the house for at least one day, and tied him firmly one morning to the table leg with a thick wisp of thrums, binding his hands together with a piece of cord as well. No sooner had she gone out on an errand than Tom slipped his bonds, and made his little sister, who had been set to watch him, help him push the table near the grate, when, putting the rope which confined his legs between the ribs, it soon burnt asunder, and he was free. His mother's feet were now heard on the stair. Tom hid himself at the back of the door so that he might rush out as soon as she entered. The door was opened, his mother rushed in screaming, and Tom ran away. The table to which the rope had been attached was on fire, and the house would soon have been in a blaze. In quenching the flame of the rope attached to the boy's leg he had forgotten in his hurry to quench the burning of the rope still attached to the table. Hence the fire. But Tom was now at liberty. He soon got rid of his shackles and spent a glorious day out of doors. He had a warm home-coming at night, "but the less said of that the better," remarks Mr. Smiles.

On another occasion his father tried to keep the boy home by taking away all his clothes and tying around his neck an old petticoat. The youngster gathered that around his waist with a string, and was off as usual, but a day's rambling in this airy attire cost him a cold and a run of fever from which he barely escaped with his life, after several weeks' confinement. With his restoration to health his ruling passion seized him as strongly as ever again, and when he was four or five years old his parents sent him to school to keep him out of harm's way. But the confinement was intolerably irksome. He played truant constantly, and when he did attend managed to smuggle into the school-room a miniature menagerie of insects, reptiles, or birds, thus making himself a source of dread or annoyance to all his school-fellows. They were delighted with his butterflies, but few of them cared to be bitten or stung by his other animals, and to have horse-leeches crawling about them was unendurable. His teacher, Bell Hill, forbade his bringing such "beasts" with him, but if he promised to reform he as often forgot. Finally this incident transpired:

"At last he brought with him an animal of a much larger sort than usual. It was a kae or jackdaw. He used to keep it at home, but it made such a noise that he was sent out with it one morning with strict injunctions not to bring it back again. His mother let it go or give it to somebody else. But he was fond of his kae, and his kae was fond of him. It would follow him about like a dog. He could not part with the kae. So he took it to school with him. But how could he hide it? Little boys' trousers were in those days buttoned over their vests; and Tom's trousers were pretty wide, he thought he could get the kae in there. He got it safely into his breeks before he entered the school. So far so good. But when the school mistress gave the word 'pray,' all the little boys and girls knelt down, turning their backs to Bell. At this movement the kae became reactious. He could not accommodate himself to the altered position. But seeing a little light overhead he made for it. He projected his beak through the opening between the trousers and the vest. He pushed his way upward. Tom squeezed him downward to where he was before. But this only made the kae furious. He struggled, forced his way upward, got his bill through the opening and then his head. The kae immediately began to cre-waw! cre-waw! 'The Lord preserves a'—Fats this noo?' cried Bell, starting to her feet. 'It's Tam Edward again!' shouts the scholars, 'wi' a craw stickin' oot o' his breeks!' Bell went up to him, pulled him up by his collar, dragged him to the door, thrust him out and locked the door after him. Edward never saw Bell Hill again."

A second and a third school were tried with precisely similar results. The boy's love for animals proved so superior to his love of books, which he did not then, of course, appreciate in their applications to his favorite pursuits, that one expulsion followed another, and at last he was put at tobacco spinning "at the wages of 14 pence a week." After two years in an Aberdeen factory he secured employment in another establishment at Grandholm, two miles away, chiefly because there were woods in the neighborhood of the latter place where he could roam during meal hours. He and his brother had to get up at 4 in the morning, and after getting their breakfast walk the two miles to get at the factory by 6, seldom reaching home before 9 in the evening. This was pleasant enough in Summer, but very dreary in Winter. The wages of the boys were at first from three to four shillings a week each, and before they left the mill their industry and application had promoted them, so that they were earning from five to six shillings a week each. "People may say of factories what they please," says Edward, "but I liked this factory. It was a happy time for me while I remained there. It was situated in the centre of a beautiful valley, almost embowered among tall and luxuriant hedges of hawthorn, with watercourses and shadowy trees between, and large woods and plantations beyond. It teemed with nature and natural objects. The woods were easy of access during our meal hours. What lots of nests! What insects, wild flowers, and plants, the like of which I had never seen before! Prominent among the birds was the sedge warbler, which lay concealed in the reedy copses, or by the margin of the mill lades. Oh! how I wondered at the little thing, how it contrived to imitate almost all the other birds I had ever heard, and none to greater perfection than the chirrup of my old and special favorite, the sparrow."

After two years at this factory, Edward was apprenticed to a shoemaker, Begg by name, "a low-class cookney," of so brutal a nature that he now and then, in fits of anger or of drink, cruelly maltreated the boy, who finally determined to serve him no longer, although his parents were threatened with a lawsuit if he left his place. Nothing came from the threat, however, and Edward varied the days of idleness which followed by stealing sixpence from his mother's box and running off to see an uncle at The Kettle nearly a hundred miles from Aberdeen. The trip was in some respects an adventurous one, but Edward accomplished it in safety, walking every step of the way. His uncle was not overjoyed to see him, but gave him eighteenpence when he started for home. Edward got back to Aberdeen with sixpence in his pocket, with which he repaid his mother the fereed loan he had made of her. Then after various unsuccessful attempts to ship as a sailor, he finally settled down again to go on with his trade of shoemaking. At last this became so dull that he tried to ship for America as a "stow-away," but he was frightened from this purpose after he had placed himself in biding on the vessel and just as she was hauling out into the stream.

Edward's next step was to enlist in the Aberdeenshire Militia. This was in 1831, when he was 18 years of age. The chief incident of his military career was his arrest for breaking ranks, while his company was on drill, to catch a butterfly which flitted past. At the intercession of some ladies who saw the occurrence, he was released without punishment. When 20 years of age he left Aberdeen, and went to Banff to work at his trade. There he met with adventurous and beauty—a Huntly lass, whom he loved, courted, married, and took home to the house which he had provided for her. Very fortunately he married wisely, and now he had a home of his own where he could take his specimens without objection. In the Spring of 1838 he began to make a collection of natural objects with some system. He had a short time before bought an old gun for four and sixpence, but it was so rickety that he had to tie the barrel to the stock with a piece of thick wire. He carried his powder in a horn, and measured out his charges with the bowl of a tobacco-pipe. His shot was contained in a brown paper bag. A few insect bottles of middling size, some boxes for containing moths and butterflies, and a botanical book, in which to put his plants, constituted his equipment. How he prosecuted his researches Mr. Smiles tells us as follows:

"As he did not cease shoemaking until 9 at night, nearly all his researches were made after that hour. He had to be back at his work in the morning at 6. His wages were so small that he could not venture to abridge his working hours. It was indispensably necessary for him to husband carefully both his time and his money, so as to make the most of the one and the best of the other. And in order the better to accomplish this, he resolved never to spend a moment idly, or a penny uselessly. On returning home from his work at night his usual course was to equip himself with his insect boxes and bottles, his botanical book and his gun, and to set out with his supper in his hand or stowed away in his pocket. The nearest spring furnished him with sufficient drink. So long as it was light he scoured the country, looking for moths, or beetles, or plants, or birds, or any living thing that came in his way. When he came to mark that he could no longer observe, he dropped down by the side of a bank, or a bush, or a tree, whichever came handiest, and there he dozed or slept until the light returned. Then he got up and again began his observations, which he continued until the time arrived when he had to return to his daily labor. It was a unusual circumstance for him, when he had wandered too far and come upon some more than usually attractive spot, to strip himself of his gear, gun and all, which he would hide in some hole, and thus lightened of everything except his specimens take to his heels and run at the top of his speed in order to be at his work at the proper time. He went out in fine starlit nights, in moonlit and in cold, drizzling nights. Weather never daunted him. When it rained, he would look out for a hole in a bank and thrust himself into it, feet foremost. He kept his head and his gun out, watching and waiting for any casualties that might happen. He knew of a bunch of bushes on the Deeside where both in woods, which he occasionally frequented. They were foxes' or badgers' dens. If any of these gentry were inside when he took up his position they did not venture to disturb him. If they were out they did the same, except on one occasion, when a badger endeavored to dislodge him, showing his teeth. He was obliged to shoot it. He could often see to have shot deer and hares, which came close up to where he was, but they were forbidden animals, and he resisted the temptation. He shot owls and polecats from his ambuscades; numbers of moths came dancing about him, and many of these he secured and boxed, sending them to their long sleep with a little drop of chloroform. When it rained heavily, he drew in his head and his gun, and slept until the first streaks of light appeared on the horizon; and then he came out of his hole and proceeded with his operations."

No place was too bleak for him to stretch himself out at night, and none too uncanny, so long as it gave him better facilities for studying the habits of animals or of adding to his collection. Thus, the church-yard of Boyndie was a favorite resort. Night after night he spent under a tombstone there. And only Sunday put a stop to his labors—for he had all the traditional Scotch reverence for the Sabbath—but he would work until the clock struck 12 Saturday night, and would be out at midnight Sunday again. Mr. Smiles tells us of a fight that Edward had with a polecat which crept into his sleeping place one night. He was determined to secure him without injuring the animal by shooting. This he did, although he was severely scratched and bitten in the contest. Then again, he had a more dignified and thrilling adventure in tumbling down the rocks on the sea-shore, 40 or 50 feet, smashing his gun, but fortunately receiving only severe bruises himself. But constant exposure did not break down his constitution, nor did his mishaps dishearten him. Part of one collection was destroyed by rats; another the cats ruined; still another, which he took to Aberdeen for exhibition, he was compelled to sell for a fraction of its real value to enable him to get his family back to Banff. But when he saw the accumulations of years of labor thus swept away he would quietly commence gathering another collection. All these years he labored under the disadvantage of an education so defective that he could not avail himself to any extent of the researches of others as they had been recorded in books, to enable him to classify and identify his "findings." These he would send off for this purpose to naturalists whose names he had learned, often losing his specimens, but gradually impressing those with whom he kept up a persistent communication that he was an honest, devoted, painstaking, and singularly acute and discriminating observer, who might eventually contribute to their knowledge quite as much as they would add to his. Encouraged by one or two friends living in his neighborhood who were themselves amateur naturalists, Edward finally commenced contributing the results of his investigations and observations to the local press; then some of his articles were communicated to the Zoologist. At last, when his health had broken down under his constant exposures, he began to turn his attention to the study of marine objects, bringing to bear upon the crustacea, zoophytes, mollusks, and fishes the same powers of close discrimination which he had before applied to insects, birds, and beasts. Finally he made a catalogue of the fauna of Banff, which Mr. Smiles adds as an appendix to this biography, and which illustrates more forcibly than anything else can do the vast advance made by this naturalist shoe-maker, and the substantial contributions to the knowledge of the natural history of his neighborhood which are to be credited to his persistent industry. An election in 1866 as one of the thirty Fellows of the Linnæan Society was followed by his admission to membership in the Aberdeen Natural History Society, and by the bestowal of the diploma of the Glasgow Natural History Society, but in spite of these honors, Edward still "sticks to his last," and while the frontispiece in this volume is a most masterly etching of his rugged face by Rajon, the last picture in the book shows him at work upon his shoemaker's bench. Beneath is the expressive legend, "And here I am still." There he will in all probability end his days, since as he himself quaintly remarked to his biographer, instead of his getting the better of the lapstone and leather, they are sure very soon to get the better of him.

Messrs. Harper & Brothers, we see it announced, already have this singularly interesting biography in press, and it will doubtless shortly appear, uniform with the other works of Samuel Smiles which they issue. Meanwhile, those who are impatient to read it may procure the English edition of Messrs. Scribner, Welford & Armstrong.

SUNSHINE IN THE SOUL. Poems selected by the Editor of Quiet Hours. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS. 1877.

Another slender book for the pocket, published by the same Boston firm, addresses a religious and reflective audience. The selections are in keeping with a quiet, firm belief in God; they breathe a deep spirit of calm and rest. One feels a gentle influence, like the twilight of a peaceful day, and all because the editor has known how to move through the rich field of religious poetry, taking a whole flower here and only a bud there. Many are given in fragments only. There is a noticeable number of German names among the elected, some of them very famous; but to our own mind the most charming of these little poems are, singularly enough, those stated to be anonymous. "He Knoweth," "April," "Work and Rest," "Expectation" are all full of self-abnegation,

THE VOTE OF THE SOUTH.

HOW TILDEN OBTAINED HIS POPULAR MAJORITY.

THREE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-THREE THOUSAND REPUBLICAN VOTES SUPPRESSED—THE WORK OF THE COTTON STATES DEMOCRATS—STARTLING STATISTICS—WHAT THE REPUBLICANS HAVE GAINED IN FOUR YEARS—THE CONGRESSIONAL REPRESENTATION FROM THE SOUTH—CAN THE RIGHTS OF THE FREEDMEN BE PROTECTED—A QUESTION WHICH MUST SOON BE ANSWERED.

From a Special Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Jan. 10, 1877.

It is one of the cardinal principles of a Democratic politician never to recede from a position which he has once taken. This statement is true of all the species, and is as applicable to the fire-eating bull-dozing leaders of the Red River parishes of Louisiana as to the equally lawless and ignorant ruffians who control the party machinery in the Fourth and Sixth Wards of the City of New-York. The arguments of reason and logic have no weight with men of this class, and, of course, it would be waste of time to attempt to convince them of the absurdity of certain statements regarding the recent election which are still persisted in by a number of Democratic newspapers. They have been told, for instance, that the popular majority for Mr. Tilden was "nearly half a million," and they will probably never be convinced of the fact that even "on the face of the returns," to use Mr. Hewitt's pet expression, this so-called majority was only 241,461. As this is the case, it would be worse than useless to attempt to demonstrate to the partisans in questions that over 300,000 Republican votes were suppressed in the cotton States, and that it was by the suppression of those votes that Mr. Tilden obtained his much-boasted popular majority. Such is the fact, however, as can easily be proved to the satisfaction of all fair-minded and impartial men.

SUGGESTIVE FIGURES.

In 1872 Alabama gave the Republican nominee for President a majority of 10,825 votes; Florida gave a Republican majority of 2,336, in Louisiana the Republican majority was 14,634, in Mississippi 34,887, in North Carolina 24,675, and in South Carolina 49,587. This year, however, all these States are claimed by the Democrats. They are claimed by them in spite of the fact that the Republican vote cast at the last election in the 22 Northern States exceeded the vote cast for Grant in 1872 by 420,889!—a net Republican gain in four years of 16 7-10 per cent. In other words, the Republican gain in the 22 free States has been 16 7-10 per cent., while in the slave States the Republican loss has been over 100 per cent! Why is there this difference between the two sections? How can it be accounted for, unless upon the theory that by some means the Republican vote in the cotton States was suppressed and never reached the ballot-box? Where are the Republican majorities of the South? What has been done with the Republican voters of that section? These are questions which sooner or later must be answered. It is useless for Mr. Tilden, or Senator Randolph or Mr. Hewitt, or any of their friends, to declare that the negroes wanted a change and have gone over to the Democratic Party. Such a statement, coming from even more trustworthy and respectable sources, could only be regarded as ridiculous. No man who knows anything about the South can believe such stories, for every man who has traveled or lived in the section named is well aware that Republicanism is the freedmen's religion. The negroes almost to a man are Republican, particularly on questions of national importance. They are quite as ignorant as are the Irish Democrats of New-York and other large cities, and it is equally hard—indeed it is even more difficult—to turn them from the party to which they have given their allegiance. If left to themselves, if allowed to exercise the rights of citizenship as freely and as fearlessly as do their white neighbors, 99 out of every 100 of them would vote the Republican ticket. I do not make this statement at random, but after careful observation and investigation. During the recent political campaign in South Carolina and Louisiana, for instance, it was frequently asserted by Gen. Wade Hampton, Gary, Butler, McEnery, and others, that the colored men were attending their meetings and joining their clubs by thousands; but no man in South Carolina or Louisiana ever saw more than a score or so of negroes at a Democratic meeting or marching in a Democratic procession. It was stated by the rifle club organs in all parts of the South that 500 colored men attended the great Hampton meeting held in Aiken. I was at that meeting. By actual count there were just 18 black voters present in the Hampton uniform, and they were the old body-servants who traveled over the State with the Democratic speakers and appeared at all their meetings. But without at present going further into this part of the subject, it may be well to inquire why the negroes are Republicans, and what inducements the Democrats offer them to change their politics. The questions are easily answered.

WHY THE COLORED MEN ARE REPUBLICANS.

In the first place, the freedmen joined the Republican Party because it was in the name and by the efforts of that party that they obtained their freedom and the right to vote at all. They have continued to act with the Republican organization for very much the same reasons which bind the Irish voters to the Democracy. They are recognized by the Republican Party; it extends to them the right hand of fellowship; by it men of their own race, their own color, are nominated and elected to important and representative public offices, and just as the priests teach the Irish voters to be Democrats, so they are taught by their spiritual advisers to be Republicans. On the other hand, the negroes have absolutely nothing to hope for from the Democrats. They offer them no political representation, allow them to take no part in their nominating conventions and caucuses, give them no places on their tickets, permit them to have no share in the management and control of State or local affairs, prevent them from serving on juries, and to crown all, threaten them with death if they do not give up politics or vote the Democratic ticket. The negroes would be more or less than human if they were long in deciding which of the two political parties they would act with. They are ignorant men, it is true, but their political instinct is remarkably acute, and, of course, they vote with the party that recognizes and gives them power and place. This fact is so obvious as to need no further discussion. It only goes to prove that by some means the Democrats have overcome, got rid of, and suppressed the majorities which the Southern States, at a fair, free, and full election, would give the Republican Party. How these majorities were overcome—how the black vote was suppressed—is already known to the reading public, but the people of the North have not yet been made familiar with the extent of the vote which has been thus suppressed and which has gone to produce Mr. Tilden's "great popular majority." The following table will throw some light upon the subject. It has been prepared with care from official sources and can be relied upon as correct. It is a fair estimate of the suppressed Republican votes in the States named, including, of course, the votes which the negroes were forced to cast for the Democratic nominee:

Arkansas	45,000	Mississippi	75,000
Alabama	35,000	North Carolina	20,000
Georgia	70,000	South Carolina	18,000
Louisiana	20,000	Texas	40,000
Total			323,000

These 323,000 voters lived in the States named when the last census was taken. They voted the Republican ticket in 1872 and at previous elections. They are black men, and they have not emigrated. If allowed to vote as they desired, they would have cast their ballots for Hayes and Wheeler, but they did not vote. If there was no intimidation—no violence in the cotton States—what has become of them? Where have they gone? Who has suppressed their votes? Let the Democrats of the South answer these questions and it is possible that their brethren in the North will not boast so loudly about "the popular majority for Tilden and reform."

The Democrats have recently been engaged in a very determined effort to overthrow the testimony given by Republican witnesses before the Louisiana Returning Board, but they have not met with much success. They have not been able to explain why it was that in the Parish of East Feliciana, where there are 1,740 registered Republican voters, not one Republican ballot was cast at the last election; they have not been able to explain what has become of the Republican majorities in Morehouse and in "bloody Baton Rouge;" they have not been able to bring to life, or to explain away the murders of Pinkston, Dinkgrave, Meyers, Moore, Logwood, and the hundred other unfortunate men who fell victims to their thirst for the success of "Tilden and Reform." Having failed in Louisiana, perhaps they will next turn their attention to Mississippi. If they do, their first duty should be to tell the public by what means they carried the much-talked-of Sixth Congressional District in that State.

Although there has been a great deal written about this district, all the startling facts regarding it are not generally known. It was established after the Democrats came into power, with the understanding that it was to contain all the heavy black counties, and that so relieved of the bulk of the Republican vote, all the other districts in the State could be carried by the Democrats. In accordance with this plan, the Sixth District was made of the counties of Coahoma, Adams, Bolivar, Wilkinson, Tunica, Washington, Issaquena, Warren, Claiborne, and Jefferson, every one of which contains an overwhelming black Republican majority. For instance, in Warren County the negroes outnumber the whites seven to one. Again, in Issaquena County there are only 741 whites—men, women and children. The black population is 6,146, or nearly ten to one. In the entire district there are 100,509 blacks and 30,650 whites, and about 100 Republicans to 30 Democrats; but at the election held on the 7th of November last the Democrats carried the district by a majority of 4,000! If there was no intimidation, no violence, no riot, no tumult, no fraud—what became of the Republican votes? Turning to Georgia, very much the same question can be asked. In that State, according to a census made under the supervision and by the direction of the Democrats themselves, there are 110,000 colored voters. Yet, at the last election, only 44,000 of them cast their votes. What became of the remaining 76,000? If there was no intimidation, no violence, no fraud—how were these votes suppressed? If it were not for these negro votes Georgia would have only five, instead of nine Congressmen, as at present. The extra four were apportioned to the State in order that these 110,000 black men may be properly represented in the national Legislature. Yet they have absolutely no representation either in the Senate or the House of Representatives, for every man in the Georgia delegation is a Democrat, and with one exception they were all "rebels to the core!" The same condition of things exists in Mississippi. In that State the white population is not so great as the entire population of the City of Brooklyn, and still the white people of Mississippi are to be represented in the next Congress by six Democratic members of the lower house and two United States Senators. These are plain facts, which cannot be denied or disputed, and sooner or later the American people will be called upon to decide whether or not such a state of things should be allowed to exist in what has been called the freest country in the world. Before making a decision, they should remember that 100 years ago their forefathers went to war because they were taxed without representation.

HARVARD COLLEGE.

INTERESTING EXTRACTS FROM THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT.

President Hill, of Harvard College, submitted his annual report at the meeting of the Board of Overseers, on Wednesday. Following are extracts:

In the four years from 1873 to 1876 inclusive, 955 persons were admitted to the college, while at the present moment there are only 821 undergraduates. The loss suffered in three years is, therefore, 14 per cent. The number of persons admitted in 1870, 1871, and 1872 was 637, while the number graduated in 1874, 1875, and 1876 was 422. The loss of numbers between entrance and graduation was, therefore, 33⅓ per cent. in these three cases. The proportion of candidates admitted without conditions has increased during these seven years, while the proportion of rejections has not increased. The number of undergraduates at the beginning of the year was 776, being an increase of 60 over the number at the beginning of the preceding year; 148 were Seniors, 194 were Juniors, 182 were Sophomores, and 252 were Freshmen. Five Seniors, 7 Juniors, 9 Sophomores, and 10 Freshmen withdrew from the college in the course of the year, and 1 Sophomore and 1 Junior died. Of the withdrawals 13 were in consequence of ill-health, 8 were the result of an unprofitable use of time and opportunities, and 10 were caused by changes of plan on the part of the student or by other circumstances. Of the whole number withdrawn 8 have returned to college and joined the last class on admission examination in and after September, 1877, will diminish the number of withdrawals of the latter kind. The erection of the new building provided for by the subscription of 1874-5 is still delayed.

The current expenses of the Divinity School for 1875-6 exceeded its receipts by $4,484 93. The school has had a deficit three years out of the four since the Boston fire in 1872; so that its unrestricted fund has been reduced by $5,550 42 between Sept. 1, 1872, and Aug. 31, 1876. The corporation was therefore very glad to receive $7,500 in December, 1875, from the Trustees under the will of the late Joseph Hurlbut of Boston, for the general uses of the school, with the assurance that a like sum would probably be paid to the corporation from the estate at a later day for the same uses. As the tuition fees from students in theology are small in amount, the Professorships in this department of the university urgently need additional endowment, not a single one of the four Professorships being adequately endowed.

The examinations for women, first held in 1874, have proved useful, and will hereafter be a regular part of the work of the university.

The dining hall was carried on very successfully during the first half of 1875-6; during the second half the number of members of the association fell off considerably, and the average price of board per week rose to $5. The average number of members during the year was 501, against 470 in 1874-5; and the average price per week $4 74⅔, against $4 52 in 1874-5. The increase of price was caused partly by an improvement in the Friday and Sunday dinner, ordered by the Board of Directors, and partly by the change in the hours of meals which went into effect in September, 1875. Luncheon and a late dinner proved more expensive than a mid-day dinner and supper. In spite of this drawback, the change in the hours of meals is very generally regarded as a great improvement in the daily routine of the university. The heavy debt of the Dining Hall Association (more than $45,000 on Sept. 1, 1876) is a serious hindrance to its prosperity; and it is much to be wished that means could be provided to remove the encumbrance.

Custom sanctions the recapitulation of the most pressing needs of the university in the annual report. The need of a new hall to contain lecture rooms for the college is more urgent than ever, although three rooms in Holyoke House, never intended for such a use, have been converted into recitation rooms. At least 16 new lecture rooms are imperatively demanded. For the Divinity School, a small, detached, fire-proof building is needed for the safe keeping of the valuable theological library, as has been said in many previous reports. A new gymnasium, of at least three times the capacity of the present building, would be of great benefit to the whole body of officers and students of the university resident in Cambridge. Among the pressing wants of the college is that of means to supply the new department of fine arts with the apparatus required for the most efficient instruction. In addition to a select collection of representations of the most important works of art, it is also greatly to be desired that the college should possess some original specimens of works of the minor arts; for example, of ancient pottery and bronze, of mediæval enamel and carvings, in which the spirit and quality of greater works are reproduced upon a small scale. A collection of this sort would be of value, not only as illustrating the history and processes of the arts, but as affording important illustration of civil and literary history. Such collections as are needed for the historical study of the fine arts would be of equal value for the instruction in drawing. The university has great collections in every department of natural history, in chemistry, and in physics, but, with the exception of the Department of Engravings, it has yet to make its art collections. Finally, the university needs endowed Professorships. Of its 57 Professorships already established, only 26 are even partially endowed, and only one—the Sturgis-Hooper Professorship of Geology—is completely endowed. No form of benefaction would be more welcome in the present condition of the university than the endowment of a professorship already established, or of a new one. Three new Professorships may be mentioned, the usefulness of which to the university and community can require no argument, namely, a Professorship of Jurisprudence, a Professorship of Ecclesiastical History, and a Professorship of Hygiene, or Preventive Medicine. These three subjects are all of growing importance, and each should have the undivided attention of a competent and devoted Professor. For the completion and immediate endowment of a Professorship the considerable sum of $70,000 is required, but a much less sum will of course suffice, if time be taken for accumulation before the expenditure of income be allowed, or if a certain percentage of the income be accumulated each year upon the principal until the required capital be made up.

THE TREASURER'S STATEMENT.

The Treasurer of the college submits the annual statement of the financial affairs of the university for the year ending Aug. 31, 1876, in the usual form. The funds of the college invested make a total of $3,406,653 43, the income of which is $234,814 89. The following table shows the expenditures in the departments dependent upon the college proper, and the income available for these expenditures:

University salaries and expenses		$33,486 79
College expenses		29,737 29
Library salaries and expenses (not books)		16,464 91
Gymnasium salaries and expenses		1,801 67
College salaries		122,524 42
Repairs to college buildings not valued on Treasurer's books		13,796 43—$218,011 51
To meet the above there is:
Interest on funds for University salaries and expenses	$26,677 41
College expenses	2,600 00
Library	1,200 00
College salaries	31,247 69
Gymnasium and repairs on college buildings	none.
Cash received from undergraduates	148,886 36
Reserved income of last year	2,397 72
Sundry cash receipts	4,303 12—$217,362 30
Balance charged to suspense account, to be paid out of next year's income		$649 21

A RECTOR DEFIES HIS BISHOP.

HE CALLS UPON HIS PEOPLE TO "SUFFER FOR TRUTH'S SAKE."

From the London Telegraph, Dec. 26.

It was expected, in consequence of Rev. Arthur Tooth, Vicar of St. James', Hatcham, having refused to allow Rev. Canon Gee, who was licensed by the Bishop of Rochester, to perform divine service in that church last Sunday, that yesterday being Christmas Day the Bishop would have come down from Rochester and insisted upon conducting it. In such an event it was stated that neither the Vicar nor church wardens had come to any definite decision, but it was felt by a large portion of the congregation that it would be only courtesy to the Bishop to allow him to proceed. As on Sunday morning, the Vicar, clergy, church wardens, and many of the male portion of the congregation were again on the alert, expecting either the Bishop or some new message from him; but no one came, and at 11 o'clock the church was densely crowded, and morning service commenced. There was a procession more elaborate than any which has been yet witnessed at St. James'. First came two cross-bearers, then acolytes and choristers; and at some points there were six banners carried in the procession. One of these was a white moire antique banner edged with blue, in the centre having what might be called a monogram of the Virgin Mary, and on the top the words embroidered "Santa Dei Genitrix." Another banner represented the chalice and the host, as both are known in the Roman Catholic Church, and the other banners bore portraits of the Saviour and the Virgin Mary. The Vicar wore a chasuble of white shot silk, the color being what is worn upon Christmas Day in the Roman Church as an emblem of rejoicing. On this occasion nearly all the acolytes wore the scarlet cap of a Roman Catholic Cardinal. After the Creed, Mr. Tooth divested himself of his chasuble at the "altar," and ascended the pulpit, the main feature of his discourse being the special characteristic of the Virgin Mary, which he said was her self-restraint, the text being "Mary kept all these things and pondered them in her heart." From that great characteristic of the Blessed Virgin Mary they should all, he said, learn a great lesson in this season of their troubles, and that lesson was not to be cast down and disheartened by what people said against them. Then the communion was proceeded with, a novel feature in it being that, at the consecration and elevation of the sacramental elements, nine acolytes came out from the sacristy to the steps of the altar, and at the elevation lifted high as they could hold them immense wax candles, bells at the same time ringing, and the whole chancel clouded with incense. The altar itself was lighted by six wax candles, and on it was a profusion of flowers. At the close of the service Mr. Tooth turned his face to the congregation and gave them his benediction, making the sign of the cross after the manner in which it is done in the Roman Catholic churches. A great deal of Gregorian music was used during the service. Speculation is rife as to what will be the next step of the Bishop of Rochester. The declaration of Mr. Tooth, made on Advent Sunday last, was conspicuously placed upon the doors and in other parts of the church, and from it are appended the following extracts:

"And further, in full reliance upon the Christian intelligence of my people, and upon their loving readiness to suffer for the truth's sake, I hereby call upon them to have no ministration in the public congregation nor any discharge among them of the office and duty of a priest, either in the immediate present or in the future, other than my own, or of those acting in my behalf under my authority. I make this call upon my people as a lawfully and canonically instituted priest of this parish, not inhibited therein nor deprived thereof by any lawful and canonical authority, and I implore them, and, if need be, require and charge them, to bear steadfastly in mind that all ministrations and discharge other than my own are schismatical, and are an invasion and robbery of the rights of the Church of England."

SOCIAL DANGER IN RUSSIA.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

In order to have the equality which is the basis of all modern finance you must look solely to what a man has, not to the way in which he got it. Now, as regards Russian taxation, the fact remains, however it may be explained, that the Russian peasant pays very heavily on his land, the Russian noble or member of the Imperial family goes almost scot free. This would have been sure to grow in time into a scandal, even if Russian finance had remained what it was before the Crimean war. But during the reign of the present Emperor Russia has become a largely borrowing country. She has pledged her credit and honor to pay a vast interest on a great public debt. It has become an object of the first importance to her to show a handsome and ever-increasing budget of receipts, and consequently all taxation is becoming heavier and heavier. With this augmentation of burdens all disproportions in rate of contribution to the taxes are becoming more and more aggravated in their consequences; and thus the liability of the Russian peasant to pay almost exclusively for the extravagance of his Government through the imposts on his liquor and the imposts on his land, is becoming a public evil and danger of the very first magnitude. It will be easily understood with what disgust and dismay the semi-judging and highly-instructed classes in Russia look on the impulses, springing, from vanity,

THE STREETS TO BE CLEANED.

SIX HUNDRED MEN TO BE SET TO WORK THIS MORNING ON BROADWAY AND OTHER THOROUGHFARES—COMPLAINTS IN REFERENCE TO THE NON-REMOVAL OF ASHES AND GARBAGE.

Commissioner Nichols, Chairman of the Committee on Street-cleaning, and Capt. Gunner, Inspector of Street-cleaning, were engaged yesterday in selecting men and carts to be employed in the work of removing the accumulations of snow and ice from several of the principal streets. The private office of Mr. Nichols was throughout the forenoon besieged by throngs of Democratic politicians seeking tickets for their constituents, and large numbers of unemployed working men made personal application for work. Six hundred of them were engaged, and ordered to report to Capt. Gunner at 6 A. M. this morning at Broadway and Fourteenth street. After they are divided into gangs and assigned to sections bounded by certain streets, the workmen, armed with the necessary picks and shovels, will at once proceed to clean Broadway from Union square to the Battery. Gangs of them will also be assigned to clean Park row and Printing-house square. Five hundred carts will be employed in the work of removing the snow and dumping it into the rivers from piers and bulkheads designated for that purpose. To-morrow morning the work will be continued in Wall, Fulton, Nassau, Chambers, and other streets in the lower portion of the City, and and in the course of a week it is hoped that the Street-cleaning Bureau will be able to do something towards freeing the principal avenues of the accumulation of snow and mud which have so long been an eyesore to the public. A quarter of the town which especially requires attention is the East-side district, bounded by First avenue and the East River. In Avenues A, B, and C not a particle of work has been done towards removing the monstrous piles of rubbish with which the streets are choked, and in case a heavy thaw sets in the tenement-house population of the vicinity will suffer greatly. The piles of mingled snow, ashes, and garbage, which line many of the streets in this neighborhood, have been frozen so stiff that pick-axes will be required to remove them. The same is true of the snow and dirt in Broadway and the adjacent streets. The public squares are in a miserable state, great piles of ice and snow lining the walks, while on the borders the dirt and sweepings from the street have accumulated in great quantities. Both Union and Madison squares, particularly the former, require a thorough cleansing in this respect.

Another matter in which the Police Commissioners have displayed their usual obstinacy and negligence is the removal of ashes and garbage. In many parts of the City the ash-carts have not made their rounds for more than a week, and barrels full of ashes and refuse matter encumber the sidewalks. In the lower part of the City this is especially noticeable. In Fulton street, between Nassau and William, the ashmen have not been around for three days. On the corner of Fulton and Gold streets, yesterday there were no fewer than nine barrels and cans filled with ashes, the accumulations of a single restaurant in the basement. The proprietor said that the ash carts had not called for a week, and that he had as much more ashes in his house, where he was forced to stow it, because he had no more receptacles for it in the street. In the lower part of Ann street the houses were lined on both sides with barrels and boxes crammed to overflowing with the refuse of the stoves and furnaces in them. The inhabitants stated that ash carts had not been out for 10 days. Over-ripe garbage mingled with ashes and garbage have heretofore been collected daily, they are now only called for twice, or at most, three times a week. Hundreds of householders have complained to the authorities and to the press, but so far without effect. Capt. Gunner admitted yesterday that complaints on this score had been very frequent during the last few weeks, but he thought that they had grown less of late. The cause of the trouble was the lack of proper dumping places along the river, but the department had recently secured several new dumps, and hereafter he thought there would be no difficulty in removing the ashes regularly.

All day yesterday the entire force of the bureau was employed in gathering up the surplus ashes and garbage, and in dumping them aboard the scows on the East and North Rivers. The work was continued up to a late hour last night, when the men knocked off for a rest preparatory to attacking Broadway in the morning. No trouble is anticipated in dealing with the frozen snow and ice, and the authorities of the bureau admit that it could have been handled much more easily and cheaply immediately after the storm. The news that the long-deferred cleaning of Broadway was to commence to-day was favorably received by the business community, although much indignation is still felt at the inexcusable delay of the Police Commissioners.

EIGHTEENTH DISTRICT REPUBLICANS.

At a regular meeting of the Eighteenth Assembly District Republican Association, held on Friday evening at their head-quarters, No. 453 Fourth avenue, considerable interest was manifested, it being the first meeting of the year 1877. The meeting was largely attended. The reports of committees were read and acted upon, showing a steady increase in the Republican vote of the district since 1863, when it scarcely exceeded 1,600 votes, while at the last election there were polled for the National and State tickets nearly 3,000. Mr. Christopher Pullman, who ran for Assembly at the last election, received 3,353 votes, and would have been elected if he had been earlier in the field. An interesting feature of the meeting was the election of Chairman of the Executive Committee for the present year. The Executive Committee of the district consists of 150 members, and is selected from the prominent citizens of the district, among whom are Chester A. Arthur, Zophar Mills, A. P. Man, Nathaniel Coudrey, Fred H. Man, O. P. C. Billings, Henry E. Howland, M. P. Clark, Horace Ruggles, David Milliken, Peter Starr, Enoch L. Fancher, C. M. Soper, Robert C. Livingston, Isaac H. Bailey, John R. Lawrence, Charles E. Bruce, Alfred R. Whitney, Christopher Pullman, and a host of others. During the last four years Mr. John R. Lawrence has been the presiding officer of the Executive Committee, and has won for himself an enviable record for ability, integrity, and urbanity, which has led the above-named gentlemen to nominate him for the fifth time as Chairman of the Committee, to which office he was again unanimously elected. On motion, resolutions were adopted endorsing THE NEW-YORK TIMES for the effective work performed by it during the last campaign, and earnestly recommending it to their Republican friends throughout the country. The officers for the year 1877 are as follows: President, Hon. Bernard Biglin; First Vice President, James M. Turner; Second Vice President, Stephen H. Olin; Treasurer, Thomas B. Odell; Secretary, John Pullman, Sr.

THE MURDER OF OFFICER BROCK.

A few days ago counsel for Oschwald and Ryan, who are under sentence of death for the murder of Officer Brock, in Newark, N. J., received an anonymous letter, in which the writer declared that he and another had killed the officer, and that both Oschwald and Ryan are innocent of the crime. Among other things, he stated that the revolver with which the shooting had been done, wrapped up in a silk handkerchief, had been thrown into a well on the premises of Isaac Blanchard, No. 86 Brunswick street, Newark. The water was drawn from the well Friday, and a revolver, wrapped in a silk handkerchief, was discovered. The bullet taken from Brock's body was found on examination to be the same as those with which the revolver was loaded. There was no rust upon the weapon, however, and its appearance indicated that it had not been in the water longer than two weeks. Isaac Blanchard, on whose premises the revolver was found, first informed the Police of the murder, and is father of one of the principal witnesses for the prosecution. The communication states, too, that a me one thought to be Brock knocked at the door of Mr. Bedell's house on the morning of the shooting, shouting to Mr. Bedell that burglars were in the house. This statement is in conflict with the evidence in the case, which showed that Brock knew of the absence of the Bedell family from town. The Court of Pardons, before whom the application of the doomed men for commutation of sentence is pending, will be asked to take the letter into consideration.

SHOOTING AFFRAY IN A SYNAGOGUE.

Louis Davis, of No. 50 Ludlow street, and Henry Bernstein, of 98 Orchard street, are both peddlers, and both members of a Jewish synagogue situated at No. 70 East Broadway. For some time past Davis and Bernstein have been on bad terms owing to a financial disagreement. They both attended the usual Saturday evening service at the synagogue and at the conclusion of the services they met and renewed the old quarrel. An unseemly wrangle ensued, and before the bystanders could interfere to prevent it blows were exchanged. Bernstein drew a small revolver from his breast and fired at his antagonist. The bullet took effect in the left breast of Davis, causing a severe though not dangerous wound. Bernstein was held until the arrival of an officer, who took him to the Madison street Police Station, where he was locked up. Davis was also taken to the station-house, where he was attended by Police Surgeon Dexter. Subsequently his friends took him to his home.

IMPROVING THE MERCHANT MARINE

ENCOURAGEMENT FOR THE SAILOR-BOY GRADUATES OF THE NAUTICAL SCHOOL — RECOMMENDATION OF SHIP-OWNERS.

The Nautical School on board the ship St. Mary's, which was established two years ago by the Board of Education for the purpose of educating worthy young men who were desirous of following a maritime life, has been conducted with a degree of care and success that has won for it the commendation of the Committee on Nautical School of the Chamber of Commerce, which body has, from the first, manifested a lively interest in the project. A large proportion of the boys entered on the roll of scholars have developed a positive aptitude for a seafaring life, and at the examination held on Nov. 17, 58 of the 125 scholars, whose average age was 19, received certificates as graduates, and are now ready for sea service. The main object of this movement—the elevation of the standard of the American sailor—is now forcibly presented, and it only remains for ship-owners to perform their part toward making the school a practical success, by furnishing places on vessels under their control for one or more of these young men. With such encouragement, the school can continue its good work, and supply with well-trained seamen those who may hereafter require them. Should the experiment of the Nautical School succeed here, it is believed that the Cities of Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and San Francisco will follow the example of New-York, and establish schools of their own similar in character and purpose, and in this way the merchant marine will gradually become possessed of a class of sailors trained in these schools and thoroughly fitted for the service which they have chosen. The desire on the part of the Chamber of Commerce Committee is to obtain for these boys berths on board ships sailing on long voyages, and with this idea they have addressed the shipowners, and have received in reply to their invitation the approval of more than 50 owners and Presidents of leading insurance companies. Among the number are Charles H. Marshall & Co., Snow & Burgess, Boyd & Hincken, James E. Ward & Co., Sutton & Co., Salter & Livermore, C. & R. Poillon, James W. Elwell & Co., Chase, Talbot & Co., Grinnell, Minturn & Co., C. H. Mallory & Co., J. D. Jones, President Atlantic Insurance Company; Henry Ogden, President Ancient Insurance Company; I. P. Paulison, President Sun Insurance Company; A. G. Montgomery, Vice President Mercantile Insurance Company; F. S. Lathrop, President Union Insurance Company; John H. Lyell, New-York Insurance Company, and Daniel D. Smith, President Commercial Insurance Company. Information regarding the boys can be obtained from Capt. R. L. Phythian, School-ship St. Mary's, foot of East Twenty-third street; Mr. George Wilson, Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, or of Mr. John C. Smith, Maritime Exchange, No. 66 Beaver street.

BONELESS CODFISH.

COMBINATION OF THE FISH TRADE TO TEST AN ALLEGED INVALID PATENT.

For some months past the wholesale fish-dealers of this City have complained of the imposition of a tax upon their business, levied by authority of an alleged patent held by Elisha Crowell, said to entitle him to a royalty upon all cod or other fish deprived of skin and bones and packed in boxes, kegs, or barrels, for transportation. Stamps were issued by Crowell, which were sold at prices varying from one-eighth to a quarter of a cent a pound of prepared fish, and these were affixed to the boxes sent out by the trade. Not doubting at first that the claim of Crowell could be maintained, his demands were complied with. Afterward, when it seemed upon inquiry to be an invalid claim, Mr. A. E. Austin, of No. 200 Chambers street, refused to buy the royalty stamps, and sold fish prepared in his establishment without them. A suit was instituted by Crowell and an answer has been filed by Mr. Austin, but for some reason the return has not been pressed. The trade have determined to ascertain whether the alleged patent is truly what its holder claims that it is. It has been understood among the fish-dealers that Mr. Crowell has been convinced that he cannot make good his claim. A meeting of the trade was held yesterday morning in the office of Mr. John D. Griffen, No. 55 Cortlandt street, which was attended by representatives of a number of firms in the fish and provision trades. The imposition of the obnoxious tax was said by some of those present seriously to interfere with their business, damaging some of them to the extent of $1,000 in the year. It was said to be the practice of dealers all over the country to sell on hand few kinds fish for customers, and no one had ever dreamed that this treatment of fish could be monopolized by any individual. Mr. James R. Bartholomew presided at the meeting, in which the grievance was discussed at some length. A preamble setting forth the complaints against Crowell was read, which expressed the opinion that the dealers in fish do not consider the claim made by him valid either in law or justice, and that it is inflicting a great injury on the trade and the consumer, and it was resolved that the fish and provision dealers of New-York and elsewhere who are interested in the result of the suit against Mr. A. E. Austin be requested to lend their aid and co-operation to bring the suit to a prompt and satisfactory conclusion. It was also resolved that in consideration of Mr. A. E. Austin continuing his suit the dealers would agree to contribute $25 per firm toward defraying the current expenses of the suit. A committee consisting of Mr. Charles F. Matledge, Mr. John D. Griffen, Mr. W. H. Roberts, Mr. Samuel S. Ferris, and Mr. James R. Bartholomew were appointed to ask the co-operation of the trade. It was stated that the fish trade East who have long been preparing their fish in the manner described, will heartily co-operate to resist the claim of Crowell, and that individual dealers have expressed their willingness to contribute funds to carry on the matter in the courts. It was said during the meeting that Mr. Crowell has been in the habit of giving his stamps to dealers who prepared the fish according to his alleged patent, and the inquiry was humorously raised whether, if this patent were good, it would not be possible to compel consumers to eat their codfish entire—skin, bones, and flus.

A DISREPUTABLE DEN BROKEN UP.

Considerable excitement was created in Jersey City last night by the Police making a descent on a disreputable variety show on Newark avenue, known as the Chrysal. The place has long been noted as the resort of the vilest of persons of both sexes and all colors, and more than half the cases brought to the Police Courts originate there. At about 9 o'clock last night Capt. Dickson, the head of the First Precinct force, marched 20 trusty men from the precinct to the place and surrounded it. Two of the officers mounted to the roof of the building to cut off all possibility of escape there, while the rest of the force, entering from the front and rear, surprised the performers in the rear part of the hall. One hundred and forty-one persons were thus captured. Among them were the actresses, the "orchestra," and three actors. Two of the prisoners ascended to the roof upon the first intimations of danger, but they were arrested by the officers on duty there, and taken to the Police Station. The arrested parties were marched in squads of three each to the Police Station, which is less than a block distant. Huber, the proprietor, on reaching the station-house, took advantage of the confusion prevailing there and suddenly disappeared. He had gone less than a block, when he was recaptured and locked up. Very many of the prisoners were strangers in the city, and most of them were beardless youth. Justice Keese was at once sent for, and as many of the prisoners as could procure bondsmen for their appearance in court to-morrow morning were admitted to bail in $50 each. The rest, few in number, were locked up. The names of the arrested actors are Daniel Gilligan, "Bud Grandeur," and William Roselle, the latter being an impersonator of female characters. The actresses taken into custody were Emma Moore, Georgie Desmoud, a personator of male characters, and Emma Weston, a ballet-dancer. Joseph Addier and Adolph Young, who were arrested, supplied the music for the audience. Huber was requsted to furnish bonds in $1,000 for his appearance for trial, and the actors, actresses, and musicians $500 each.

FINDING A LOST HUSBAND.

Yesterday afternoon a matronly-looking woman walked up to Keeper Cunningham's desk at the Tombs and inquired of that official if he could give her any information about her husband. She said his name was John Ward, and he lived at High Bridge. He left home on Monday last to go to the Eye and Ear Infirmary to have one of his eyes treated. Since that time she could learn nothing of his whereabouts, though she had advertised in several of the daily papers. Officer Cunningham told the inquirer that her husband had been "treating" himself, and as a consequence he had been furnished with quarters in the Tombs, and that he had one more day to remain in confinement. The lady said she would give $50 to have him released. The keeper told her that $1 would secure his release. The money was paid, and her husband was soon brought from his place of confinement. His disreputable plight caused Mrs. Ward to recoil with horror, and no explanations the poor man could make would at all appease her. She began to pummel her meek spouse, and was only prevented from giving him a severe beating by several keepers, who compelled her to desist. She then took him in charge and marched him off.

PROSPECT OF A JAIL DELIVERY.

John Knox was sent to the Kings County Penitentiary on Dec. 23 last, by Justice Walsh, of Brooklyn, for six months on a charge of assault and battery. Counselor Shorter procured a writ of habeas corpus and in the City Court, before Judge McCue, yesterday, applied for the discharge of the prisoner on the ground that the commitment was illegal, 24 hours not having elapsed between the arraignment of the prisoner and his trial. Judge McCue pronounced the commitment illegal and discharged Knox. The City Court Judge was of opinion that Justice Walsh could not constitute his Police Court a Court of Sessions. Counselor Shorter said that application would be made on the same grounds for the discharge of 26 other prisoners who are now in the Penitentiary.

DISASTERS AT SEA.

A SCHOONER CUT DOWN BY ICE AND THEN ABANDONED.

The schooner Adelaza, of 185 tons burden, commanded by Capt. George T. Libbey, was cleared on Friday for Santo Domingo city, and sailed yesterday morning, at 9 o'clock, from Pier No. 9, East River. She was towed down the bay, and just outside Sandy Hook was cut down by floating ice, and soon became water-logged. At 12:40 o'clock a dispatch from Sandy Hook reported that the Adelaza had been towed by that point in an apparently sinking condition. The crew had transferred their baggage to a small boat, and were alongside the schooner ready to leave at a moment's warning. A second tug went to the schooner's assistance, and during the afternoon she was towed up to Quarantine, and afterward to Red Hook. The vessel was manned by a crew of seven, including the Captain, and was owned by Jed Frey & Co. She was chartered by S. Mitchelena, of No. 24 South street, who had loaded her with a full cargo of lard, soap, and other provisions, valued at $20,000, and fully insured in the Atlantic Insurance Company. The underwriters have taken entire charge of the vessel, and will probably make a general average. She carried no passengers.

The British brig Apollo, from St. Pierre, arrived at this port yesterday, bringing the crew of the schooner Champion, of and from Prince Edward's Island, for Baltimore. The Champion was abandoned on the 6th inst. in latitude 37° 41', longitude 71° 30'. In the severe gales of the early part of the month she was dismasted, and afterward became waterlogged. Her crew suffered severely until rescued by the Apollo.

The brig Stella, from New-Orleans, struck out on the 8th inst., she was run into by the Swedish bark Fremtiden, and her bowsprit and figure-head were carried away. The Fremtiden had her forward waist stove in, and was otherwise injured. She put back into Hampton Roads.

INTERNATIONAL METEOROLOGY.

A PLAN FOR SIMULTANEOUS WEATHER OBSERVATIONS ALL OVER THE WORLD—HOW THE UNITED STATES SIGNAL SERVICE WILL CO-OPERATE WITH FOREIGN NATIONS.

At the Meteorological Congress assembled in Vienna in 1873 a proposition was adopted to the effect that it was desirable, with a view to their exchange, that at least one uniform observation, of such character as to be suitable for the preparation of synopsis charts, be taken and recorded daily and simultaneously at as many stations as practicable throughout the world. A correspondence held by the United States Signal Service Office has resulted in establishing a co-operation for the record and exchange of reports of simultaneous meteorological observations between the United States and Algeria, Austria, Belgium, Great Britain, Denmark, France, Germany, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, Greece, Canada, the Hawaiian Islands, Dutch Guiana, and Japan. By the series of observations to be thus taken, the simultaneous observations of atmospheric changes will be carried around the northern hemisphere by land. The co-operation of navies will be needed to complement the notes before they can be as full as is desired for extended study. Secretary Robeson has, at the request of Secretary of War Cameron, assured the latter of the fullest co-operation of the Navy Department with the War Department in the work of carrying out the only daily simultaneous meteorological observations now made with the co-operation of so many nations on land, as fully as possible at sea and around the world. An order was issued by the Secretary of the Navy, on Dec. 25, requiring that, on every naval vessel, and at every naval station, wherever they may be, on every sea, in storm or sunshine, one observation shall be taken and recorded daily at precisely 7:35 A. M., Washington mean time. These observations shall embrace, when practicable, atmospheric pressure, temperature, wind, rain, reading of wet-bulb thermometer, seaswell, and weather. The record of these observations is to form a part of the record of the United States bulletin of international meteorological observations, and the masters, mates and navigators are enjoined in making it. It is the first time in history that the War and Navy Departments of any nation have combined to carry out observations to be simultaneous on land and sea. The oceans will cease to bar the study of meteorology when the usage becomes universal. A copy of the bulletin will be sent to each vessel. The plan will now be needed only the organized aid of the mercantile marine, which can be given without loss of time, to place the entire northern hemisphere under a system of daily observations. The disposition of shipowners is found to be favorable to the proposition, and many captains have already agreed to devote part of each day to this scientific service. The number of foreign land stations in communication with the United States, for an interchange of observations, is distributed in the different countries as follows:

West Indies	8	Italy	29
Canada	28	Italy, sub-stations	1
Great Britain	52	Spain	4
Great Britain, sub-stations	6	Netherlands	4
Algeria	10	Norway	4
Austria	13	Portugal	4
Belgium	1	Russia	27
Denmark	6	Spain, sub-stations	2
France	35	Sweden	5
France, sub-stations	1	Sweden, sub-stations	1
Germany	23	Switzerland	2
Greece	1	Turkey	1
		Turkey, sub-stations	1

The number of stations in the United States is 106.

POLICE MUTUAL AID ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the Police Mutual Aid Association was held yesterday, at which the report for the quarter ending Dec. 31, 1876, was presented, from which it appears that the association lost nine members during the past three months. There were collected during that time $10,915 50, and the disbursements were as follows:

To Mrs. Brophy, widow of Patrolman Patrick J. Brophy, of the Twenty-sixth Precinct, New-York	$1,212 00
To Mrs. Sanford, widow of Edward Sanford, ex-clerk of the Central Office, New-York	1,212 00
To Mrs. Douglas, widow of Patrolman Andrew Douglas, of the Twenty-sixth Precinct, New-York	1,212 00
To the mother and sisters of Patrolman James McKee, of the Sixth Precinct, Brooklyn	1,212 00
To Mrs. Lucy, widow of ex-Doorman Charles Luddy, of the Fourth Precinct, Brooklyn	1,212 00
To Mrs. Townsend, widow of ex-Sergt. George W. Townsend, of the Seventh Precinct, Brooklyn	1,212 00
To Mrs. O'Rourke, widow of Patrolman John O'Rourke, of the Thirtieth Precinct, New-York	1,212 00
To Mrs. Sutton, widow of Patrolman Daniel D. Sutton, of the Sanitary Company, New-York	1,212 00
To Mrs. Tompkins, widow of Doorman Daniel H. Tompkins, of the Eighth Precinct, New-York	1,219 50

The number of members in good standing is 2,439. The report for the year was also presented, showing the receipts to have been $52,324 50, and the payments the same amount. The association has lost 43 members by death during the past year. Since the formation of the association, October, 1866, to December, 1876, making 10 years and three months, the association has lost 318 members. There has been collected during that time and paid to the widows and orphan children of deceased members the sum of $382,470; amounting to $1,203 50 for each member who has belonged to the association since its organization. Sergt. William H. Lefferts, of the Sanitary Company, who has been President of the association since its organization, was again elected to that position yesterday.

THE MUNICIPAL COMMISSION.

The Municipal Commission appointed for the purpose of preparing and reporting a plan to the Legislature for the better government of the municipalities of this State, has held several meetings recently to perfect its report, and was in session all yesterday afternoon in the Bar Association building in West Twenty-sixth street, on the adjournment of the meeting, which, like all those held by the commission, was of a private character, Hon. William M. Evarts, the Chairman of the Commission, said that he did not know how soon the report of the commission would be completed, but that the Commissioners were working diligently, and would hold another session on Wednesday next. He thought the report would not be finished at that meeting, but when completed, he said, it will be presented to the Legislature.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS' ASSOCIATION.

A meeting of the Commercial Travelers' Association was held yesterday afternoon at Steinway Hall to hear the report of the special committee appointed to attend the annual meeting of the association held at Syracuse on the 9th inst. The chief event of the Syracuse meeting, according to the report, was the defeat of a proposed amendment to the constitution, establishing a "tontine fund," to be divided every 10 years among the living members of the association. The amendment proposed that the "death loss," raised by per capita assessment, from the members of the association for the benefit of the heirs of any deceased member, should be limited to $3,000, the balance of the assessment to be devoted to the "tontine fund." The amendment was lost, leaving the "death loss" limited to $5,000, the same as it was originally. The constitution was, however amended, so as to provide that every surplus in the treasury, no matter from what source it may have accumulated, shall be devoted to the "death loss fund," and that so long as this is a sufficient surplus to pay a "death loss," and still leave $2,000 on hand for necessary expenses, the usual per capita assessment of $2 shall not be levied. The annual dues of $1 were also adopted, and several other minor amendments made. The report having been read and adopted, a committee was appointed to make arrangements with the different railroad companies to allow commercial travelers 300 pounds of baggage. The Secretary announced the receipt from the Western Union Telegraph Company of a blank, giving permission to the Secretary to send business messages and receive answers over the company's wires until June next free of charge. After transacting some further unimportant business, the meeting adjourned.

A CLEVER BURGLAR.

A well-dressed and gentlemanly appearing man called at the house of Mrs. Emerson, No. 77 South Ninth street, Brooklyn, on Friday evening and inquired for a Mrs. Smith. Mrs. Emerson said that a Miss Smith resided in the house. Intimating that Miss Smith was probably the person he wished to see, the visitor was shown into the parlor. After a few moments Miss Smith came down stairs, and the stranger, with many apologies, said she was not the lady he expected to meet. While left alone in the parlor the young man unfastened the catch of the window. At 2 o'clock yesterday morning he returned and obtained entrance through the unfastened window. He had just taken $3 from one of Mrs. Emerson's dresses, and a diamond pin from Mr. Emerson's shirt, when a confederate on the street signaled him to come out. He reached the sidewalk just in time to be arrested by Officer Edmund Brown, of the Fifth Precinct. At the station-house the prisoner gave his name as Robert Anderson, and said he was 23 years of age.

REDUCTION OF BANK CAPITAL.

The stockholders of several of the largest banks, anticipating little sympathy in Washington with their demand for a reduction or withdrawal of burdensome war taxes, which have made, they allege, the business of banking well-nigh ruinous, have actually begun to reduce their capital, in order to save sums varying from $50,000 to $100,000 a year. With this purpose, the Fourth National Bank has reduced its capital $1,250,000, and yesterday sent the following notice to the Stock Exchange:

FOURTH NATIONAL BANK,
NEW YORK, Jan. 9, 1877.

S. T. Russell, President New-York Stock Exchange:

DEAR SIR—Please notice that the capital of this bank has been reduced from $5,000,000 to $3,750,000, and that the transfer books will be open on the 1st of February next, when the old certificates of stock may be delivered up and new ones issued, paying par value for the shares retired. Respectfully yours. ANTHONY LANE, Cashier.

A WILL UPHELD.

In the latter part of 1876, Joseph Taylor, a well-known resident of the town of East Chester, Westchester County, died, leaving property valued at from $40,000 to $75,000, which he bequeathed to his wife for her support during her lifetime, and the maintenance and education of his children. At her death and after the sum of $2,000 apiece had been paid to two sons by a former marriage, the property was to be equally divided among the other children. Shortly after Mr. Taylor's demise, the will was admitted to probate, but recently the case was reopened on behalf of the two sons, whose counsel made a motion before Surrogate Coffin to set the will aside on the ground of the testator's incapacity to execute the will at the time, and that undue influence had been used by the second wife to the matter. Surrogate Coffin has just rendered his decision in the case, sustaining the will.

FATHER AND CHILD BURNED TO DEATH.

Samuel Morris and his infant son were burned to death at their home in Hanover Township, Burlington County, N. J., under peculiarly distressing circumstances. Thursday, at 2 o'clock, the family of the unfortunate man were aroused from their sleep by the crackling of the flames, which had broken out in the lower part of the dwelling. Morris seized one of the two children, while his wife took the other, and made an attempt to escape through the door on the ground floor—Mrs. Morris' last sight of her husband, being driven back by the flames. She escaped, after she had lowered her child by ropes from the window into the arms of friends, by jumping from the second-story to the ground. She supposed that her husband and son had escaped through the door, but no trace of either was found till their charred remains were discovered in the débris.

THE OVERDUE STEAM-SHIPS.

The steam-ship Colombo, of the Wilson Line, now 42 days out from Hull, had not yesterday been heard from at the office of the line in this City, but the agents do not yet give her up as lost. Pier No. 53, North River, is crowded with freight intended for the Colombo, most of which is bacon, and more freight is still coming. The State Line steam-ship State of Virginia, which was due from Glasgow on 5th inst., was yesterday reported by Austin, Baldwin & Co., the agents of the line, as having put into Cork Haven, south of Ireland, with a broken shaft. Her cargo will be brought to this port by the State of Pennsylvania, of the same line, and the passengers by the State of Indiana. The August Andre from Antwerp, due Jan. 2, and the Rotterdam from Rotterdam, due Jan. 7, are still to be heard from.

RECOVERY OF STOLEN PROPERTY.

On Dec. 6 last a parcel containing 41 fine otter skins, valued at $800, was stolen from the express wagon of Adolph Brownsky, of No. 220 East Fifty-first street. No trace of the thief or the property was found until yesterday, when Superintendent Walling received information that the property was secreted in the premises of Ernest Schmidt, a cigar-maker, at No. 168 Canal street. Detectives Reilly, Williamson, and Ferris, of the Central Office, were sent yesterday to search the place. In a barrel in the cellar they found concealed 39 of the stolen skins. Schmidt was arrested and locked up at the Central Office on a charge of receiving stolen goods.

Leavitt will, on the evenings of the 18th and 19th inst., sell without reserve, by public auction, at their gallery, No. 817 Broadway, the remainder of the celebrated collection of Spanish pictures imported by R. Guerrero, of Madrid, and on which advances were made by Mr. Francis Tomes. The present collection consists of about 200 oil paintings and water colors, many of them being historical and religious subjects, some originals, and others copies of the old masters, besides genre pictures and landscapes by celebrated painters of the modern Spanish school, viz., Madrago, Pradilla, Olavido, Goya, Sala, P. Frances, Mejia, Galofre, and others.

Hart, and John D. Conklin, which has been considering plans to reorganize the party for some time, met yesterday at Senator Bixby's office in Park row, Mr. Mackellar presiding. After some discussion over the plans, which have been already described in THE TIMES, the committee adjourned without coming to any definite conclusion. It is understood that no plan will be fully agreed upon until after the State Legislature has taken action in regard to the reapportionment of the Assembly districts of the City.

WASHINGTON.

THE PRESIDENT WILL SUSTAIN THE PACKARD GOVERNMENT.

THE STATE OF AFFAIRS IN LOUISIANA—THE LEGALITY OF THE ELECTION—DEMOCRATIC ADVICE TO THE NICHOLLS CROWD BELIEVED TO BE REVOLUTIONARY—THE REPUBLICAN LEGISLATURE AND THE REAL STATE OFFICERS WILL BE PROTECTED BY THE ARMY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—Since the inauguration of Gov. Packard, the duly elected chief magistrate of Louisiana, there has been some doubt among politicians and others as to what action the President intends to take regarding his Government, and whether or not the President would formally recognize and sustain him and the Republican Legislature. The doubt referred to was created by the President's failure to take any official notice of the troubles in Louisiana, or give any direction as to whether Gov. Packard or Gen. Nicholls should be recognized by the commander of the United States troops in New-Orleans. His failure to take such action was not caused by any doubt as to the legality of the Packard Government; that, he thinks, cannot be questioned. Privately he has always held that the Returning Board was a legal and a constitutional body, and that its decision of the election case in favor of Gov. Packard was final and conclusive. He has not, up to this time, made these views public, because he desired to await the return of the Congressional Investigating Committees now in Louisiana, so that whatever action he might take would be likely to receive the sanction and support of the National Legislature. While he has been trying to carry out this impartial and neutral policy, however, many prominent Democrats here and in other parts of the country, mistaking the cause of his failure to act, have been encouraging Nicholls and the other bogus State officers to continue their rebellion against the duly elected Government, and to take every advantage which they could derive from the inaction of the troops. One prominent Democratic Senator from a Western State has been particularly conspicuous in giving advice of this kind. He has been in constant telegraphic communication with Nicholls, and no later than yesterday sent him a dispatch in which he counseled him to take forcible possession of the State-house, and dislodge the lawful Government. In giving this counsel the Senator stated that such action on the part of the Nicholls clique could not fail to strengthen the cause of Mr. Tilden.

Becoming aware of these facts, and regarding Nicholls' interference with the courts as revolutionary in the highest degree, the President, after consultation with a number of Senators, Hon. E. W. Stoughton, and a number of other well-known Constitutional lawyers, has decided to recognize and sustain the Packard Government and the Republican Legislature. To-day he caused instructions, in accordance with this decision, to be telegraphed to Gen. Auger, commander of the United States troops in New-Orleans. In pursuance of these orders Gen. Auger will give Gov. Packard all the support in his power. It is not thought, however, that it will be found necessary to actively employ the troops. The moral support of the President's recognition will, it is believed, be sufficient to sustain Gov. Packard and put an end to the pretensions of Nicholls and the other bogus State officers.

INTIMIDATION IN LOUISIANA.

THE HOUSE INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE—HOW THE DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS SECURED EVIDENCE — COLORED MEN AFRAID TO TELL THE TRUTH IN THE PRESENCE OF THEIR PERSECUTORS—WITH A FREE ELECTION THE STATE WOULD HAVE BEEN CARRIED FOR HAYES BY 20,000 MAJORITY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—That portion of the House Louisiana Investigating Committee which visited the Red River parishes has returned to Washington. Mr. Danford, who was on the committee, states that after the first week of the investigation, which was conducted at New-Orleans, the committee was divided and sent into various districts, so that the testimony taken by one sub-committee is unknown to each of the others, and it will not be possible for the committee to reach definite conclusions until all the testimony shall be printed. Mr. Danford says there does not appear from the testimony that outrages and intimidations were directly practiced to any considerable extent at the last election in the Red River parishes. The colored people were so thoroughly intimidated by previous outrages in that district that fresh atrocities were not needed to prevent them from visiting the polls. The recollection of their sufferings in previous years was sufficient to deter them from attempting to exercise their rights in November last. The system of taking evidence adopted by the House committee was instrumental in preventing much evidence from being given by colored men. Had the committee summoned witnesses to New-Orleans, where they would have been free from the terrorizing presence of their persecutors, the colored men would have testified fully and freely. As it was, they were summoned to testify in presence of those who had visited upon them all manner of outrages, the presence and threatening manner of the audience being a menace which effectually sealed their lips. Mr. Danford says he has no doubt, from what he heard and saw in Louisiana, that had a free election been held Hayes would have carried the State fairly by at least 20,000 majority.

The manner of taking testimony to which the gentleman refers was agreed upon by the Louisiana Democrats long before the House committee reached New-Orleans. When it was announced that such a committee was coming to the State, many of the most important witnesses for the Republicans were summoned to the capital. Here they were ready to testify, as they knew they would be protected. Nearly every one of them, however, stated that after they had told what they knew of the Democratic canvass they could not go back to their homes. This being the case, it was of course impossible to get the colored people to testify freely in the presence of the men who controlled the Democratic rifle clubs in the bull-dozed districts. Mr. Tilden's agents in New-Orleans knew this; hence their action in sending the House committee into the interior.

THE SOUTH CAROLINA ELECTION.

RETURN NORTH OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE—NO QUESTION OF THE STATE HAVING GONE FOR HAYES—HOW REPUBLICANS WERE COMPELLED TO VOTE FOR TILDEN—A BAD CONDITION OF AFFAIRS REPORTED—WADE HAMPTON ONLY A FIGURE-HEAD.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—The committee of the Senate which went to South Carolina have returned, except Senator Merrimon, who stopped over at his home in North Carolina. Senator Christiancy and Senator Cameron reached here on the same train with the committee returning from Florida. The Republican Senators agreed that there is no question of the State having given its votes for Hayes. It is probable that Senator Merrimon will concur in this opinion, but he may not agree with the Republicans in a report. No examination of questions affecting the validity of the State Government was taken. The committee examined over 300 witnesses, and took testimony that will fill two or three volumes. There was a very full investigation of the Hamburg and Ellenton riots, which shows that they were premeditated and designed for political effect. The committee agreed that one representative Democrat might, without regard to technical rules of evidence, make a statement of the Democratic position, and their views of the political situation in the State. Col. Haskell, Chairman of the State Democratic Committee, was chosen to make this statement, and was a day and a half in presenting it before the committee. Gov. Chamberlain presented, in the same manner, the Republican side of the story. Judge Mackey, who stumped the State for Hayes and Hampton, admitted that he voted for Tilden, but claimed that he got three Democrats to vote for Hayes.

Senator Cameron speaks freely of the work of the committee and situation in South Carolina. He says there is a very bad condition of affairs. Nearly every white man in the State has been driven into the Democratic Party, or at least into voting the Democratic ticket. Six of the Circuit Judges were Republicans, but they all voted for Hampton, and most of them for Tilden. The Democrats had agreed that they would give no recognition to any white man who voted the Republican ticket. They would not buy of them, nor sell to them; would not have business relations with them, and would not recognize them socially. The witnesses who testified before the committee were generally under restraint, and it had been reported that some of the witnesses from Laurens County had been punished on their return. District Attorney Corbin has gone to ascertain the facts. It is alleged that those who had been working by the month have been discharged, and others having rented lands have been refused a renewal of the lease.

The weakness of the Chamberlain Government without Federal support is undisputed. It would be overthrown very shortly by the rifle clubs under Democratic orders. Senator Cameron speaks of Gen. M. C. Butler, of Hamburg massacre notoriety, as the real leader of the Democrats in the State, while Wade Hampton is more useful as a figurehead.

THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE VOTE

THE PUBLICATION OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE'S PROPOSITION—THE PLAN NOT SATISFACTORY TO REPUBLICANS—THE ELEMENT OF CHANCE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—The Joint Committee on Counting the Electoral Vote will be in session again to-morrow. There has been no very great advance since the committees began their joint meetings, though it is stated that there is a prospect of some result in a few days. The members are very reticent, and all endeavors, of which there have been many, to get some verification or denial of the authenticity of the plan as published in THE TIMES, have failed to elicit direct answers. The members will not deny, but some of them are inclined to evade, and have given some correspondents to understand that nothing has been agreed upon. The plan does not by any means meet with universal favor. There are a great many Republicans that earnestly wish for some arrangement, but are not content to have the decision made by drawing lots. The plan agreed upon is admitted to be as free from objection as any which should contain the element of chance. The grand committee might be composed of six Republicans and six Democrats, with Justice Davis, a Liberal Republican, practically holding the position of umpire. The committee might be composed of seven Republicans and six Democrats. The theory of the appointment of the committee is that it would act without regard to party; but nobody believes that it would not substantially determine the election, according to the party basis on which it might happen to be made up, any more than that the Senate and House would act in opposition to their party majorities. The attempt will be made by some extreme Democrats to forestall acceptance of the proposition by the Democrats, and bring up measures for debate and a vote before any scheme of settlement can be submitted to the House. The feature of leaving the result to chance appears to satisfy Democrats better than Republicans. The plan will meet with earnest opposition if it comes from the joint committee with this feature, and the publication of the measure may probably compel its modification in this particular.

THE SECRET INVESTIGATIONS.

THE PROCEEDINGS LEAKING OUT IN MYSTERIOUS WAYS—MR. CHANDLER BEFORE THE COMMITTEE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—Recent developments seem to confirm the reports prevalent at the capital, that both Democrats and Republicans have copies of telegrams sent South and to Oregon by controlling politicians, pending the canvass of the votes of the disputed States. These copies were obtained from sources other than the regular channels, but exactly in what manner is left to conjecture. Although they cannot be used as evidence, not being authenticated, they afford the basis of interrogation by investigating committees, and have been the means of obtaining information from witnesses who have knowledge of their contents. Surprise is expressed that the Committee on the Powers, Privileges and Duties of the House, now engaged in the investigation of private matters, connected with the Electoral vote South should not only sit with closed doors, but impose an obligation on the members of the committee not to communicate to other parties information concerning the character of the testimony taken. On Saturday, when Secretary Chandler was before them, notwithstanding the caution, the drift of the inquiries and replies relative to telegrams from him to Gov. Stearns, of Florida, pending the count of the Electoral vote in that State, were ascertained and telegraphed from here last night. The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, however, also inquiring into the subject of the Electoral votes, open their committee-room to reporters, thus affording the means of acquainting the public with the proceedings in a consecutive and trustworthy form. An effort will be made at the next meeting of the House committee to open the doors to the press.

The President-to-day held a conference with Secretaries Chandler and Cameron.

The questions which Secretary Chandler refused to answer before the Committee on the Powers and Privileges of the House, yesterday, were such as referred principally to the subject of communications between himself and the President, and which are regarded by the Secretary as confidential.

THE TEXAS PACIFIC BILL.

UNFAVORABLE PROSPECTS OF ITS PASSAGE—THE OPPOSITION TO THE BILL—THE PROVISIONS FOR ITS NORTHERN CONNECTIONS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—The prospects for the passage of the Texas Pacific bill, as agreed upon by the House Committee on Pacific Railroads, are not so favorable as its advocates would desire, and it is pretty certain the bill will not receive as much support when reported as it did in the last Congress. It is known that several members of the committee voted against reporting the bill, and one voted for it in committee with the understanding that he should be free to oppose its passage in the House. It is asserted that the bill will not receive from the Southern members that unanimous support which its friends claim for it. A majority of the members from Georgia, Alabama, and Kentucky, and a number from Mississippi and Texas, are said to be against its passage, and its support from Louisiana will depend upon the location of certain termini which are desired by the delegation from that State. The failure to secure the necessary Southern support will arise from the provisions for connections with Northern roads this side the Mississippi.

FAST MAILS AND THE FRANK.

DISAGREEMENT OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE ON THE POST ROUTE BILL—HISTORY OF THE BILL DURING THE LAST AND PRESENT SESSIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—The disagreement between the Senate and House of Representatives upon the bill to establish post routes, involves the question of fast service for various sections of the country, and, also, the restoration of the franking privilege. As the bill passed the House at the last session, it merely provided for the establishment of post routes throughout the country; when it came to the Senate, amendments were attached to it non-concurring in certain routes named in the House bill, and establishing others in place thereof. The Senate, then, after a long discussion, by a vote of 31 yeas to 13 nays, adopted amendments appropriating $150,000 to restore Fast Mail trains over the New-York Central and Hudson River and Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroads between New-York and Chicago and to St. Louis, and over the Pennsylvania Railroad and its connections between New-York and St. Louis, New-York and Chicago, and New-York and Cincinnati; also, $75,000 for Fast Mail service over the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad and over the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and its connections, to Washington, St. Louis, and Chicago; $100,000 for Fast Mail service to New-Orleans via Richmond, and $125,000 for the fast mail service daily between Chicago and the eastern terminus of the Union Pacific Railroad. The last named amendment was not for a Fast Mail service, but was for the purpose of having the mails conveyed from Chicago to the eastern terminus of the Union Pacific Railroad on Sunday as well as every other day of the week, that the people of San Francisco and the far West should not have their Eastern mail delayed one day on account of there being no Sunday service between Chicago and Omaha. In addition to this, another amendment appropriating $40,000 to extend the Fast Mail service to Omaha was agreed to. The amendment restoring the franking privilege was agreed to by a vote of 30 yeas to 15 nays. It provides that letters, packages or other matter, relating exclusively to the business of the Government of the United States, shall be transmitted through the mail free of postage when marked "Official business," and showing also the name of the department or bureau whence transmitted; and, further, that Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives may send and receive through the mail, free of postage, letters and documents. All letters and documents sent by them must bear the name of the sender and the proper designation of the office he holds. A penalty of $300 is prescribed for using official envelopes of the Government for private correspondence.

As amended, the bill passed the Senate on the 11th day of August last, and was sent to the House of Representatives. But the amendments were not considered by that body until this session, when the House Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads reported in favor of non-concurring in the Senate amendments restoring the Fast Mail service and the franking privilege, on the ground that they were matters of general legislation, and should not be attached to a Post Office route bill. The House agreed to the reports of its committee. The bill having been returned to the Senate, it was considered by the Committee of that body on Post Offices and Post Roads, and in accordance with the report of the committee the Senate insisted upon its amendments and asked a conference with the House of Representatives. The conferees on the part of the Senate are Messrs. Hamlin, Paddock, and Maxey. Those on the part of the House have not yet been appointed.

DESTRUCTION BY THE ARMY IN WAR.

THE BILL TO PAY THE CLAIM OF DR. BEST, OF KENTUCKY, FOR THE DESTRUCTION OF HIS HOUSE BY ORDER OF ARMY OFFICERS DURING THE WAR.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—In the Senate Mr. Mitchell, from the Committee on Claims, has given notice that he will at an early day call up the bill for the relief of Dr. J. Milton Best, of Kentucky. This is a bill of some notoriety, having already passed Congress and been vetoed by the President. It involves the question of allowing a certain class of claims growing out of the war, and proposes to pay the claimant $25,000 for the destruction of his dwelling-house and its contents by order of the United States military authorities at Paducah, Ky., on the 26th of March, 1864, for the reason that it was in the way of the effective use of the guns of Fort Anderson and constituted a shelter for the enemy. The loyalty of the claimant has been established beyond question, the report of the committee stating that he was an unquestionably loyal to the Government of the United States. The bill has been before Congress since 1870, and passed in 1872; but the President vetoed it, stating in the veto that, "it is a claim for compensation on account of the ravages of war. It cannot be denied that the payment of this claim would invite the presentation of demands for very large sums of money, and such is the supposed magnitude of the claims that may be made against the Government for necessary and unavoidable destruction of property by the Army, that I deem it proper to return this bill for reconsideration." He also says: "If it be deemed proper to make compensation for such losses, I suggest, for the consideration of Congress, whether it would not be better, by general legislation, to provide some means for the ascertainment of the damage in all similar cases, and thus save to the claimants the expense, inconvenience, and delay of attendance upon Congress, and at the same time, save the Government from the danger of having imposed upon it fictitious or exaggerated claims, supported wholly by ex parte proof." The Committee on Claims subsequently recommended that the bill be passed, notwithstanding the objections of the President, and in the report cited a number of precedents for the passage of the bill; several times it has been brought up in the Senate, but always caused a protracted discussion.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—The Senate Committee on Railroads will have a meeting to-morrow, and the bill introduced on Friday last by Senator Gordon to create a sinking fund for the liquidation of the Government bonds advanced to the Central Pacific, Western Pacific, and Union Pacific Railroad Companies, and for the settlement of the claims of the Government on account of said bonds, will probably be acted upon, as this Pacific Railroad indebtedness is to be considered by the Senate on Tuesday next, the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee at the last session, to provide for the payment of the indebtedness, having been made the special order for that day. The bill reported from the Judiciary Committee is in charge of Mr. Thurman, and it will, no doubt, lead to an extended debate. Other bills on the same subject have been reported from the Committee on Railroads, and they will all be considered together, with a view to the passage of a bill acceptable to the Government as well as the railroad companies, and one which will prevent any further legislation.

The Consular and Diplomatic and Military Academy Appropriation bills, which recently passed the House, are now before the Senate Committee on Appropriations. Mr. Windom, Chairman, and Mr. West, a member of that committee, who were absent recently, have both returned to the city, and only two members of the committee—Messrs. Sargent and Blaine—are now absent, the former with one of the investigating committees in the South, and the latter at his home in Maine. The two appropriation bills mentioned will be considered this week and reported to the Senate.

The Secretary of War has again brought to the attention of Congress the question of authorizing the appointment of Post Quarter-master Sergeants in the Army for the care of Quarter-masters' property. The Secretary says, "these Sergeants would perform the duties now undertaken by hired civilians and would cost less to the Government than the latter, while at the same time the Government would derive all the advantage of their experience as well as being able to control them by military authority and discipline." It is proposed that these Sergeants shall receive the same pay and allowances as ordnance Sergeants. The Quartermaster General also recommends that a law authorizing their appointment be passed, and says he believes that they would save more than they would cost, and that they would materially aid in the business of his department at military posts and stations.

The Light-house Board gives notice that an automatic signal-buoy, giving blasts of a whistle at short intervals, has been placed for trial off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina, about 23¼ miles from the outer edge of the shoal, in 12 fathoms of water, Cape Hatteras light bearing north-west by north, (magnetic,) distant about 11½ miles.

Sergeant at Arms Thompson, of the House, says Mr. Hewitt did not refuse to call together the National Democratic Committee for the purpose of considering the resolutions adopted by the Ohio Democracy, for a grand mass meeting of Democrats in Washington, on Feb. 12. Mr. Hewitt declined to issue a call for the mass meeting, but agreed to call the National Committee together, and lay the resolutions before them for consideration, and went to New-York for that purpose.

Charles Fisher, son of ex-Judge Fisher, who was yesterday pardoned by the President, having been recently convicted by the Supreme Court of the act of stealing important papers from the office of the District Attorney, has been taken to the insane asylum in this District.

THE HOSTILE INDIANS.

ENCOUNTER BETWEEN A CAVALRY ESCORT AND 15 SAVAGES—THE LATTER DRIVEN—TWO CAVALRY MEN WOUNDED.

CHEYENNE, Jan. 14.—The continued interruption in telegraphic communication between Forts Laramie and Fetterman induced an escort of the Sixth Cavalry, commanded by Sergt. Bessey, in returning from Hat Creek, to strike across the country and come in on the Fetterman line. Last night on the Elkhorn, 30 miles north of Fort Laramie, fresh tracks of Indians were discovered, and to avoid a surprise in camp the Sergeant with three men made a reconnoissance and about midnight met a party of 15 Indians. In the fight which ensued Bessey and one of his companions named Taggart were slightly wounded, and the other, named Featherall, was badly hurt; they also lost three horses killed, when the Indians were forced to retire. A company of cavalry left Fort Laramie to-day to endeavor to intercept the Indians.

GEN. CROOK'S COMMAND AT FORT FETTERMAN—THE POWDER RIVER EXPEDITION ABANDONED—COURT-MARTIAL OF TWO OFFICERS FOR COWARDICE AND DISOBEDIENCE OF ORDERS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—A letter dated Fort Laramie, Jan. 1, says Gen. Crook returned to Fort Fetterman Dec. 29 and his command the following day. The Powder River Expedition has been abandoned at this time because since Gen. McKenzie's fight with White Antelope the hostiles have become so thoroughly alert as to make a further Winter campaign utterly impracticable. Capt. Lawson, Lieuts. Johnson, Drew, Morton, and Reynolds, all of the Third Cavalry, leave here Wednesday as witnesses from this post before the court-martial to be held at Cheyenne, Wyoming, Jan. 5, when Gen. Joseph J. Reynolds, Colonel of the Third Cavalry, and Senior Colonel of Cavalry, and Capt. Alexander Moore, of the Third Cavalry, will be tried for cowardice and disobedience of orders during the Big Horn expedition of Gen. Crook.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

A fire yesterday morning at Rondout destroyed the cabinet-shop, dwelling, and barn of Michael Stock, the sailing sojourning, also owned by Stock, and occupied as a bakery and dwelling, the grocery store and dwelling of John O'Connor, the slaughter-house of Frederick Weber, and several other smaller buildings. The fire began in Stock's building. The loss is estimated at over $20,000; insurance, $12,800.

A stable on Montgomery street, near Colgate, Jersey City, was set on fire yesterday morning at 3 o'clock by some unknown person and burned to the ground. The loss is $1,000. The stable was the property of Patrick Congdon, and it is supposed that a man named Black, who has since disappeared, carelessly threw a lighted match into the hay, setting it on fire.

A fire occurred yesterday morning in the apartments of Simon Barnhard, a tailor, in the basement of No. 167 Hester street, causing damage amounting to $800 to the building and stock.

A SOLDIER KILLED BY A TEAMSTER.

CHEYENNE, Jan. 14.—In a row between a number of soldiers and teamster sat Sidney, Neb., last night, Private James Keith, of Company C, Fifth Cavalry, was shot and instantly killed. After the shooting of Keith, about 20 soldiers procured arms from the barracks and went to the front of the place where Keith was killed, and fired several volleys through the windows and doors of the building. Fortunately no one was injured. The firing was stopped by the arrival of the patrol. The body of Keith was taken in charge by the commanding officer at Sidney Barracks.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COMMITTED FOR TRIAL FOR ARSON.

PROVIDENCE, Jan. 14.—Charles S. Brown was arraigned before a Justice of the Peace at Middletown to-day, on a charge of setting fire to the dwelling in which his father was burned to death. Brown pleaded not guilty, waived an examination, and was committed to the Newport jail for trial at the March term of the Supreme Court.

KILLED BY A RUNAWAY HORSE.

BOSTON, Jan. 14.—Augustus B. Hill, who resides at No. 22 Bowdoin street, while alighting from a street car on the corner of Vermont and Beacon streets, to-day, was knocked down and killed by a runaway horse.

RAIN IN CALIFORNIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 14.—Rain has been reported within the last 24 hours in the southern counties as far north as Los Angeles and San Luis Obispo. There are indications of rain here.

A RHODE ISLAND DESPERADO.

PROVIDENCE, Jan. 14.—In this city on Saturday night Joshua C. Prentice, Jr., entered a gun store, commenced a disturbance and smashed a loaded pistol at the breast of the proprietor. When arrested, a pistol, sand-club, sharpened knife, coil of cord, and paper of poison were found on his person.

THE OHIO ICE-GORGE BROKEN.

A CRASH AMONG THE STEAM-BOATS AND RIVER CRAFT—DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY FROM PITTSBURG TO LOUISVILLE—REMARKABLE ESCAPE OF A FAMILY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 14.—This day has been one of great excitement along the Ohio River from Pittsburg to Louisville. For many years the ice has not been so thick as that formed by the extreme cold weather of this Winter, and the inevitable break-up was looked for with grave apprehensions by all having property in steam-boats and barges. The thaw of the last few days has raised the tributaries and loosened vast masses of ice until to-day, when the gorges broke, and a grand crash came.

The losses at this point are not, on the whole, so heavy as were anticipated. The new steamer Calumet was sunk and is a total loss. The Andes, an old steamer, and the Fanny Webster, a ferry-boat, together with a considerable number of small pleasure and produce boats, were swept away by masses of ice and crushed like egg shells. A large number of loaded and empty coal barges were also sunk.

The total loss here is estimated at $150,000, on which there is a fair amount of insurance.

Above here the damage was much greater. It is reported that six steamers were sunk at Pittsburg, involving a loss of over $1,000,000. Gorges are still reported at Middleport and Wheeling, above, and Louisville, below, but for long distances the river is clear and the ice is running rapidly.

Thousands of people gathered along the shore to-day to witness the spectacle. At one point above the city a shanty-boat, which was inhabited by a whole family, was swept away from its fastenings and carried down the current. The father and oldest son son escaped over a field of ice, and left the wife and the other children to find safety as best they might. The strange craft and its cargo passed the city, the woman shrieking for aid, which it was impossible to render. At last, however, four miles below here, a line was thrown to them, and they were safely hauled ashore. It is not probable that navigation will be fairly opened for a week.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 15—1 A. M.—The present breaking up of the ice in the Ohio is the most disastrous ever known. Dispatches from Pittsburg report that the work of destruction at that point was begun at 6 o'clock this morning by the breaking up of the gorge on the Monongahela. A fleet of 70 boats in the harbor sounded the alarm, set their wheels going and made a brave fight against the impending disaster. The mass of ice came roaring down, bearing everything before it that had not been amply protected beforehand. The coal-barges were ground into fragments and mingled with huge pieces of ice as hard as granite. The force of the moving body was irresistible. In a short space of time nine steam-boats and a large number of coal-barges and other craft were shapeless wrecks, borne helplessly along by the current, each moment grinding them into smaller pieces.

Fifteen or 20 men were swept away on these wrecks, but all miraculously escaped. Some of them floated 15 miles down the river and were rescued with much difficulty. The only life lost was that of Bernard Manning, fireman on the Hornet. The wrecks of from 30 to 40 boats may be seen along the shore. They are beyond all possibility of repairs.

The total losses swell into enormous proportions. It is estimated that from 300 to 400 coal barges and 2,500,000 bushels of coal were destroyed, to say nothing of the steam-boats, damage to dry docks, and the various other interests on the river. The work of destruction on the Monongahela River was almost universal. The estimate this morning of the entire loss by the breaking up of the ice was $1,000,000, but it is evident to-night that it was much greater. It has even been placed by good judges as high as $2,500,000, and it is doubtful if it will fall much below $2,000,000.

Some precautions have been felt to-day of the breaking up of the ice in the Youghiogheny, involving a second destruction. The remaining boats are in a disabled condition, and all hands are passing an anxious night.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 14.—The movement of the ice in the Ohio River has been almost general from Pittsburg to Cairo, entailing heavy losses, chiefly upon owners of coal boats and barges. A dispatch from North Bend, 12 miles below here, reports over 200 coal-barges passing there in the ice to-day. At Mingo, near Steubenville, 10 barges were swept away to-day, and four at Parkersburg. The ice in the Kanawha River broke up yesterday, carrying away a wharf-boat and several barges. At Bleunerhassett's Island, the tow-boat N. G. Bigley and eight barges and the steamer U. S. Thanhauser were carried off by the ice. Eight barges, supposed to be from the Kentucky River, passed Madison this afternoon. At Jeffersonville the river rose five feet in two hours, and the ice swept down at the rate of 10 miles an hour, tearing away a large quantity of valuable timber from the ship-yards, sinking several barges loaded with coal, and demolishing a portion of the ferry-boat.

The ice which had remained stationary above Newport bridge gave way at noon to-day, and, striking the sunken steamer Calumet, turned the wreck around, and swept it down with the current, making the loss a total loss. Further down the ice carried away about 40 loaded, and about as many empty, coal-boats, and at Delhi, 10 miles below, took the small steamer Alex. Kendall with it. The damage by the ice here to-day will aggregate fully $100,000.

THE TENNESSEE SENATORSHIP.

NASHVILLE, Jan. 14.—Senator Key will withdraw from the Senatorial contest to-morrow. He does so because the contest has become a mere struggle for office. In justice to himself and his public character, as well as to the public interests, he cannot engage in a scramble for a position so exalted as that of Senator of the United States.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 14.—A train on the St. Louis, Kansas City and Northern Railway, conveying about 200 soldiers en route to Washington, and lately from Fort Reno, struck a broken rail two miles from Warrenton, Mo., last night at 8 o'clock, and two of the cars were thrown from the track. Several of the soldiers were somewhat scratched and bruised, but no one was seriously injured. The soldiers left here for Washington at 11 o'clock this morning via the Vandalia Line.

SINGULAR ACCIDENT IN NEW-HAMPSHIRE.

CONCORD, Jan 14.—Mrs. Salomi P. Sanborn, an elderly lady, residing near Franklin, opened the door of a small dark closet this morning, which, closing with a spring lock on the outside, confined her within, where she remained nine hours. When rescued she was insensible, and her limbs were stiff with cold. She will probably not recover.

MARINE DISASTERS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—The signal service observer at Atlantic City reports to the Chief Signal Officer as follows: The sloop Joseph Hinz, Capt. Smith, from Long Island, bound for the coast of North Carolina, grounded in Absecom Inlet yesterday, and floated safely off at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

GENERAL POLITICAL NEWS.

DEMOCRATIC FRAUDS IN FLORIDA.

RETURN OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE TO WASHINGTON—A COMPLETE EXAMINATION OF THE CANVASS MADE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—The Senate Committee, which was appointed to investigate the Florida election returned to Washington this morning. They made a most complete and thorough examination of the canvass, and heard the testimony of nearly 500 witnesses. They conducted investigations in Tallahassee, Jacksonville, and Gainesville, thus greatly reducing the expenses for mileage and witness fees, the whole amount expended for this account being less than $2,000. The testimony taken was of the most important character, and proves beyond all question that the Republican vote was greatly reduced by the most bare-faced frauds on the part of the Democrats. In spite of these frauds, however, and without throwing out the vote of a single poll, the State was carried for Hayes and Wheeler. Had the election been fair and free, the testimony shows that the majority for the State and National Republican tickets would have been over 2,000.

THE RETURNS ORDERED TO BE COUNTED BY THE SUPREME COURT—GLARING FRAUDS VISIBLE EVEN THROUGH THEIR FACE—THE ARCHER PRECINCTS VOTE—A TRAIN-LOAD OF PASSENGERS, HAILING FROM TEXAS TO MASSACHUSETTS, VOTING FOR TILDEN.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

GAINESVILLE, Fla., Wednesday, Jan. 10, 1877.

The Senate Committee has been here since last Thursday afternoon, and is prosecuting a very thorough investigation into the alleged frauds in Walde and Archer Precincts in this (Alachua) county. This is the most noted district of the late election, containing the poll—that of Waldo—where a train-load of passengers all voted for Tilden and Hendricks, and if the late decision of the Supreme Court of the State that these votes should be counted on the face of the returns had added to or taken from the vote as tabulated by the Canvassing Board, there might have been a President elected by the vote of a disciple of Tom Hendricks who swore that he was a duly registered voter of Monroe County, Ind., albeit there is no registration in that State. The testimony before the Senate Committee shows that all these railroad voters, who hailed from Texas to Massachusetts, voted for Tilden and Hendricks. Had they not voted here, the majority for Hayes and Wheeler would have been nearly double what is. Results are not effected by the investigations now going on here; but there will be some satisfaction in knowing why Hayes' majority was not bigger on the face of the returns.

The chief interest of the investigation here centres in the evidence in regard to the election in Archer Precinct. This is the precinct from which there was a new return on the wires every day, with affidavits to match from Green R. Moore and Floyd Dukes—two of the Election Officers of poll No. 2. Dukes is an old colored man and voter who is distinguished by his Democracy and stupidity. Colored Democrats are a scarce commodity in Florida; and "daddy Dukes" is somewhat noted on that account. Although such usually meet with the disdain of their fellow colored men, all the colored people here seem to view Duke's position with complacency and the most benevolent toleration; and perhaps this is because he is also considered, by common consent, the stupidest nigger in Florida. Moore, the other affidavit maker, is a white man—a "cracker" of the worst class. By some unaccountable means he was a Republican until he got mixed up in the confusion of counts, at Archer No. 2, the day after the election. It is believed, however, that his conversion really dated from two or three days before the election, when he received money from some unknown source to get a small lot of whisky to supply his stock. He runs a "doggery."

The case at Archer Precinct was as follows: The precinct was a large one, and two polls were opened to accommodate the voters. At poll No. 1 the Democratic vote was 98, and the Republican vote 55. At poll No. 2 the vote was announced on the night of election and returned to the proper county officers the next day as 399 for Hayes and 136 for Tilden. The Democrats disputed this return, and claimed that the vote really stood—the Republican ticket, State and National, 130; the Democratic ticket, 136; The former returns were signed by all the officers of the precinct. The latter was "affidavited" by Moore and Dukes, who disavowed this by other affidavits, which were afterward also disavowed by them under affidavits. It will be remembered that both these men are illiterate, and that one is stupid and the other degraded. Opposed to them was the testimony of the two other officers of the poll, who are intelligent men, of good character in the county. Their testimony, the returns signed by all the board on the night of the election, and the testimony of numerous witnesses who heard the announcement made on the night of the election, showed that there were 535 votes cast, according to the poll-list and the votes in the box, 399 being Republican, and 136 Democratic. Half of the affidavits of Dukes and Moore, and the allegations of Samuel C. Tucker and Samuel T. Fleming, showed that there were only 316 votes cast—180 Republican, and 136 Democratic. Fleming swears, before the committee as elsewhere, that he kept a record of all the voters at the poll, except about 15, and his record shows 305. Tucker swears that he saw the tally-papers added up, and that he heard the announcement made from the window that there were only 316 votes as above. They had no doubt that the Democratic vote was, as stated in both claims, 136; and swore that they knew everybody in the precinct and their politics; but Fleming could not possibly recall to mind more than a dozen Democrats when pressed in the examination, and Tucker broke down at six. Both agreed that the whites voted at Poll No. 1, except six or seven, some of whom were Republicans.

On the other hand, up to last night the committee had examined, identified, and proved 304 Republican votes at the poll, and there are more coming. This shows the falsity of the Democratic claim that there were only 180 Republican votes. It also shows that if there were any Democratic voters at all there were more than 316 votes cast. It is clear that the Republican vote of 399 was actually cast. It is believed that there was fraud at the poll, and that at least 100 Democratic votes were stuffed in the box while Black and Vance were absent from it at noon, and a couple of sheets of names were slipped in with the clerk's papers. The fact that the poll-list was stolen from the County Clerk's office during the controversy, favors that hypothesis. The object was to prevent a comparison of the sheets.

A still stronger reason for belief in such Democratic fraud is the fact that almost the full number of Republican voters have been identified as voting, and have sworn that they voted, the Republican ticket. The keenest search, on the other hand, has only resulted in the discovery of a dozen or so known to have voted the Democratic ticket, and another dozen who are supposed to have voted it. No Democratic attorneys, or candidates, or Congressional investigators have proposed to prove the Democratic vote of the poll by summoning the voters, as the Senate committee is doing with the Republican vote; and when it is proposed to them they dodge or decline assuming the risks of the investigation.

For this reason, the recent investigations by the House committee was a farce and a fraud. It sought to keep out testimony on the part of those participating in the election. The Senate committee proposes to go over the whole ground; that is, if the minority will undertake to prove the Democratic vote. It has been invited to do so, and to furnish names of Democrats who voted; but has not acceded to the request yet. It cannot, because the two witnesses on the Democratic side, who expect their whitewashing to overmatch the testimony of over 300 voters, can only think of six or twelve Democrats who voted at the poll, after eight weeks of hard c

THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

THE FULL HISTORY OF THE COUNT.

PRECEDENTS OF IMPORTANCE IN THE PRESENT CRISIS—THE DUTY OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE TO COUNT THE VOTE—WHAT HAS BEEN DONE IN THE PAST.

From Our Own Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Jan. 13, 1877.

The volume compiled by the committee of the House, and published by order of Congress, containing, as is claimed, everything "said or done" in Congress pertinent to the subject of counting the Electoral vote, comprises 800 pages of closely printed matter. There are but a few hundred of the volumes printed, and were they generally accessible few people would have the patience or time to find out all that is in them. The precedents are, of course, of great importance and interest, and ought to be known to every intelligent voter. There is a broad distinction between what has been "said" and what has been "done" by Congress respecting the count of the Electoral vote. What was "done" makes up the precedents, and they can be presented in a comparatively brief space.

With the view of placing the important facts shown by the compilation before the readers of THE TIMES your correspondent has endeavored to embrace all that was "done" in the following condensation of the public volume, and the most important things "said" prior to the long debates which have filled so many pages of the Record during the last three years. It is believed that not one pertinent action of Congress has been omitted, and all the essential features of the committee's compilation have been retained.

GEN. WASHINGTON'S FIRST TERM.

The Electoral votes for the first Presidential term were not counted until the 6th of April, 1789. On that day the Senate elected by ballot a President, John Langdon, for the sole purpose of counting the votes for President of the United States. It was ordered that Mr. Ellsworth inform the House of the presence of a quorum of Senators, and that a President was elected to count the votes, and that the Senate was ready in the Senate Chamber to proceed, in the presence of the House, to discharge that duty; that the Senate had appointed one of its members to sit at the Clerk's table to make a list of the votes as they were declared, submitting it to the wisdom of the House to appoint one or more of their members for like purpose. The House immediately proceeded to the Senate chamber, and the vote was counted. The following record appears on the Journal:

"The Speaker and the House of Representatives attended in the Senate chamber, and the President elected for the purpose of counting the votes declared the Senate and House of Representatives had met, and that he, in their presence, had opened and counted the votes of the Electors for President and Vice President of the United States, which were as follows."

Here the table is inserted, showing how the votes were cast, from which it appeared that George Washington was unanimously elected President, and John Adams was chosen Vice President by a majority of all the votes cast. A form of certificate was prepared, by order of the Senate, for John Langdon to sign, in which he declares, over his own name, that he did, "in the presence of the said Senate and House of Representative, open all the certificates and count all the votes of the Electors for a President and Vice President."

There appears to have been no dispute or question as to the proper person to count the votes, and as this Congress contained several members of the Constitutional Convention, the interpretation thus put upon the language of that instrument ought to have great weight. In March, 1793, the statute regulating the election of President and Vice President, providing for the time of the meeting of the Electors, the manner of transmitting their votes to Washington, &c., was enacted.

THE RE-ELECTION OF PRESIDENT WASHINGTON.

At the count of the Electoral votes for the second Presidential term in 1793, the proceedings were in most respects a repetition of what was done in 1789. A resolution which was reported by a joint committee of both houses to report a method of counting the votes was adopted, and under it tellers were appointed by the two houses "to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared." The House of Representatives proceeded to the Senate Chamber on Feb. 13, and John Adams, Vice President, "opened, read, and delivered to the tellers appointed for the purpose" the certificates of the Electors, and, the tellers having ascertained the votes, the Vice President declared George Washington unanimously elected President, and John Adams, by a plurality of votes, Vice President. In this case the Vice President opened the certificates, read them, and gave them to the tellers, who did the formal summing up of the number of votes which he had declared to them for that purpose.

THE THIRD PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

In 1797 similar preparations were made for the counting of the vote, and a joint resolution in the same language as that adopted at the second election was passed by the two houses. The Vice President, John Adams, opened the certificates and delivered them to the tellers, who summed up the votes as given, and Mr. Adams made the following announcement:

"In obedience to the Constitution and law of the United States, and to the commands of both houses of Congress in their resolution passed in the present session, I now declare that John Adams is elected President of the United States for four years, to commence with the 4th day of March next, and that Thomas Jefferson is elected Vice President of the United States for four years, to commence with the 4th day of March next. And may the Sovereign of the Universe, the Ordainer of Civil Government on Earth for the preservation of liberty, justice, and peace among men, enable me faithfully to discharge the duties of these offices conformably to the Constitution of the United States, with conscientious diligence, punctuality, and perseverance."

There was some discussion as to the manner in which the President and Vice President elect should be officially informed of their election, and the House resolved that it should be done "by such person and in such manner as the Senate may direct." The Senate decided that the President of the Senate, who was also the President elect, should make out and sign a certificate of the election of Mr. Jefferson as Vice President, in accordance with which John Adams signed a certificate containing the following statement:

"The under-written Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate did, in the presence of the said Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and count all the votes of the Electors for a President and for a Vice President."

From this it appears that Mr. Adams regarded himself as charged with the counting of the votes, and the tellers who performed the addition merely as assistants in the labor. Toward the close of Mr. Adams' term, Jan. 23, 1800, appears the first discussion of the difficulties possible to arise by reason of the inadequate provisions of the Constitution for deciding disputed elections for President and Vice President. Mr. James Ross, of Pennsylvania, offered in the Senate the following resolution:

"That a committee be appointed to consider whether any, and what, provisions ought to be made by law for deciding disputed elections of President and Vice President of the United States, and for determining the legality or illegality of the votes given to those officers in the different States." The debate upon this proposition seems to have been quite exciting, though it is not very fully reported. Senator Brown, of Kentucky, thought Congress had no right to legislate on the subject. Mr. Ross said the Constitution had certainly made no provision to decide disputed elections. He raised the question what should be done in case Electors had votes without proper appointment, or for a President not of the suitable age required by the Constitution. He inquired what would be the situation of the country if a case should happen in which the election of a President depended on the settlement of such disputes, and thought it a duty that provision should be made beforehand. Senator Pinckney, of South Carolina, referred to the great care exercised in the Federal Convention to keep the business of electing the President as far as possible out of the hands of Congress. The manner of appointment of Electors is given exclusively to the State Legislatures. Senator Dexter, of Massachusetts, thought Congress had the right to legislate. Senator Livermore, of New Hampshire, was strongly of the same opinion. Senator Baldwin, of Georgia, expressed in vigorous words the belief that Congress had no power, except to judge of the authentication of each return, and to count the votes as required by the Constitution.

A committee was appointed, however, and a long bill was prepared, which is found in some of the newspapers of the time. It provides generally for the choice of six members of each house by ballot, who shall act with the Chief Justice of the United States as a Grand Committee, to have power to examine and decide all disputes relative to the election of President and Vice President. It was debated and amended and passed by the Senate, was discussed and amended in the House, and was finally lost by differences between the two houses which could not be reconciled by a conference committee. Among the amendments made by the Senate was one containing this provision: "That no petition or exception shall be granted or allowed by the Grand Committee, which shall have for its object to draw into question the number of votes on which any Elector in any of the States shall have been declared appointed." Mr. Pinckney, of South Carolina, earnestly opposed the bill. He said "it never was intended, nor could it have been safe for the Constitution, to have given to Congress the power to sit in convention the right to object to any vote, or even to question whether they were constitutionally or properly given." This right he considered was given exclusively to the State Legislatures. In another place he said: "I have intentionally gone into repetitions on this subject to show how utterly unconstitutional it would be for Congress, either acting in their separate chambers or in convention, to attempt to assume to themselves the power to reject a single vote." In January, 1801, a resolution was made in the House on a proposed constitutional amendment providing for a change in the appointment of Electors, so as to elect them from districts in much the same way as Congressmen are elected. The report pointed out very clearly that no power exists for setting aside votes of Electors, however they might have been given, and concludes in the following language:

"It would be painful to anticipate the consequences which would probably attend a disputed election to the Presidency. These consequences might be more calamitous than can be foreseen."

THE FOURTH PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

In 1801 Thomas Jefferson became President and Aaron Burr Vice President. In the counting of the Electoral vote the Senate this year received the House of Representatives in the Senate chamber. The form of proceedings was similar to those in previous elections, and it appeared that Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr had an equal number of votes, so that there was no election of President. The House proceeded to the election of President, and on the thirty-sixth ballot Thomas Jefferson was elected. On Feb. 13 a resolution was passed in the Senate, in accordance with which Thomas Jefferson made out and signed the formal certificate of the count, which contains the following statement:

"The underwritten Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate did, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and count all the votes of the Electors for President."

In 1803, article 12 of the Constitution, providing for a change in the method of voting in the Electoral College, was adopted, and in accordance with it the general statute relating to the election of President and Vice President was amended to meet the new requirements.

MR. JEFFERSON'S RE-ELECTION.

When Thomas Jefferson was re-elected in 1805 the vote was again counted in the Senate chamber. The usual formula of proceedings was followed, and again the Vice President, Aaron Burr, made out the certificate to the effect that he had opened all the certificates and counted all the votes, following the language of the certificates previously determined by the authority of Congress. In 1808 an attempt was made to set aside the Electoral vote of the State of Massachusetts as returned from the election held that year, because the Legislature which had elected the Electors had failed to lay their action before the Governor of the State for his approval. The question arose by the petition of sundry inhabitants of Andover, in the county of Essex, asking Congress to take the question into consideration and prevent the establishment of such a precedent. Several petitions were laid before the House on the same subject. They were referred to a special joint committee; there was some discussion in the House on various propositions concerning them, and the dangers of a disputed election were again pointed out, but no one seemed to care to make a provision for the settlement of any troubles, since the election would not in any way be disturbed by the rejection of the Massachusetts vote. The petitions were finally sent by the House to the Senate and were likewise ordered to lie on the table. This was the earliest suggestion that the Electoral vote of a State should be rejected, and it has passed so far from notice that even the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Massachusetts learn of the case for the first time in the compilation of the Electoral Committee.

THE SIXTH ELECTION OF PRESIDENT.

In the election for the sixth term, beginning in 1809, when James Madison was chosen President and George Clinton Vice President, the usual formalities were observed, the vote being counted in the chamber of the House of Representatives. The usual certificate was made by the President pro tem. of the Senate, Mr. Milledge. He declared in the regular form that he had opened all the certificates and counted all the votes of Electors. After the count was concluded in the presence of the two houses, the Governor's certificate not being attached to it. No notice was taken, however, of this objection. The Electoral vote of Kentucky was one less than the number to which that State was entitled by reason of Mr. William Logan, one of the Electors, having been sick and unable to attend the meeting of the college. Mr. Macon offered a resolution in the House which, however, was lost, that the reasons should be stated on the journal why this vote was lacking, and gave as a reason that if, on account of such an occurrence in the future, there should be a tie between two candidates for the Presidency, the question would arise whether the vote of an Elector, though unable to attend at the time, ought not to be counted.

JAMES MADISON'S RE-ELECTION.

In 1813 the votes were counted for the seventh Presidential term, and James Madison was re-elected President and Elbridge Gerry was chosen Vice President. The two houses met in the chamber of the House of Representatives. The formal proceedings were as usual. The President pro tem. of the Senate made the usual certificate that he had opened the certificates and counted the votes.

THE EIGHTH ELECTION OF PRESIDENT.

James Monroe was the eighth President, with Daniel D. Tompkins for Vice President, and the Electoral votes were counted in 1817. Again the two houses met in the hall of the House of Representatives, and the President pro tem. certified that he had opened all the certificates and counted all the votes. A question of dispute arose during the counting of the vote in regard to the State of Indiana, which then for the first time voted for President. The joint resolution for the admission of the State had been passed the previous session, but the formal declaration that Indiana was a State in the Union had not been made by Congress. Mr. Taylor interrupted the proceedings of the two houses, and attempted to state his objections to the vote from Indiana being read and recorded. The Speaker of the House called him to order, and stated that while acting in joint convention no proposition could be considered and no business performed except that prescribed by the Constitution. The Senate, on motion of Mr. Taylor, withdrew to its own chamber, and the House considered the objection raised by Mr. Taylor. Mr. Cady, of New-York, regarded the matter as settled by the admission of Senators and Representatives from Indiana to their seats. Several propositions were made, but finally the whole subject was indefinitely postponed, and the Senate ordered the House, when the counting of the votes was completed.

In the Winter of 1820 an attempt was again made to provide against the contingencies of "unlawful, disputed, or doubtful Electoral votes," but the Judiciary Committee of the House decided that no legislation was expedient. The question was raised by reason of the dispute concerning the counting of Indiana in 1817, and the prospective similar dispute concerning Missouri in 1821.

JAMES MONROE RE-ELECTED.

In February, 1821, the usual joint committee to arrange for the counting of the Electoral vote recommended the usual resolution for the meeting of the two houses, &c., and then added a second resolution designed to bridge over the dispute with respect to the admission of Missouri. It simply prescribed what the result of the count would be in case Missouri should be counted, and what it would be if Missouri were not counted. This resolution was the subject of some discussion in the Senate, but was finally adopted. There seems to have been a difficulty about the place of meeting, for it was referred to a committee, and two or three days expressed the opinion that the vote ought to be counted in the Senate chamber, and that that hall would have been recommended, except that it was inconvenient for the purpose.

There was also an interesting debate in the House on the same resolution. Mr. Clay was a member of the joint committee which presented the report. Mr. Randolph opposed the second resolution in a vigorous and characteristic speech, which is but briefly reported. "He could not recognize in this house or the other house, singly or conjointly, the power to decide on the votes of any State." He maintained that "the Electoral College was as independent of Congress as Congress of them." Floyd re-echoed the same sentiment. Mr. Clay appeared to hold the opinion, but did not express it very strongly, that the power to count the votes was in the two houses, and that they have the power to decide what are votes. He opposed the right of the President of the Senate to decide upon the legality of votes. He raised the question, in what manner the two houses should act in such cases, and made this remark: "One house would say the votes ought to be counted, the other that they ought not, and then the votes would be lost altogether." But that he did not intend to assert that this was in accordance with the Constitution is evident from further statement that "there was no mode pointed out in the Constitution of settling litigated questions arising in the discharge of this duty; it was a casus omissus." The House agreed to the joint resolution.

In the joint convention the votes of all the other States were first counted, and when the certificate from Missouri was produced, Mr. Livermore, of New Hampshire, objected to receiving the votes "because Missouri is not a State in the Union." The two houses separated, the Senate retiring to their own chamber. In the House the question of counting the vote of Missouri was discussed, and Mr. Randolph argued that there was no power in the House to reject the vote of Missouri, or to state it hypothetically. "Your office," said he, "is merely ministerial. It is to count the votes, and you undertake to reject the votes." On motion of Mr. Clay, the subject was laid on the table, and the two houses reassembled, when the vote was announced in accordance with the joint resolution, the statement being made so as to avoid a declaration whether the votes of Missouri had or had not been received and counted.

This election was followed by further attempts to amend the Constitution, and in March, 1824, Mr. Van Buren, from the Judiciary Committee, reported a bill to which reference has been quite frequently made. This bill provides for the manner of making objections in joint convention to a count of any vote, and, stripped of the details of legal technicalities, the point of the bill is found in the following sentence: "If the two houses have concurred in rejecting the vote or votes objected to, such vote or votes shall not be counted; but unless both houses concur, such vote or votes shall be counted." The bill was passed by the Senate and sent to the House, where it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It was reported back by Mr. Webster with an amendment, and it was committed to the Committee of the Whole House, where it was never considered. The most trouble-some complication which now arises—the return of two Electoral votes from a State—had not then been suggested and was not provided for in the bill.

THE TENTH PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

The President and Vice President for the tenth term, which began in 1825, were John Quincy Adams and John C. Calhoun. An attempt was made in the Senate, in the beginning of February, preceding the count, to provide, by joint resolutions, for the consideration of objections to the counting of any votes. The resolution failed. The two houses met in the Representatives' hall, and the vote was counted, when it appeared that there was no election of President by the people, no one of the candidates having received a majority of the votes. John C. Calhoun had a majority of the votes for Vice President, and was declared elected. The House proceeded immediately to an election of President, the three highest candidates being Andrew Jackson, John Quincy Adams, and William H. Crawford. Thirteen States voted for Adams, and he was elected on the first ballot. This election was also followed by the certificate of the Vice President giving the result of the count, and stating that he had opened all the certificates and counted all the votes. In May, 1828, an effort was made to examine the legality of the certificates of the votes which had been given in the previous elections. Mr. Wild, who offered the resolution, claimed to have discovered many irregularities, which he summed up, showing that if the provisions of the Constitution had been enforced there would have been many changes in the count, and Mr. Clay, who was the fourth on the list of candidates, would have been third, and thus eligible for election by the House. The resolution for an investigation was laid upon the table by a vote of 80 to 37.

THE ELECTION OF ANDREW JACKSON.

In counting the Electoral vote for the eleventh term, in 1829, when Andrew Jackson was elected President and John C. Calhoun re-elected Vice President, there was no question of dispute. All the proceedings were substantially in the same form as in previous elections, but the certificate of the Vice President does not appear in the record as having been directed to be made as heretofore, and such a certificate was made it does not appear on the record of Congress, and must be looked for elsewhere.

THE SECOND TERM OF ANDREW JACKSON.

No question was raised in respect to the Electoral vote for the twelfth term, for which Andrew Jackson was re-elected and Martin Van Buren was chosen Vice President. The State of Michigan sent its Electoral vote for the first time, and this raised again the question presented by the admission of Indiana in dispute. But it was also alleged that certain Electors were not appointed in conformity with the provisions of the Constitution, and a resolution of inquiry as to the facts and the proper action to be taken was passed in the Senate. It appeared from the investigation that a Federal office-holder has been chosen Elector from New-Hampshire, two from North Carolina, and one from Connecticut, and perhaps some others. The committee were of the opinion that the provisions of the Constitution should be rigidly enforced, but they were not able to say what tribunal would be competent to decide the qualifications of Electors. The joint committee recommended for action with respect to the State of Michigan, and the vote of that State was stated hypothetically, as in the case of Missouri. There was no election for Vice President by the people, and the Senate proceeded to elect, choosing Richard M. Johnson, of Kentucky.

FOUR COUNTS MADE WITHOUT DISPUTES.

In 1841, when the votes for William Henry Harrison and John Tyler were counted, there were no questions of dispute. The defeat of Van Buren was overwhelming, and every State seems to have given its Electoral vote in a regular and legal manner.

The count of the vote for the fifteenth term, beginning in 1845, was begun without any unusual incident or dispute. Polk and Dallas were elected over Clay and Frelinghuysen, and no question was raised in regard to the legality of any one of the Electoral votes.

The Electoral vote for Taylor and Fillmore in 1849 was also counted according to the forms that had become established, and the proceedings were without incident or any dispute.

In the next Electoral count, for the seventeenth term, in 1853, when Pierce and King were elected, there was also no question raised, and the usual forms were followed by the two houses.

THE EIGHTEENTH ELECTION OF PRESIDENT.

When Buchanan and Breckinridge were chosen for the eighteenth term, a question arose concerning the count of the vote of Wisconsin. The usual preparations were made for the meeting of the two houses, and, when the count had proceeded to the end, Mr. Letcher arose and inquired what ought to be done respecting the vote of Wisconsin, which, it appeared, had not been cast on the day prescribed by law, but on the following day. The tellers made their report to the presiding officer, including the vote of Wisconsin in the count. Mr. Letcher then inquired whether it was in order to move to exclude the vote of Wisconsin. The presiding officer, Mr. Mason, decided that the motion was in order, and he immediately announced the vote and declared James Buchanan and John C. Breckinridge elected. At this point Mr. Marshall, of Kentucky, objected to the ruling of the Chair, and declared that he understood the Chair to have ruled that it was within the competency and function of the President of the Senate to open certificates and count the votes, thereby giving to the President of the Senate the function of counting. He disputed that the President of the Senate had such a right under the Constitution. The presiding officer decided that the function of the two houses had ceased with the announcement of the vote, but the uncounted vote was again, at a time in the joint convention, until at last, on motion of one of the Senators, the two houses separated. After the houses separated there was an earnest discussion in the House, in which Marshall, of Kentucky, was prominent. The position which he assumed was, in effect, by the President of the Senate had no function except to open all the certificates, and in ordering the tellers to count the vote of Wisconsin he had practically assumed the power to determine whether it was the vote, which power, Marshall claimed, belonged to the two houses.

In the case of a vote disputed upon the count of a State disputed like that of Wisconsin, was referred to and pointed out, and it was generally agreed that there were no provisions in the Constitution which covered the case. The whole subject of disputed elections and the dangers which would arise from the lack of any method of settlement was freely canvassed in the debate. The result, however, was that no action was taken with respect to the vote, and it was counted for Fremont and Dayton. The decision was allowed to stand as made by the President of the Senate All those who claimed that the two houses should decide the question of the vote of Wisconsin held that there must be concurrence to sustain any objection that is made. The debate being ended, the lesson was forgotten, and no measures were taken with respect to a provision for a similar contingency in the future.

THE ELECTION OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

The history is now brought down to the election of Abraham Lincoln, for the nineteenth term in 1861. This election is a great epoch in the history of the country, but the counting of the Electoral vote had no special significance. The proceedings were conducted with the usual routine, and the Vice President declared in the presence of the two houses, the election of Abrahem Lincoln as President, but one of them was so grossly irregular in form that it was not accepted. A total of nine votes in this count 17 votes altogether were rejected under the operation of the twenty-second joint rule. The result was not in any manner affected by the settlement of the questions raised, but the dangers of a disputed election were brought somewhat more vividly to view than in any previous election; so that the first session of Congress and the sessions following to the present time have been marked by the efforts to provide for a just and equitable decision of disputed questions concerning the Presidency, the history of which efforts and discussion is fresh in the minds of the people.

A YOUNG LADY'S HAIR TAKES FIRE.

The Omaha (Neb.) Bee, of the 9th inst., says:

"Miss Krug, aged 16, daughter of Mr. Fred Krug, the brewer, met with an accident last evening, which came very nearly resulting fatally. She was engaged in her room in washing her hair with a preparation containing alcohol; she was leaning forward, with her long hair thrown over her head, and while in this position, came in contact with a lamp in the hands of a girl, and the alcohol ignited and blazed up. Miss Krug threw the burning hair over her head, so that its long growth served to cover the clothes of the corpse, and extended in a straight line far to the right of it; in its midst is suspended, and firmly attached, a small bronze sword on which is soldered a beautifully-polished, perforated object of rock crystal in form of a jar with two silver handles. It is pierced in its entire length by a silver pin. With it was found a small object of rock-crystal in form of a tunnel, with four concave sides. To the right and left of the body lay long bronze swords; to the left was also a long bronze knife. All these weapons had probably been suspended on a belt of embroidered work, which had disappeared. The sheaths of the swords had been of wood, much débris of which remained. All the sheaths had been gilded, and had in their entire length been adorned with round buttons of gold, which showed many different sorts of magnificently engraved spiral lines. The handles of the swords were plated with gold and covered with splendid engravings. Instead of the large wood and alabaster buttons of the handles the sword-handles of this body seem to have had at their extremity richly ornamented golden-plates, 10 of which were found close by it. Each of them is three and four-fifth inches long and one and three-fifth inches broad, and every one of them represents a large cow-head with long horns and immense eyes; further, a lion pursuing a stag with such velocity that his four legs are in the same horizontal line with the body; the stag, though still running at full speed, feels that he is lost, turns his head toward his merciless pursuer and looks at him full of anguish. To the reverse side of these wonderful plates still sticks a good deal of a blackish matter, perhaps a sort of lime, which may have served, I do not know how, to fasten them to the handles. Two plates must necessarily have been required for each handle. To the bronze sword, on the right of the body, was attached a 9 3-5 inch long golden tassel. The massive golden mask, which covered the head of this body, and which I mentioned in my last letter, is 12⅔ inches long and 13⅓ inches broad. It is so thick that the enormous weight, which for ages has been pressing upon it, has made no impression on it. It shows a man's face with large eyes and a large mouth, much resembling the features of the body when first uncovered, and I feel now more convinced than ever that all the golden masks faithfully represent the features which they cover. In fact, a single glance on these splendidly-made masks must convince everyone that they are real portraits and not ideal types. The golden breastcover of this body, which I likewise mentioned in my last letter, is 14 2-5 inches long and 8 4-5 inches broad. At a distance of hardly more than one foot to the right of the body I found 11 bronze swords, of which nine had more or less suffered from moisture, but the other two were well preserved. One of them had the enormous length of 3 feet 1-3 inches, the other 2 feet 5-3 inches. With the swords I found four sword handles, with richly-ornamented golden plates, several golden tubes with remnants of wood, 124 large, beautifully engraved, round gold buttons, two of which were of enormous size, while there was only the size of a franc. Futher, six large, splendidly ornamented gold buttons in form of crosses, three of which are three inches long and two and a half inches broad. These buttons consist either of flat pieces of bone covered with golden blades, and in this case they have invariably been pasted on the golden embellishments on sword sheaths or other objects, or they consist of real bone buttons, resembling our present shirt buttons, and covered with gold blades, and in this case they must have been used on clothes. The indescribably magnificently engraved ornamentation of both these kinds of buttons can leave no doubt as to the high importance attached to them. I may add that not only all the golden buttons in grose farm, but also all the very large, round golden buttons have on their lower side a flat piece of bone.

There was further found to the right of the body a very large golden drinking-cup, with one handle. It is no less than 6 inches in diameter, and 5 inches in height; it has two parallel horizontal rows of ornamentation, of which the lower one represents fish-spines, the upper one something resembling windows. There was also found a very large one-handled golden goblet, which, in addition to ornaments decorated with two parallel horizontal rows of beautiful spiral lines, in which occur a large number of that curious cross which is so frequently met with in the ruins of Troy, and which is thought to be the symbol of the holy fire, the Arani of the Brahmans. (See my "Troy and its Remains," p. 271, New York, 1875, and 353.) Finally, I found a third golden goblet, ornamented with three lions, which are represented as running with great velocity. There were also found three silver drinking cups and fragments of several silver vases, some of which show spiral ornaments; finally, a large drinking-cup of alabaster, measuring 10½ inches in height, and 4 4-5 inches in diameter.

The mud in the first sepulchre, whose site had been marked by the three slabs, with bas-reliefs, was also covered with a thin layer of Nonsense, having dried up in the present fine weather, I continued to excavate there, and struck at last the bottom of the sepulchre, which is on the north-east side 17½ feet, on the south-east side 17 feet deep, cut out in the rock; but from these points the slope so abrupt that, although the upper breadth of the sepulchre does not exceed 10 feet 6 inches, yet the greater part of its west side needed only to be cut 11 feet deep into the rock to make a level bottom. Besides, this west side of the tomb is close to the Cyclopean wall, which bears the parallel rows of large calcareous slabs, and rises vertically over the sepulchre. For all these reasons it appeared to me, in first excavating this tomb, that the wall passed through its north-west angle, and I wrote this on the 15th of November to a venerated friend, who published my letter in the Times. But by propping with planks the earth and stones which had fallen to the wall and overhang the north-west corner of the tomb, I have cleared the latter now in its entire length, and visitors will perceive that the wall does not pass through the tomb, and merely touches its brink in the north-west corner. The length of the tomb is 21 feet 6 inches; its breadth at the bottom is 12 feet, and thus 4 inches less than at the top. The four inner sides were lined with a 3 feet high and 2 feet broad Cyclopean wall, and this latter had been superposed by a slanting wall of schist plates, which reached to a height of 6½ feet, and protruded on all sides by 3 feet on the bottom of the tomb. The pieces of schist had been cemented with clay. In contradistinction to the other sepulchres, the bottom of this tomb was not covered with the usual layer of pebble-stones; the three bodies which the sepulchre contained lay at a distance of three feet from each other, and had been burnt in the very same place where I found them. This is proved by the following evidence: On the rock below and around the corpses and to the right and left of them on the walls, and by the undisturbed state of the ashes with them. Only with the body which lay in the midst the case was different. The ashes has evidently been disturbed; the clay with which the bones and the upper part of gold were covered, and the layer of pebble-stones which covered the clay, had with this body been removed. As, besides, it was found almost without any gold ornaments, it is evident that it had been rifled. My opinion is also confirmed by the 12 golden buttons, the small golden blades, and the numerous small objects of bone which had been found, together with small quantities of black ashes, at different depths below the three sculptured tombstones which adorned this sepulchre. It is further confirmed by the fragments of the usual Mycenæan pottery of later times, which in this tomb were mixed up with the very ancient remains. Most likely some robber, body has sank here a shaft to examine the tomb, has struck the body in question, has recklessly plundered it, and, from fear of being detected, has carried off his booty in such a hurry that he only thought of saving the large massive gold ornaments, such as the mask, the large breastcover, the diadem, and the bronze swords, and dropped, in remounting to the surface, many of the smaller objects, such as the 12 golden buttons, &c., which I found at intervals in digging down. There can be no doubt that this larceny occurred before the capture of Mycenæ by the Argives, about 468 B. C., for if it had occurred when the later Greek city was built on the top of the prehistoric ruins, I should also have found fragments of Greek pottery in the tomb, but of these I saw no vestige.

The three bodies of this tomb lay with their heads to the east and their feet to the west; all three were found much reduced in size, and evidently to have been squeezed with force into the small space of only six feet, which was left for them between the aforesaid walls; the bones of the legs, which are nearly uninjured, are really of enormous size. Although the head of the first man was covered with a massive golden mask, he still was mutilated in a way as to being exposed to the air, and but a few bones could be saved besides those of the legs. The same was the case with the second body, which had been plundered in antiquity. But of the third body, which lay at the north end of the tomb, the vandals who had broken into it had carefully preserved under its ponderous golden mask; there was no vestige of hair, but both eyes were perfectly visible, also the mouth, which, by the enormous weight that had been pressing upon it, was wide open and showed 32 beautiful teeth. By these all the physicians who came to see the body were led to believe that the man must have died at the early age of 35. The nose had entirely gone. The body having been too long for the space between the two inner walls at the north, its head had been pressed in such a way on the breast that the upper part of the shoulders was nearly in a horizontal line with the vertex of the head. In spite of the large golden breastplate, as little had been preserved of the breast that the inner side of the spine was visible in many places. In its squeezed and mutilated state the body measured only two feet four and a half inches from the top of the head to the beginning of the loins; the breadth of the shoulders did not exceed one foot one inch, and the breadth of the stomach one foot three inches; but the gigantic thigh bones could leave no doubt regarding the real proportions of the body. Such had been the pressure of the rubbish and stones that the body had been reduced to the thickness of one inch to one and a half inches. The color of the corpse resembled very much that of an Egyptian mummy. The front of the man was ornamented with a golden mask, with a golden diadem. A larger one was lying on the right eye; I further observed a large and a small gold leaf on the breast, below the large golden breast cover.

The news that the tolerably well preserved body of a man of the mythic heroic age had been found covered with golden ornaments spread like wildfire through the Argolid, and people came by thousands from Argos, Nauplium, and the villages to see the wonder. But, nobody being able to give advice how to preserve the body, I sent for a painter to get at least an oil painting made, for I was afraid the body would crumble to pieces. But, to my great joy, it held out for two days, when a druggist from Argos, Spiridon Nicolaou by name, consolidated it by pouring on it spirit, in which he had dissolved sandarac. Thus I have now strong hopes that it can be saved, the more so as it can be lifted with an iron plate, there being no pebble-stones below it."

Dr. Schliemann resumes his narrative under date Nov. 5:

"The now nearly mummified body was decorated with a four foot long, 1¾ inch broad golden shoulder-belt, which, by some cause or another, was not in its place, for it new lay across the loins of the corpse, and extended in a straight line far to the right of it; in its midst is suspended, and firmly attached, a small bronze sword on which is soldered a beautifully-polished, perforated object of rock crystal in form of a jar with two silver handles. It is pierced in its entire length by a silver pin. With it was found a small object of rock-crystal in form of a tunnel, with four concave sides. To the right and left of the body lay long bronze swords; to the left was also a long bronze knife. All these weapons had probably been suspended on a belt of embroidered work, which had disappeared. The sheaths of the swords had been of wood, much débris of which remained. All the sheaths had been gilded, and had in their entire length been adorned with round buttons of gold, which showed many different sorts of magnificently engraved spiral lines. The handles of the swords were plated

DR. SCHLIEMANN'S EXCAVATIONS.

THE FIFTH AND LAST SEPULCHRE—MORTAL REMAINS DISCOVERED — NUMEROUS GOLDEN ORNAMENTS FOUND—THE CAPTURE OF MYCENÆ BY THE ARGIVES—ARRIVAL OF THE TREASURES AT ATHENS.

From the London Times.

Dr. Schliemann writes under date Mycenæ, Dec. 2, 1876:

"For the first time since its capture by the Argives, in 468 B. C., and thus for the first time since 2,344 years, the acropolis of Mycenæ has got a garrison, whose watch-fires by night time can be seen throughout the whole plain of Argos. But this time the object of the occupation by soldiery is of a more peaceful character, for it is merely intended to inspire awe among the country people, and to prevent them from making clandestine excavations in the tombs or to approach the latter while I am working in them.

Already, while engaged in the excavation of the large fourth tomb, the results of which I have described in my last two letters, I explored the fifth and last sepulchre, which is immediately to the north-west of it, and which had been marked by the large slab, with the bas-relief of two serpents, and by an unsculptured tombstone, both of which were 11⅔ feet below the surface of the mount, as it was when I began the excavations. At a depth of 10 feet below the tombstones, or of 21 feet 8 inches below the former surface, I found two evidently much older unsculptured tombstones, and only three feet four inches below these I found a tomb 11⅔ feet long, 9 feet 8 inches broad, which had been cut out in the calcareous rock to a depth of only two feet, so that its bottom is 27 feet below the former surface of the mount. In variance with the other tombs, the four inner sides of this sepulchre were not lined with any walls; but, as usual, the bottom was strewn with a layer of pebble stones. On this I found the mortal remains of only one person, who, like all the other bodies, had been burnt on the precise spot where it lay. This was proved as well by the calcined pebbles below and around the corpse as by the undistorted position of the ashes with which it was covered, and, finally, by the marks of the funeral fire on the rock walls. Around the skull of the body, which was, unfortunately, too fragile to be saved, was a golden diadem, with impressed ornaments representing in the middle two suns, the remaining space being filled up with spiral ornaments. On the right side of the body I found a lance-head, with a ring on either side; further, two small bronze swords and two long knives of the same metal; on its left was found a golden drinking cup, with one handle the ornamentation of which represents two horizontal rows of fishspines and one row of arrowheads. With the swords were found many small rage of beautifully woven linen, which doubtless belonged to the sheaths of these weapons. In the same tomb was found a six and a half inch high, hand-made, light-green ornamented vase, with two rows each of three protruding humps; further, a light red vase, ornamented with black spiral lines, and with two female breasts surrounded by circles of black strokes.

The mud in the first sepulchre, whose site had been marked by the three slabs, with bas-reliefs, was also covered with a thin layer of Nonsense, having dried up in the present fine weather, I continued to excavate there, and struck at last the bottom of the sepulchre, which is on the north-east side 17½ feet, on the south-east side 17 feet deep, cut out in the rock; but from these points the slope so abrupt that, although the upper breadth of the sepulchre does not exceed 10 feet 6 inches, yet the greater part of its west side needed only to be cut 11 feet deep into the rock to make a level bottom. Besides, this west side of the tomb is close to the Cyclopean wall, which bears the parallel rows of large calcareous slabs, and rises vertically over the sepulchre. For all these reasons it appeared to me, in first excavating this tomb, that the wall passed through its north-west angle, and I wrote this on the 15th of November to a venerated friend, who published my letter in the Times. But by propping with planks the earth and stones which had fallen to the wall and overhang the north-west corner of the tomb, I have cleared the latter now in its entire length, and visitors will perceive that the wall does not pass through the tomb, and merely touches its brink in the north-west corner. The length of the tomb is 21 feet 6 inches; its breadth at the bottom is 12 feet, and thus 4 inches less than at the top. The four inner sides were lined with a 3 feet high and 2 feet broad Cyclopean wall, and this latter had been superposed by a slanting wall of schist plates, which reached to a height of 6½ fe

MR. WOOD'S REMARKABLE DISCOVERIES AT EPHESUS.

DISCOVERIES AT EPHESUS, INCLUDING THE SITE AND REMAINS OF THE GREAT TEMPLE OF DIANA. By J. T. WOOD, F. S. A., Fellow of the Royal Society of British Architects. With numerous illustrations from original drawings and photographs. Boston: JAMES R. OSGOOD & Co. 1877.

This stately volume is one of the epoch-making books of the age, and it gives the author an honorable place and name among the brave and sagacious men who have made the old times new by bringing the buried treasures of ancient kingdoms to light. Dr. Schliemann and Mr. Wood are the latest heroes in this work, and they have associated their names forever with the lost wonders of Troy and Ephesus. They met together at Ephesus Dec. 16, 1870, when, according to Mr. Wood's journal, "this day the celebrated Dr. Schliemann, the discoverer of Troy, visited these excavations. He was kindly enthusiastic in his congratulations when he planted his foot upon the 'veritable' pavement of the Temple. He had been digging in the Troad, but had been stopped by the Turks, and he now asked my opinion, whether he could get a firman to dig in the Troad in search of the City of Troy." Mr. Wood had no grounds for encouraging him with hopes of success in that quarter, yet the plucky German did not falter in his purpose, but declared that he was ready to spend 10,000 francs on the enterprise out of the income that he had earned in business. They have both succeeded in spite of the Turks, and Troy and Ephesus have been apparently restored to the world by them. Without disparaging the worth of the services of the explorer of Troy and their bearing upon history and poetry, we may call attention to the discoverer at Ephesus as surely not second to them in their relations with civilization and closely connected with empires greater than Homer knew, and with writings that have moved and educated mankind far more even than his matchless Iliad.

Mr. Wood is not a master of style, and he makes no claim to literary accomplishment; but his book hardly loses interest or value on that account. He tells a manly, straightforward, wide-awake story of what he has seen and done and dared and suffered; and his narration is more suggestive of ideas to a poetical imagination or a philosophical thinker than if he were constantly striving to soar above the facts of the case into the region of speculation, as explorers less substantial and more airy have done. He has kept at his work for nearly 11 years under the auspices of the British Museum. He began his excavations in May, 1860, and closed his labors March 25, 1873. His narrative is divided into two parts. The first part giving in six chapters a brief history and description of the City of Ephesus, and accounts of his excavations of the western and northern suburbs of the Odeum, the Great Theatre, various public buildings, and his search for the Temple of Diana, ending with his discovery of the outer inclosure or peribolos wall of the temple, in May, 1869. In the second part affairs take a new turn with him, and he went back to Ephesus from England the next September, with new heart and hope, as well as with new appropriations from the trustees of the British Museum, who saw new satisfactory results from their outlay, and no longer were alarmed at the old proverb, "a fool and his money are soon parted." His account of his further explorations occupy six chapters, which are given severally to seasons of 1869-70, 1870-71, 1871-72, 1872-73, and two chapters to 1873-74.

Mr. Wood, in a certain sense, had the whole field before him, for the great City of Diana was a desert, so far as population was concerned, and even the modern Turkish town of Ayasalouk could not boast of more than 20 regular inhabitants, while the stamp of desolation was upon its great roofless mosque and the malaria had driven the people to the mountain village of Kirkenjee, on the east side of the plain. Yet the stout Englishman made the best of his situation, and without help from Ruskin or Sir Uvedale Price on the picturesque, he kept his eyes open to the rare beauty of the region. He found great loveliness in Ephesus, surrounded as it is with mountains, which, with their broken forms, showed in every direction a varied and picturesque sky-line. The many quarries, with their steep sides and ragged edges, and the wild vegetation, changing leaf and colors with the seasons, added much to the landscape. In the Spring, the yellow blossoms of the angelica covered Mo unt Coressus with their splendor, and threw cheering light upon the scene from every point of view. He was never weary of this companionship, and often as he scolds about the Turks and Greeks, he never seems to have complained of the silent and majestic mountains, which had a new smile for him every hour under the rays of the unwearied sun. He found, indeed, some tenants of the soil that were not in keeping with the beauty of the landscape, and the approach to the great Temple of Diana brought a host of snakes to light in such numbers as to stop work on one of the places of excavation. These snakes are generally harmless, but there are some whose bite is venomous, and even fatal, and the asp is one of these, a serpent who, perhaps, has claim to a place in the ruins of the city where Antony once reveled with Cleopatra as his guest. Scorpions were found in plenty under the loose stones of Castle Hill. Of tortoises there was no lack, and bats and owls abounded among the ruins. On the banks of the River Cayster the splendid kingfisher, called the Smyrna kingfisher, was often to be seen, and the careful otter built his house in that river without alarm from passing inhabitants. Nature as well as man relieved the dullness of the solitude, and when the frequent thunder-storms and heavy rains abated with the coming of Midsummer, the whistle and wheeze of the locomotive insisted on bringing modern times to the diggers' ears, and the Smyrna Railway, without quoting Scripture as authority, gave unmistakable hints that the age of Diana had yielded to the age of Watt and Stephenson and Fulton.

Mr. Wood's various adventures are best told in his own language, and they cannot be given without quoting a large part of his narrative. He had trouble from every quarter—from the Turkish Government and the Turkish outlaw; from property-owners, who dogged his steps and saw robbery and trespass in every shovelful of earth that was turned up in that wilderness; and from prowlers who were on the lookout for plunder, and who had little scruple as to taking life. Yet he kept on to the end, and in spite of sickness as well as opposition. His English pluck stood by him well in all his difficulties, and he did not hesitate to face a set of rogues who looked at him with mischief in their eyes and knives in their hands; nor was he afraid to procure the arrest of a squad of thirty or forty ragamuffin laborers who were suspected of murder. He suffered his share of grief from the contractors, who annoyed him more seriously than brigands, and interfered with his promised supply, now of wheel-barrows and now of bread. He lost but one of his workmen by accident, a black Mohammedan laborer, who was suffocated by the caving-in of sand, and whose death is tenderly described. He came near losing his own life by pulling down an embankment, and the delight in his discovery of the Temple was somewhat dashed by an injury to his foot, which he was unable to use for several weeks. Yet here his good angel turned up in the form of his brave and devoted wife, who no longer allowed him to go to his work at Ephesus alone, but went from her quarters in Smyrna to share his hardships and to help him in his work. This incident is one of the pleasantest parts of the narrative, and good Mr. Wood may be quite sure that American readers will not make fun of the honest fondness in which he speaks of the charms of this excellent woman's company. He says that he has since regarded his lameness as one of the fortunate incidents of his life. His wife went out to the excavations in his stead while he was disabled, and examined the trial-holes and gave instructions to the workmen. This she did, although, as "the holes were in many cases from 20 to 24 feet deep, it was neither a pleasant nor an easy task for a lady to approach their edges among the loose earth, stones, and débris, and stooping over, to examine them thoroughly on all sides of their lowest depths." When Mr. Wood grew better, and was able to mount his horse, she walked by his side to the works, and helped him in every possible way. She, too, made his little home a different affair, and although his lameness brought with it fever and general infirmity, he was kept up by her good cheer. He says how much she was to him in language more creditable to both parties than if it were said in the exquisite verse in which many very fickle men eulogize womanhood, thus: "The prolonged test to which our new mode of life was subjected served only to prove the advantages as well as the pleasantness of the new arrangement, and from that time Mrs. Wood was my constant companion at Ephesus." Visitors, also, had the advantage of her presence and housekeeping; and the happy husband writes from the fullness of his heart, not without thoughts of the roast beef of old England: "Before this happy change I was in the habit of bringing with me from Smyrna a piece of cold roast meat." Sacred is dinner to John Bull, and its sacredness does not lessen his love for home and wife who gave it a local habitation and a name and a grace.

We confess to sharing Mr. Wood's convictions of the importance of his wife; and Mrs. Wood, with her companion, daughter of the Consul of Smyrna, Miss Cumberbatch, who united in giving charm to society in that desert place, and in ministering to sickness and suffering, not only nursing their own friends, but dressing the broken or bruised heads and limbs of the ugly Greeks and Turks who had been at savage flatcuffs with each other, and needed only deadly weapons to make the fray fatal—these two ladies, we say, had a good right to hold up their heads in that ancient city. Ephesus came to grief precisely because such women were not there with their purity, their courage, their faith and charity. Great are the good wife and the true maiden as powers of reconciliation and Christianity. They rule home and society, and educate the young. In the long run they make men do very much as they say, according to the old proverb: "What woman wills, God wills." History has turned over a new leaf since worship ceased to be offered in that temple, and Paul brought the new religion there; and the change came in good part because woman's will would have it so. The American men, the rough as well as the gentle, are ready to give three cheers for those two true women in old Ephesus, and to go with one heart and voice for Mrs. Wood and Miss Cumberbatch, with their words and works of humanity in that metropolis where Diana was worshiped in the temple and Cleopatra was adored in the palace.

The results of Mr. Wood's discoveries are great, when measured by the amount of his labors for more than 10 years on the site of a great city, which was to be sought for often by digging 20 feet or more beneath the surface, and the results are great when estimated by the number of antiquities found. In working around the temple, he examined earth to the extent of 132,221 cubic yards, the bulk of which had been wheeled out of the site. The dimensions of the large oblong area dug out were, in length, 500 feet, width, 300 feet, and in depth, 22 feet to the pavement of the earliest temple. Besides this, there was a wide cutting, exposing a long reach of the portico surrounding the temple and part of the Doric building on that site. It was a great matter, too, to explore the peribolos wall or temenos of the temple, a work which Augustus built in the year 6 to restrict the limits of asylum for criminals. This wall Mr. Wood traced 1,000 feet northward and 500 feet eastward, and his remark that it "was a most disgraceful piece of work—probably contract work"—is quite comforting to those of us who are tempted to think that such bad jobs are peculiar to our new Republic, and were unknown to the great Cæsars.

Estimated by their antiquarian results, Mr. Wood's researches are likely to be of great value, and the sculptures and relics of the great temple that he has sent to the British Museum go far to restore the building to the annals of art as well as to throw much light upon history. It seems that the last three temples of Artemis, or Diana, at Ephesus, were not only built upon the same site, but were of the same dimensions on the ground, and that the first temple was begun about the year B. C. 480-460; the second was built upon the same foundations about the beginning of the fourth century, and was destroyed on the day of Alexander's birth; the third soon took its place under the superintendence of the Macedonian architect Dinocrates. This third building contained most of the Ephesian sculptures and fragments of architecture now in the British Museum. It was said to contain within the shrine works of Phidias and Praxiteles. The temple was 163 feet wide and 342 feet long, with eight columns in front, and two ranks of columns all around the exterior cella, which was 76 feet wide and contained the altar and statue of the goddess. The columns were 100 in number, 6½ feet each in diameter and nearly 60 feet high, in the Ionic style. The cella was apparently open to the air like the Pantheon at Rome. The illustrations of the building given in the book are numerous and instructive, as well as handsome, and Mr. Wood uses his relics to help him out to a restoration of the design in a way that proves his faithful research and his ability to call good artists to his aid.

Many thoughts are suggested by this unearthing of that old pagan cathedral city of Asia Minor, where the city treasury, the patriotic sentiment, and the national feeling centred under one roof, and called the people to one standard of loyalty. It is well to remember that there Christianity mustered its forces under such leaders as Paul and John and Timothy, and that the New Testament bears certain traces of thought that was schooled in Ephesus and led by Diana's Temple to more fervent trust in the city of God. There, too, we find early traces of the Mary-worship that so tempted the Church to idolatry of a woman; and there in recent centuries the Turkish sway has restored the old Asiatic sensualism without its idols, and denied to woman the place that belongs to her, not as the slave nor the goddess of man, but his companion and helper. The statue of Diana seems to have been an old Asiatic monstrosity, as such popular idols usually are, and little in the true Greek spirit. The beauty of the building tried to make up for the grossness of the idol, and remains to protest against the image.

This work of Mr. Wood has a place in universal history as part of the powerful and persistent reaction of the Western civilization against the Eastern Zoroastrianism which has been going on from time immemorial. We find traces of it in old Homer, and although he was generally thought to have been a native of Smyrna, he yet has the Western feeling, and his Iliad shows forth the triumph of the European Greeks over their Asiatic kinsmen. It is virtually Europe that prevails in Achilles and Minerva over Paris and Venus; and in the contrast and contest between these two goddesses Homer tells much of the old quarrel between Europe and Asia. Athens and Ephesus show something of the same relation, and the comparatively little Parthenon in great part still stands as if to celebrate the superiority of the Athenian Pallas over the Ephesian Diana and her utterly ruined temple. This Diana herself, as already hinted, was not the European Queen of the Hunt, but more the Asiatic Astarte, who had much of Aphrodite in her make. St. Paul, in some respects, takes up very much the burden of old Homer, and preaches the victory of European liberty and law over Oriental despotism and tradition. The Epistle to the Ephesians, in spite of attacks upon it by such stubborn theorists as Baur, is proved by careful scholars like Meyer, to be from the Apostle's own pen, and to be a noble assertion of the rise of the new Christendom, with its living temple, and the downfall of the old Paganism.

Mr. Wood, indeed, belongs to the great company of Western men who have gone Eastward to open the old tombs and shrines, and to raise the dead beliefs, usages, and personages to life again. But the dead always go with the living, and these old monuments being dead yet speak, and speak for Western civilization against Oriental torpor. Compare his map of Ephesus with that which Riepert of Berlin made after his explorations in 1841-42, and the progress is remarkable. If we go on at this rate for years to come, the close of the century will see the buried Empires of the East laid bare to the eyes of the West, and lessons of civilization taught by the explorers from the solemn wisdom of the old temples and tombs. Mr. Wood carried more meaning and promise with him to Ephesus than he knew or told, and his British seamen and mechanics were of themselves heralds of the new times to come for European and American arts. The tough blue-jackets from the warship Terrible, who came to help him to move his ponderous marble treasures, with a hearty cheer over their work, and with their sentimental songs, led by a chosen chairman and joined in by the general chorus, after work was over, were, alike in their muscle and their music, a prophecy of the destiny of the East and its fatalism and voluptuousness in the great reaction from the West that is now going on.

Mr. Wood speaks well of the Americans, and fond as he is of naming the royal and noble visitors who came to view his explorations, he is very hearty in his tribute to the intelligence and courtesy of our countrymen who looked in upon his researches. Americans will welcome his noble volume, and give it honorable place in public libraries and private homes. It demands respect from the lovers of beautiful art, and from the friends of learning and civilization. The bright and honest narrative, the many and rich illustrations, and the more than 200 pages of antiquarian inscriptions, make the book in its way a precious treasure, even far beyond the price, large as it is, $20.

THE BOOKS OF THE PROPHETS EZEKIEL AND DANIEL.

A COMMENTARY ON THE HOLY SCRIPTURES. By JOHN PETER LANGE, D. D. Vol. XIII. Of the Old Testament.

I. THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET EZEKIEL. Theologically and Homiletically Expounded by FR. WILHELM JULIUS SCHAEDER, B.D., late of Greifswald, Prussia. Translated, Enlarged, and Edited by PATRICK FAIRBAIRN, D.D., of Glasgow, Rev. WILLIAM FINDLAY, M. A., of Glasgow; aided by Rev. THOMAS CHEVNE, M.A., of Larkhall, and Rev. SINCLAIR MORTON, M. A.

II. THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET DANIEL. Theologically and Homiletically Expounded by Dr. OTTO ZÖCKLER, Professor of Theology in the University of Greifswald, Prussia. Translated and Enlarged by the Parish of St. Magnus, for instance, nine priests had to share the 900 francs accorded by the State. Village priests, it was said, might be assisted by the rich, but the peasant did not like being indebted for his religion to the Squire. Endowments were also lacking, threats of concealing or preventing the increase. The charge for chairs in the Paris churches, which was represented as a grievance to the poor, was the fault of the illiberality of the State and the Municipality. The 200 francs extra allowed to priests with two parishes was swallowed up in traveling expenses. It pained him to dwell on such facts, showing the ingratitude of the nation toward the clergy. As for the bitter remarks often made upon them, they might say, "Frenchmen, we have done among you many good works. For which of those works do you stone us?' Was it because for centuries they had cultivated and embellished France that they were refused an asylum? Poor, noble, devoted, they were always to be found where there was grief to console and services to render, and the respect the French clergy received abroad was due to their bearing the impress of all the good sentiments and virtues of their country. The speech was warmly applauded by the Right, and there was a reply to it. Proceeding, after separate votes, the Senate, by 213 to 42, added 200,000 francs to the grant for priests. The Chamber, it should be observed, had agreed to an increase of 200,000 francs last year, but had rejected the Government proposal of double that sum. The Senate also doubled the 20,000 francs augmentation accorded by the Chamber for Protestant Pastors, and, by 179 to 61, it reinserted the seminary scholarships.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF ENGLAND.

At the recent annual prize distribution at the Liverpool College, the Right Hon. R. A. Cross, M. P., Home Secretary, who presided, and who made the awards, said: "I believe that there is a general impression that in the schools of Germany boys are better taught than in England. However that may be, I am quite certain of this, that in the schools of England the boys are infinitely better educated than in the schools of Germany. [Applause.] What do I mean by education? I don't mean examination or teaching. I mean training rather than teaching; drawing out, extraction rather than examination. The object of education must be to fit you, in the best possible way for all your future life, not only in this world, but in the next. It is the drawing out of you of all the good that in you is. It is the teaching you to teach and discipline yourselves. It is not mere scholar learning; it is far beyond that, to show you what life is, what you are, and how you can live, not only for your own benefit, but for that of your fellow-creatures. It is to shew you how you are to face difficulties, how to meet all that comes across you in your path of life, and how to act up to your duty. It is to teach you how to conquer yourself, because it has been well said:

Self-reverence, self-knowledge, self-control,
These three alone lead to life's sovereign power.

And, therefore, in our great English schools it is to my mind of the highest importance that we should look, not simply to the teaching, but to the education of the boys, and the way in which they are brought up. When I talk of education, I don't mean scholarly learning. I value that as highly as any one. And, with regard to the question of learning, although I am quite aware that, owing to the exigencies of the times, it is quite necessary that attention should be paid to the modern part of our schooling, yet I am quite certain that for the special training of any mind, there is no school training equal to the old classical education of our public schools."

A LADY ELOPES WITH HER COACHMAN.

The Aberdeen Herald says: "A rumor that has proved too true has been for some time current in Elgin regarding the flight from the town of a lady and her coachman. As far as can be gathered the facts of the case are these: A young father of about 30 years of age has been for about 18 months employed as coachman to the daughter of a late much-esteemed gentleman, a lady of about 36 years of age, who resided with her mother in Elgin. For some time past it has been conjectured that familiarity had sprung up between the lady and her coachman. The lady moved in the highest circles in Elgin society, while her man-servant was, in a former part of his life, a plowman. Since receiving or gaining the good graces of the lady, the coachman has been even more looked after in the way of comfort than he was formerly, having, it is understood, been led to alter his style of living higher than that of the common unregarded coachman. The two seem to have concocted their plan of flight very systematically and unsuspiciously. The coachman sold the horse and carriage in Elgin, and a fine retriever dog of his mistress in Forres. The lady did quite two creep away that it was a day or two before the affair got wind. It is believed that the coachman started first and took train to Aberdeen, followed thither in a day or two by the lady, and both left Aberdeen for Edinburgh together. It is now reported—with what truth we cannot venture to say—that the runaway couple have got married in London, or some other part of England. The lady is possessed of considerable wealth, and is believed to have been a very successful speculator in the money market."

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST.

A DEFENSE OF SAN FRANCISCO.

CRITICISM OF THE LETTERS ON THE SOCIETY OF THAT CITY—THE VIEWS OF A RESIDENT ON THE SUBJECT.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

As it cannot possibly be your wish to open your columns for the propagation of slander against the wealthy and intelligent citizens of San Francisco, and to make your paper the vehicle of unprovoked attacks upon our most prominent citizens, I venture to draw your attention to correspondence from this city, recently published in THE TIMES, and republished here to the great annoyance of many highly-respectable ladies and gentlemen whom your correspondent, "Gar," has attacked with great bitterness.

It can readily be imagined that in the early days of California history, when men were making huge fortunes in a day, by the discovery of gold in the mountains and streams, and when it seemed that by the touch of the magical wand the horny-fisted miner was transformed from impecuniosity to the possession of great wealth, that in some cases the treasures of the earth proved to be a greater curse than a blessing, and that the impulses of the enriched were not always in the direction of the highest good; but with even that much conceded any intelligent visitor to San Francisco will to-day readily see that the men of fortune have not deteriorated by the sudden attainment of great wealth; but on the contrary, that they have risen to a higher social life than what can be seen elsewhere within the same number of years of change. Great rascals of men and the basest of women have lived in palatial residences, and have furnished their homes with all the elegancies which the highest artistic skill could produce, and still they have groveled in the vilest debasement—all that the world knows; but it is equally true that the comforts of home, its rich adornments, its abundance of everything to gratify the taste, to please the eye, and to instruct the mind have always the tendency to elevate the moral nature of those whose good fortune enables them to call them theirs. No visitor here can pass through the streets running from the crowded thoroughfares of commerce without being struck with the great number of princely residences of capitalists, and the multitude of elegant homes of business and professional men. In no city of its age and population are there such evidences of substantial wealth and domestic comfort among so many, and the whole entourage bespeaks to the observer a high character of advanced civilization which is more enjoyed than paraded; yet "Gar," in attacking "society" here, represents that it is marred by the preservation among the ladies of what he calls "long lunches," where the fair sex meet together, and for five long hours—from 2 P. M. to 7 P. M.—"gorge" themselves at "a stand-up-feast," which is "accompanied with an immense flow of champagne, and with a sufficiency of cordials, such as Chartreuse and Maraschino," until the fair creatures become intoxicated. This, "Gar" affirms, is a "feature" of San Francisco society, a relic of past barbarism which "receives the sanction" of the ladies of the highest rank in the city! No doubt "Gar" has been told all that by some one who had an object to accomplish, but for a stranger, the representative of a paper like THE TIMES, to make such a sweeping charge, embracing in its scope ladies of the highest respectability in San Francisco society, and to mention the names of "the McLanes, the Hagginses, and the Tevises" in such a connection, evinces a temerity that is perfectly bewildering.

When a stranger, visiting a city like this, after a few weeks' sojourn, undertakes to write with great particularity and directness the history of men and circumstances for a dozen years before his arrival, and publishes such a history, and lauds to the skies one or two men of great wealth, and of reputably liberal hands, and condemns others who, in some measure, are in the way of the depraised, it is not to be wondered at that the writer's associations are looked up by those who are surprised at his recklessness of attack, for it is morally certain that the stranger himself could not be the author of such personal history as has been published in THE TIMES; and so the universal judgment is that a lady of mere than usual ability is the writer of the attacks upon the ladies of San Francisco and the "long lunch" debauchery. It is due to the accused lady, however, that I should say she denies the imputation, and is very indignant. Be the author who may, the writer has succeeded in creating a good deal of ill-feeling toward the supposed authoress, "Gar," and, not unnaturally, THE TIMES.

AFTER THE MILLIONAIRES.

Senator Sharon and James R. Keene are by the "Gar" letters represented as angels of mercy and general goodness, the very acme of elevated society, and models of chivalry and Christian graces. The Senator is a perfect Cœur de Lion, the embodiment of "courage and self-negation," the Pythias of the late lamented Ralston, who, by the bye, "Gar" could not let escape his stinging pen without charging that all his great kindness to the struggling and helpless was only selfishness, for he "was only kind to those with whom it was politic to be kind." The companion picture to the Senator glorified is "the knightly Jim Keene," whose deeds of charity, high in figure and unlimited in extent, "are placed," says "Gar," "where they will do him the most good, in another world." The Senator and the Knight are unquestionably great men, and deserving of the highest laudations for their many charities, and they have, no doubt, done much toward alleviating distress; but it is doubtful if they ever expected such a dose of appreciation from a stranger. But the bonanza kings—Flood and O'Brien, Mackay and Fair, and Lucky Baldwin, are not in feather with the stranger historian. They have all made millions, but "Gar" sees no goodness in them, and, after a few days' residence in San Francisco, gives his "opinion" frequently and freely upon the struggles for mining mastery between the giant millionaires of the Pacific coast.

"Ralston and Sharon," says "Gar," "had for a time, indeed, contested the supremacy with the bonanza kings, but, finding them too powerful, had yielded the palm and had retired from the mining arena. Messrs. Flood & O'Brien, in pursuing them further, and attempting to ruin the Bank of California and the companies that depended upon its fostering care, committed a crime against the well-being of the community, and, therefore, when they attempted to profit by their success, society rose against them. All-powerful in everything relating to the mines, they found themselves completely ignored socially. They had Billy Ralston's money, they had his life, they had even (I am sorry to write it) his good name, but they could not take his place."

Now as to the facts: Flood, O'Brien, Mackey & Fair are collectively the richest firm on the Pacific Coast; possibly, as individuals, they may each be richer than any other man outside of their own firm. They stumbled upon their good fortune. After their bonanzas were struck, it mattered not if they had never devoted an hour's thought to the mines; they were, as the largest owners of a valuable property, certain to become immensely wealthy. But instead of indulging in extravagances and habits allied to demoralization—it is to their credit and should be to the honor of all in any way associated with them, by business or relationship of blood—these four working men never sought a moment's respite from labor. They had capacity for what they were engaged in, and no human power could prevent them from accumulating great riches. They had no occasion to seek Mr. Ralston's money, life, or position in society. They did not need the first, they could not use the second, and they did not covet the third—they could not. Mr. Ralston had his place and they had theirs—they were not in each other's way. They had a right to establish a bank, as a founder of THE TIMES had the right to start a newspaper. Flood & O'Brien are no more guilty of trying to break the bank of California than THE TIMES has been guilty of trying to break or crush any of the papers in New-York that were in existence before it, or that have flickered out since it was founded. Institutions are like individuals—they have strength at one time and weakness at another. When Flood & O'Brien were erecting their great Nevada Bank, with millions lying idle at their command, unfortunately the Bank of California was at that particular moment heavily laden with difficulties. Its liberal, kind-hearted manager, W. C. Ralston, struggled manfully to preserve its life; but it had to face a crisis and it was conquered. Neither Flood & O'Brien nor any combination on the outside hurt it; its malady was internal. The statement of these facts to-day cannot injure the Bank of California, nor disturb the rest of its former manager, or they would not be written; but they are stated now to meet the babbling, nonsense of an offended writer, who sees but little to commend outside of the glitter of bon ton society, and "hops" in the Palace Hotel.

In this somewhat singular and remarkable city, it is no uncommon thing for ladies of a speculative disposition to seek information on the probabilities of stocks ascending or descending, and regulating their ventures in the "boards" by such kindly extended information, and, of course, there are gentlemen in every country ready to oblige a lady. Flood & O'Brien keep to their offices during the day, and are said not to be communicative, and Lucky Baldwin is equally in disfavor with the inquisitive for much the same reason. The attacks upon them by "Gar" seem all to spring from the same source—the accomplished lady who has lived long in the city, dealt extensively in stocks, and formed her likes and dislikes of millionaires and the ladies of society in San Francisco who do not recognize the sway of her sceptre.

But this has extended far enough. I have exhibited to you, Mr. Editor, the spirit and purpose of the "Gar" correspondence on society and millionaires in San Francisco, and will only make one other allusion to the coarse language used by "Gar" in speaking of Mr. Baldwin, whom he represents to have "the luck of a black cat and the morals and manners of a hog," who "is the completest example of the deteriorating influence of great wealth upon a coarse nature that a moralist or a philosopher could desire, or that even California could furnish."

In reply to this venomous personal attack, it is only necessary to say that Mr. Baldwin has built in this city, during the last year, the most elegant hotel west of Chicago, and the richest and most beautiful theatre in America. No one beholding these can well attribute to the man who approved of their plan and paid for its realization, the harsh, uncouth character attributed to him by "Gar." As a business man he is the soul of honor, and those who have the closest intimacy with him are the loudest in their commendations of his personal character.

Very many of the best people in this city, and many Californians abroad, will, I am sure appreciate the publication of this letter; for whatever California may have been in its early days, there is no better society in the world than there is here to-day, and no men of wealth more enterprising and worthy to be esteemed.

JUSTICE.

SAN FRANCISCO, Tuesday, Jan. 2, 1877.

A FAMOUS AFRICAN EXPLORER.

The Cairo correspondent of Galignani's Messenger writes: "We have, as usual, a miscellaneous assortment of nationalities among the visitors, and chief among the celebrities is Gen. Gordon, fresh from Central Africa, with his intrepid Lieutenants, Gessi and Piaggia, a young lion cub, as large as a Newfoundland dog, and three ebony specimens of young Africa, whose blackness of darkness would render them utterly invisible on a dark night, two boys and a girl. The faces of the boys are hideously tattooed, like ebony carvings, either for ornament or distinction, and they give painful plausibility to the Darwinian theory by their facial outlines. Gen. Gordon is a man of middle height, and compactly but slightly built, and with none of the swagger or self-assertion of the military martinet. His face is round, and his features regular, and his most striking feature, a large, clear, gray eye, is dreamy in repose, but has a kind of introspective look. In repose or in thought you would never imagine him a man of action; but when he warms in conversation, his face lights up with expression, and the resolute mouth and measured accents attest the metal he is made of. Although he buried or invalided all his original associates, his own health seems perfect. Beyond the bronze of African suns he seems so have defied that dry nurse of fevers, and never suffered from any serious illness during his march through that deadly miasmated region. He says with much simplicity that when he went into Central Africa he made up his mind to be ill, and supposes that is the reason why he was not. As he possesses in an eminent degree that talent for silence so commended by Mr. Carlyle, I do not think the geographical societies will be able to catch and exhibit this latest African lion for public benefit. Gen. Gordon has consented to return to Central Africa, to complete his work of organizing the trading posts, to open the trade of Central Africa with Egypt, but will take a month's congé in Europe first. He goes back as Governor-General, and Major Prout, a young American officer, who has been in the interior for two years past, will, it is said, be named Vice Governor-General under him. Gordon is not yet determined who his other companions are to be. If he succeeds in unlocking and availing himself of the wealth of Central Africa, and diverting it into new channels, he will have then given a practical direction to African exploration, which it has hitherto been wanting in, and rendered civilization, slowly, but surely, a path to the heart of that vast and still virgin continent, as barbarous in the days of Herodotus as it is to day."

The President has very properly decided to delay his recognition of the regular Government of Louisiana no longer. The moderation which he has hitherto shown has been misinterpreted and abused. Democratic leaders have been advising the pretender NICHOLLS to seize the State-house and to carry his revolutionary proceedings to the greatest possible length, and this in the avowed interest of Mr. TILDEN, who would be glad to take possession of the United States Government in the same way, if he dared to do so. The President has concluded that matters have gone quite far enough to require definite instructions to Gen. AUGUR, and these have accordingly been given. It remains to be seen how they will be received by NICHOLLS and the White Leaguers; but as to this, there is not much doubt.

The franking privilege is once more brought to the front by a disagreement between the two houses of Congress. When the Senate, last Summer, attached to the regular Post Route bill amendments restoring the Fast Mail service and reviving the franking nuisance, it was thought that the House would gladly agree. But the Democratic leaders were wary. They were not willing to go before the country with such a record. The bill was severely let alone. The House has now refused to accept the Senate amendments, and the disagreement is left to a committee of conference from both houses. The ground of the objection on the part of the House, however, is not that the proposition to restore the Fast Mail and the frank is inexpedient, but that both these are matters of general legislation. So far as we know, the Post Route bill is entirely unobjectionable; possibly its provisions are all important. But there is no good reason why more questionable and debatable schemes should be attached thereto. Much as people may desire the Fast Mail, we presume that nobody outside of Congress would think of coupling with it a restoration of the franking privilege. Let Congress separate the propositions for the establishment of new post routes, the restoration of the Fast Mail, and the revival of the franking privilege. When Congressmen are obliged to vote directly on each of these several schemes, we shall be able to see who is in favor of granting popular requests and who favor an enlargement of Congressional privileges.

There is such a small Republican majority in Florida, on the face of the returns, that the Democratic newspapers intimate that even this ought to be given to TILDEN, as it were too small to keep. But the investigations of the Senate committee very clearly show why the Republicans did not have a majority of 2,000 or more. In one precinct—Waldo—the voting was conducted in such a free-and-easy way that a trainload of passengers passing through the place were invited to stop and cast their ballots for TILDEN; the invitation was accepted with thanks. At another precinct — Archer — the Democrats have declined to produce their voters, when the correctness of the poll has been called in question, though the Republicans have verified their returns and have proved their claims in every particular. Indeed, this is the radical point of difference between the two parties in Florida since the investigation began. The Democrats content themselves with hearsay evidence and much hard swearing. The other party has verified election returns by identifying the voters. But, in spite of the frauds of the Democrats, the returns give the State to HAYES. The evidence shows that Florida is a Republican State, as it has been ever since its reconstruction, and that the reduction of this majority on the face of the returns was the result of a political conspiracy.

In Louisiana, the investigation has been directed to the alleged threats of intimidation, as well as to the frauds on the ballot. Details of the results, so far as the Senate committee are concerned, have already been made public to some extent. Mr. DANFORD, of Ohio, one of the Republican members of the House Investigation Committee, gives a very reasonable explanation of the failure of that partisan organization to find out anything. It was prearranged that the witnesses should not be taken to New-Orleans, or to any central point away from their homes. This would have removed them from the presence of the very men by whom they had been "bull-dozed." They might tell a damaging story. No candid person can fail to see that timid and often-threatened negroes would be kept silent if they were assured that their old persecutors were waiting close at hand to punish them for telling the truth. The Democratic committee of the House refused a change of venue. The case was tried in localities where long experience in oppression had taught the colored man that he could not expect justice.

It is a curious commentary on the shiftlessness of our Municipal Government that yesterday's beginning of street-cleaning excites as much popular interest as if it were a great public benefaction. That the condition of the streets has been disgraceful nobody will deny. That common sense and common usage justify the Police Commissioners in cleaning them most people will admit. The Corporation Counsel has formally certified the legality of this proceeding on the part of the Commissioners. But Commissioner SMITH is reported as being fixed in his opinion that the removal of the snow—if the unwholesome mass may be so called—is clearly illegal. Commissioner NICHOLS asserts that he has been in favor of cleaning the streets, but that he has been opposed by Messrs. SMITH and ERHARDT. The work has actually been begun, after weeks of misery and discomfort have been endured, and each week of delay has increased the difficulty and the expense of cleaning. The grumbling Commissioners undoubtedly regard the proceeding with profound disfavor. If they still think that the streets are being cleaned in defiance of law, they might better resign rather than run the risk of being impeached.

As the struggle over the Massachusetts Senatorship approaches a culmination, the situation becomes simplified. The leading candidates are Messrs. HOAR and BOUTWELL; with perhaps a slight advantage in favor of the former. Friends of both candidates are talking of a compromise man, and Gov. RICE is mentioned as the most likely person to receive a second choice. Ex-Gov. BULLOCK, who has of late been severely independent, is a possible candidate; and Congressman SEELYE is another possibility, but a little more remote. Both of these gentlemen possess eminent abilities, and either of them should be acceptable to that non-party element in the Democratic party in Massachusetts which was supposed to have influenced the nomination of CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS for Governor, last Summer. It is this element which is expected to combine with a certain number of Republicans, in case of a failure to agree on a strict party man, and elect a compromise candidate who shall be wholly "unattached." This view of the contest makes it an unusually interesting one. But it is quite likely that the question will be settled in the Republican caucus.

THE DISPUTE ABOUT THE PRESIDENCY.

We had hoped that we should not be under the necessity of troubling our readers with further discussion of the much-befogged but really very simple question of how the President-elect shall take his office. But the reports which have recently come from Washington as to what the committees of the House and Senate may agree upon, concerning the action of Congress, make it proper to reopen the subject and to call attention to the points which are important and conclusive with reference to it. As an aid to the reader's understanding, we present in another column a clear and full analysis of the report of the House Committee on the Electoral Vote. This analysis will enable any one who chooses to see exactly what has been done since the adoption of the National Constitution in respect of those points now in dispute which have hitherto been raised, and have been acted on. The report is from a Democratic committee, and its plain agreement with the Republican doctrine is, therefore, the more noteworthy.

The points which are now in discussion are somewhat numerous. Who shall "count" the votes? Can the House alone reject a vote? Can the House alone decide when there has been no election, and, consequently, when it has itself the power of choice? Can Congress, or either branch of it, go behind the certificate of the Executive of a State to determine who are its Electors? If the certificate can be thus passed by, what is the limit of Congressional investigation? Can the qualifications and eligibility of individual Electors be inquired into? All these points have been introduced in the debates in the Senate and the House. All of them are more or less directly connected with the facts in the case. But all of them, and all others we have seen stated are, subordinate in importance to the question, What are the powers and duties of the President of the Senate when two sets of differing certificates are placed in his hands? It is not doubted that it is his duty to "open the certificates;" but what shall he do where there are double certificates? On the answer to this question depends the relevancy of all the others. If it is answered in one way, and what we are perfectly clear is, under the law and on the facts, the only right way, then all other questions vanish. If it is answered in the opposite way, then there is, so far as human foresight can penetrate, no path out of the labyrinth of doubts and difficulties into which the Government will be plunged.

To us it is plain that, when the President of the Senate has received more than one set of certificates from any State, it is his right and duty, as the law is, to decide which one he will open. The Constitution requires him to open the certificates. It also provides in a general way what those certificates shall be. The acts of Congress direct how the certificates shall be brought into the hands of the President of the Senate. Now, with two sets of certificates in his possession, and with an obligation laid upon him by the Constitution to open them, it is necessary for him to decide which are the genuine certificates. Obviously only one set in each State can be so, and it is the genuine ones alone that he is authorized to open. In deciding this important question, he is not to be guided by whim or prejudice or partisan feeling. Least of all is he to be guided by chance. His duty is to exhaust all accessible means to discover which are the genuine certificates, and then to open these, as the Constitution directs him to do. This is what is required of him; it is all that is required of him in respect of the opening, and it is a duty which he cannot, as the law stands, evade or relegate to any other person or persons. In arriving at his conclusion he is at liberty, and it would be natural for him, to give great weight to the investigations and declarations of the body of which he is a member and an officer.

When the President of the Senate shall have opened the genuine certificates, it remains that they shall "then be counted." On the interpretation of this provision a great deal of superfluous acumen has been wasted. The "counting" is a very simple process, consisting of adding up the votes announced in the certificates, and giving out the result. In the great majority of the elections which have taken place, this has been done by the President of the Senate, aided by Tellers, and the various questions which have arisen at the time of the counting have, almost without exception, been in nowise like those now in dispute. Congress has fallen into discussion over new States whose admission was in doubt, and over States in rebellion or not yet represented in Congress; it has disputed regarding the regularity of the Executive certificate, (which question would arise in regard to Oregon,) and once has rejected the vote of Louisiana wholly on the ground that there had been no legal election. But it is plain that of these questions some cannot arise, and none are likely to be of any consequence after the President of the Senate has discharged the duty laid upon him by the Constitution, and opened the certificates which are genuine. When these are counted, it will be found very easy to determine who is President of the United State. The notion, therefore, that it is necessary to resort to the lot, or to take the Justices of the Supreme Court out of their legitimate sphere of duty, in order to settle the question, is not well founded. It is only necessary for the President of the Senate to do the duty imposed on him by the Constitution, according to the best information he can secure; we shall then have a straight and sure and legal way out of the half-imaginary difficulties which Mr. TILDEN'S ingenuity and that of his lawyers have provided for us.

WHO SHALL LAY THE TAXES?

The idea of a representation of property in some department of the City Government, so long advocated by this journal, is meeting with unexpected welcome. No one who proposes a radical improvement or change in our political machinery expects even a hearing for a considerable period. There are always so many sources of profit and of personal ambition connected with old abuses that the first attack on them is against heavy odds. Then "prescription" has almost as much power here as under an aristocracy. The phrase that "the people will never vote to diminish their own power" has obstructed many a proposed and needed reform in this country. But the Anglo-American is especially guided in his political affairs by experience and common sense. He will vote to curtail anything which, on the whole, seems for the highest good. Most of the recent amendments to the State Constitutions are in the direction of limiting the right of the people to do as they choose with their own, and of limiting many of their former privileges. The recent laws in this State in regard to the Judiciary are another instance of a conservative drift, whereby the terms of certain Judges are lengthened, and the places made more independent. It will not be a long period before the popular election of the Judges will also be limited, it not done away with. A reaction is evidently at hand against the extreme views as to popular government which prevailed here a generation since. The practical mind of our countrymen is disposed to take things as they are, and to legislate accordingly.

On an a priori view, founded on pure philosophy, it might be thought that a municipality whose officials were chosen by universal suffrage would manage its own pecuniary affairs with economy and discretion. But experience shows us that in the large and wealthy towns the mass of voters are ignorant and without property, while those who own property are too busy to be skilled in the profession of politics, and that thus the care and management of immense pecuniary interests fall into the hands of people without means or business experience. The natural effect of persons without money or commercial training handling the expenditure of millions is a wild extravagance and a waste which does no one any good. In fact, this effect of the rule of the ignorant is the greatest curse possible to the working classes. While it robs the wealthy, it lessens the productive power of the whole community. An obvious corrective, if not complete remedy, for this evil has been often indicated—the giving the property-holding classes some check over the expenditure of public moneys.

To the surprise of many, a Democratic Mayor, for the first time in the history of his party, suggests this remedy in a very mild form by recommending a fifth member of the Board of Apportionment in this City, to be elected by the tax-payers. The Municipal Society goes further, and recommends the passage of the following resolution:

"That the Judiciary Committee be requested to prepare and promote, in the name of this society, the passage of a law, and, if need be, of a constitutional amendment, which shall enable, and provide for, the election by the tax-payers of cities and villages of a municipal body which shall have the authority of determining the amount of taxes, the salaries, and the expenditures in and for the local purposes of such cities and villages respectively."

Still another bill, to be presented to this Legislature, provides that the Mayor shall appoint twelve prominent citizens, taxpayers, to join with the heads of departments to settle the rate of taxation. The Commission on Municipal Reform, appointed by Gov. TILDEN, under the Chairmanship of Mr. EVARTS, it is believed, will, in their forthcoming report, recommend some form by which the tax-payers shall have some direct control over the expenditure of moneys, whether in villages, towns, or cities. Unless the community prefer unlimited taxation and bankruptcy, they must resort to some means of this nature for the checking of boundless waste of property by those who have none. In the interior and western portions of the State, especially in the villages, almost every voter and politician is a property-holder and tax-payer. There is in consequence, as a general rule, economy in municipal affairs. When we come to the larger towns or to the suburban villages, such as those on the Hudson River, we find extravagance, waste, and endless profusion, and here the property-holders are few or busied in their own affairs, while the great multitude of voters are landless and without means.

Let the masses hear, as in Yonkers, that there is a proposition to build boulevards and employ laborers, or as in Troy, that large sums are needed for public works and for bounties which shall benefit the working class, and under the lead of skillful demagogues, they will heap up taxes to an amount which will burden property for a generation. It is true that the demagogues usually possess some property, but the political influence they gain compensates them for their losses under taxation, and they are willing to permit the rich to be fleeced. The height of the absurdity is seen in our own City, where the demagogues of an ignorant and irresponsible multitude manage an income equal to that of many a monarchy, and taxation is stripping the most admirable commercial centre of the country of its advantages, and bringing everything down to stagnation and poverty. The remedy proposed should not alarm the most radical admirer even of the contrât social. One branch of the City's Government could still represent "the people," and be at once its scene of political training and the voice of its desires and aspirations. This branch could discuss the Electoral Colleges, or the Democratic platform, or whatever it would; but when it came to borrowing money, or building avenues, or laying taxes, or improving docks, or running railways, or managing finances, the tax-paying and commercial and financial men who formed the other branch would bring the experience of years and the interest of those who must pay the taxes to these questions, and decide upon them. Why is not this common sense, and, at the same time, true democracy?

THE UPRISING AMONG THE GREEKS.

The telegraphic dispatch seems confirmed by the European mails that the Greek Chamber of Deputies at Athens had voted the moneys necessary to raising a force of 200,000 men. This has come about after a prolonged dispute between the peace and war parties, and a resignation of the Ministry in the interval. News also reaches us of a vigorous presentation to the conference by the Greeks of Florence, Macedonia, and Epirus, of their own wrongs and sufferings, and their equal claim with the Slavonians to protection and justice from the European powers. A portion of these four million Greek subjects of the Porte have also petitioned the Sultan with regard to their right to share in the new constitutional privileges, so glibly promised on paper by the authorities of Constantinople to the subjects of Turkey in Europe.

It is well known to all studying affairs closely in Eastern Europe that a deep and fervid movement is agitating a race not much given to any enthusiasm except for gain. Two great races have impressed themselves on the past of the Grecian people with ineffaceable effect—the Slavonians and the Ottoman Turks. To both they owe nothing but injury and degradation. The raids and invasions of the Slavonians have, however, passed away, and do not rankle in the popular memory. There is, too, a certain tie between them of a common religious faith and common suffering under the Mohammedan oppressor. Still their interests clash, and in the new modeling of Europe, so near at hand, the Greeks fear the Russians. Some even avow that they "would rather have the wolf than the tiger for a neighbor." For the Turks the genuine Greeks could and ought to have no feeling but unmingled opposition and detestation. If ever one race has bequeathed a righteous legacy of hate and eternal hostility to another, the Ottoman has to the Hellene. The wounds inflicted by war may be healed and forgiven, fields may be cultivated and houses rebuilt, the dead even may be forgotten. But when the conqueror deliberately degrades and debauches the children of a race, and transmits his conquest to new generations of debilitated and degraded youth—perhaps also perverted in childhood from the faith of their fathers—he has inflicted a wound which time does not soothe, nor humanity cause to forgive. Under such injuries, the highest principle of a race urges a never-dying hostility and a hate which generations of submission should not lessen. Such wrongs have been inflicted in the past by the Ottoman Turks on the Hellenes, and it may be confessed that the race has never recovered from the effect of them. Their salvation has been that, unlike the Bosnians, the great mass never bowed the knee to the Prophet for the sake of land and honor. They remained Christian under all temptations to Islamism. And however that form of Christianity may have become debased and perverted, it included many germs of truth, which have sprung up into genuine religious life, and to which the race was faithful in its night of captivity. Bosnia has been unspeakably degraded by the apostasy of some of its gentry. Greece remained true to its religion.

In the ambitions and passions of race in Eastern Europe, the Greeks may well urge that they have claims and rights as well as the Slavonians. If the North Russian can urge his relationship to the South Russian, oppressed by Turkey, as his ground for allying himself with his cause, and perhaps for eventually including him under the Pan-Slavic Empire, why should not a nearer kindred—the Greeks of oppressed Epirus, Thrace, and Macedonia—urge the same grounds for alliance and annexation? The one claim is at least as good as the other. The modern Hellene, seeing the Italians unite, the Germans forming their Empire, and the passionate efforts of Slavonians for the great Pan-Slavic Empire of the future, might well dream of a modern Greek Kingdom. Why should these remains of a great race be shut up in a narrow peninsula, when they have four millions of their kindred so near them on the Continent, and the great Greek capital of the past almost within reach?

Such desires and ambitions ferment now in the Greek brain. If the sick man is to be despoiled, they hope to come in for some of his effects. If Europe is to permit Turkey in Europe to come to an end, why should not they regain their old territory, and at length be allowed, as the best compromise, to hold the City of the Golden Horn as a neutral city and free port for the world? These ideas are not at all impossible of realization in the disturbed future, so near at hand. It may be that Russia will find an unexpected ally in the Hellenic kingdom, and the Greek and the Slavonian plant together the cross over the crescent on the brilliant Greek capital, so long held by the Mussulmans.

THE NEW STAR.

All our readers have seen, of course, the notices of the new star which appeared in the constellation of Cygnus, on Nov. 24, and then rapidly dwindled away so as to become invisible to the eye within a fortnight. It is no unprecedented thing. There are eight similar events previously recorded. The first was the star which appeared in the year 134 B. C., and is said to have led HIPPARCHUS to construct his star catalogue, the first catalogue ever made, and one of the most important foundation-stones of modern astronomy. The second appeared in the reign of the Emperor HONORIUS in the year 389 A. D. It was near Altair, the brightest star in the constellation of the Eagle, and for three weeks rivaled Venus in brilliance. The third and fourth are reported in the years 945 and 1264 respectively; the accounts however, are not sufficiently definite to make it absolutely certain that the objects recorded were not comets. The most remarkable and famous of all the "temporary stars," as they are called, was the fifth, which appeared on the evening of Tuesday, Nov. 11, 1572, and was carefully observed and described by TYCHO BRAHE. At first it was as bright as Venus, and for a week or so increased slightly, until it could be seen in full daylight. Then it slowly declined, vanishing from sight after sixteen months. At first it was colorless, then it assumed a yellow tinge, afterward became red, like the planet Mars, and finally was of a dull leaden hue, like Saturn.

The sixth of these objects was hardly less remarkable. It appeared in the constellation of Ophiuchus, blazing out suddenly on the evening of Oct. 17, 1604, nearly as bright as Venus. Like its predecessor, it slowly faded away, and vanished before a year had passed. KEPLER observed it, and has left a full account; he ascribed it to the ignition of a portion of the ethereal medium pervading space, and remarked that the solar corona, seen in the eclipse of 1605, was caused by the existence of the same substance around the sun—a remark surprisingly in accord with the newest outcome of astronomical discovery. The seventh and eighth are recent. The seventh was observed by HIND in May, 1848, also in the constellation of Ophiuchus. At its brightest it was only of the fifth magnitude—too small to attract much notice—and it disappeared within a month—disappeared, that is, from unaided sight; for, with the telescope, it is still visible as a little star of the thirteenth magnitude, more than 3,000 times less brilliant than when at its maximum. The eighth was first seen on May 12, 1866, in the constellation of the Northern Crown, as a star of the second magnitude, as bright as the Pole-star. It faded to the limit of vision within about ten days, but is still visible with the telescope as a star of the eleventh magnitude—which is more than 5,000 times fainter than the second. Before it became too faint, though unfortunately several days after it passed its maximum, Dr. HUGGINS obtained an observation of its spectrum, which was characterized by the presence of the bright lines of hydrogen, and some other fainter lines which he failed to identify.

The star of last November was discovered by SCHMIDT, of Athens, who is celebrated for his map of the moon, and his extensive researches on variable stars. When he first saw it, it was of the third magnitude, but seems to have increased a little in brightness at first for a few hours, though it never reached the second. He immediately telegraphed his discovery to LITHOW at Vienna and LEVERRIER at Paris. It is a pity that the information was not more widely diffused; the English and German astronomers do not seem to have been notified, and the news did not reach this country till Dec. 18, long after the star had ceased to be visible to the naked eye. Unfortunately, also, the weather was very bad, so that even those who did know of its existence, could do but little. The only spectroscopic observations of much value, as yet reported, are those of CORNU, the distinguished French physicist. He observed a faint continuous spectrum marked with numerous bright lines, and he determined the position of eight of them with considerable accuracy—and they seem, all eight, to coincide with the eight most conspicuous lines in the spectrum of the solar chromosphere. (The "chromosphere," it will be recollected, is the name given to the envelope of glowing gases which surrounds the "photosphere," or luminous surface, of the sun.) Three of the lines are the well-known lines of hydrogen; one seems to be the mysterious D3, which is supposed to be due to some unknown solar metal for which the name of Helium has been proposed; one appears to be the line of magnesium; one, and one of the most conspicuous in the spectrum of the star, coincides exactly in position with "1474," the green line which characterizes the spectrum of the sun's corona; the remaining two fall in with two conspicuous lines of the chromospheric spectrum. "To sum up," says CORNU, "the light of the star seems to possess exactly the same constitution as that of the solar envelope known as the chromosphere."

Probably this one observation, uncorroborated, cannot be considered as proving beyond question this identity; but the mere probability of such an identity is most suggestive. What are we to think? Is it likely that the tremendous convulsions which set "the worlds on fire," and cause suns as large as ours to blaze out almost instantaneously with light and heat increased many thousand fold, are simply, in a large way, occurrences of the same kind which, on a small scale, we see continually going on upon the surface of the sun? Are we to suppose that some day our own sun, in consequence of the forces now operating, may burst out with similar fury upon his attendant planets? Are the beautiful phenomena which we watch with our spectroscopes and admire from day to day only symptoms and precursors of catastrophe to come? In the present state of science we cannot tell. It is quite possible that entirely different causes, some of which are within the reach of surmise, and some probably wholly beyond the range of our conceptions, may be answerable for the appearance of these "new stars;" still, judging from the best light we yet obtain, it also seems possible, and even not improbable, that the forces and materials at work are the same we are already familiar with in the sun.

FOUND AT LAST.

The tailed men have been found at last. Ever since the days of HERODOTUS there have been people who believed in the existence of a nation decorated with tails, although no traveler ever succeeded in penetrating into their country. This want of success was due to the vague and wandering character of that country. At one period it was popularly supposed to be in the region of the frozen ocean; at another it was confidently located in China, and during the last century the tailed men were believed to reside in the heart of Africa. Just as soon as an explorer reached their alleged country, they silently flitted away to some more distant land, and thus uniformly succeeded in eluding all pursuit, and in preserving their privacy unimpaired.

At last, however, a Wesleyan missionary who has been engaged in a professional tour through the South Sea Islands has run the tailed men to the earth on the Island of New-Ireland. He found that they corresponded closely to the description given of them by imaginative travelers. They were, of course, a savage race, inhabiting dark and difficult forests, but they kept up the good old custom of their forefathers by piercing small holes in their arm-chairs and piano-stools for the accomodation of their tails. These tails are described as being not more than from three to four inches in length, and are hence of little use in point of flies. Still that they are true—not to say ower true—tails, no anatomist can honestly deny, and we are thus compelled to admit that the venerable legend of the tailed nation has a substantial basis of fact.

It will not do for skeptics to assert that these tailed men are nothing more than a new species of ape. Their humanity is conclusively proved even by the few facts that we know about them. Do apes carry about with them camp-chairs with perforated seats? Do apes distill illicit whisky, and beat their wives with real clubs? Do apes practice tobacco-smoking as a profession, and compel their females to cut kindling wood and carry in all the coal? That these are among the habits of the tailed men is an unanswerable proof that they have risen above the plane of the brute, and developed the most characteristic attributes of man. No doubt they are the connecting link between apes and men, but only blind prejudice can ignore their essential humanity, and class them with the orang-outang or the gorilla.

It was the opinion of Lord MONBODDO that originally all men possessed tails, but that they gradually wore them off by persistently sitting on hard substances, such as the rural district-school bench. The new discovery shows the soundness of Lord MONBODDO'S judgment. Why is it that one race of people alone has preserved the primeval tail? Evidently because they have cherished it with the utmost care, and designed their household furniture with a constant aim to its accommodation. Had our immediate ancestors used perforated chairs, and steadfastly refused to sit down upon anything else, Lord MONBODDO would never have had occasion to trace the decline and final falling off of the luxuriant tails of prehistoric times.

Now that it is demonstrated that tailed men are not the idle dream of the poet's dainty fancy, it is not impossible that unexpected revelations of the existence of contemporary tails may be made by bold and honest scientific men. It has been frequently suggested that Lord MONBODDO wrote with a degree of earnestness only to be fully accounted for upon the hypothesis that he was writing of matters within his own personal knowledge. If we can imagine a man secretly possessed of a tail, and writhing under the belief that he was in that respect a lusus naturæ, we can understand why he should write a book to prove that the tail is a proper attribute of humanity. If such was Lord MONBODDO'S condition, he might naturally have become a sort of reversed fox, anxious to impress upon his fellows that tails should be worn by all intelligent and cultivated men. If he really had a tail, his conduct is easily explicable, and the intense earnestness with which he wrote is seen to be entirely natural and appropriate.

A similar train of reasoning explains the ardor with which the Darwinian hypothesis has been urged by certain scientific persons. If they are in the habit of wearing surreptitous tails, which they dare not openly acknowledge, they would naturally seek to educate public opinion up to the point of recognizing the tail as a manly and honorable appendage. In order to do this, their most efficient plan would be to convince us that we are descended from the apes, and that the loss of our tails is a matter to be regretted, since it places an obstacle in the way of readily demonstrating our simian origin. When every one should have been induced to adopt this theory, the time would be ripe for the discovery that Professor So-and-so has a well-developed three-inch tail, and is thus entitled to be regarded as a special authority upon all questions connected with the descent of man.

It is by no means certain that the tail is a rarity in modern society. Being, as it is, under the ban, no man with a tail would be willing to confess its existence. Such a peculiarity would admit of easy concealment among all civilized races. It is a solemn thought that not only the leading advocates of Darwinism, but even our best and most intimate friends, may have secret tails. The world may think them gay and happy, but the heart of him who has a concealed tail knows its own bitterness. For such the discovery of the tailed men of New-Ireland is the dawn of hope. As our intercourse with this strange tribe becomes closer the prejudice against tails may vanish, and the day of which Lord MONBODDO dreamed, and for which the Darwinians have sighed—the day when tails shall become the bridge to social distinction—may arrive even during the lifetime of the present generation.

It ought, perhaps, to be added, that the traveling Wesleyan missionary has not actually seen the tailed people with his own personal eyes, but has gained his knowledge of them from intelligent natives of the usual South Sea pattern. There is no doubt, however, that these natives told the truth, for he expressly asserts that they are cannibals. Let us, then, give him due credit for the discovery of the tailed nation, and for whatever beneficent results may flow therefrom.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

ITS FAITHFUL PORTRAIT DRAWN BY MR. WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON.

In his letter, read at the late convention of colored citizens of Rhode Island, Mr. William Lloyd Garrison says:

This is another dark period in American history. Fiery portents are in the sky, and thunders are uttering their voices. Masquerading is in the service of loyalty and liberty par excellence, rampant sedition and bloody usurpation stalk unwhipped of justice at the South, overthrowing all constitutional safeguards, perpetrating all manner of atrocities upon those whose enfranchisement was intended as their protecting shield, making malignant proscription and murderous outlawry the methods to hold absolute dominion, standing with the deadly shot-gun in hand at the cross-roads to prevent colored voters reaching the polls except at the peril of their lives, stuffing the ballot-boxes to any extent deemed necessary to outnumber by actual count the votes legally cast, and defiantly proclaiming that the administration of public affairs must be exclusively in the hands of the whites. It is a mocking evasion to say that these scenes of terrorism are witnessed only in certain sections where the relative political strength of the whites and blacks is nearly equal, and that "order" prevails wherever the whites are strongly in the ascendant numerically, for the methods of intimidation and repression vary according to local condition, and essentially in Virginia, Alabama, and Georgia as in South Carolina, Mississippi, and Louisiana. "Order reigns in Warsaw," but that means omnipresent and omnipotent absolutism. And "Freedom shrieked when Kosciusko fell." Under a rational Democratic Administration, at this hour, there would be no recognition of any other than "a solid South" of Tilden and Hendricks, and at that call what jubilant yells would resound throughout rebeldom! The colored people are mystified in regarding the Democratic Party as their relentless enemy—at all times, under all circumstances, in every issue, and to the full extent of its supremacy. Ruled by the slave power while slavery existed, ever ready to make any concessions demanded by it, in sympathy with the rebellion from the time of the firing upon Fort Sumter until the surrender of Lee, opposing every measure necessary to the success of the loyal cause, condemning alike the proclamation of emancipation and the constitutional amendments in furtherance of the rights of all classes—it still retains its base subserviency to the South; and, deaf as an adder, it will not hear; blind as a bat, it will not see; insensible as a stone, it will not acknowledge anything of wrong done to Southern freedmen, but treats with levity and contempt every statement made by them concerning the manifold sufferings they are fated to endure. It has not one drop of democratic blood coursing in its veins; but as a servile, loud, impudent, and unscrupulous livery of the court of heaven to serve the devil in, so this party, professing to be animated by the spirit of genuine democracy, is as shameless in its recreancy as it is hypocritical in its claim. If the Republican Party has not done all that could be desired to secure fair treatment for the colored population at the South, it certainly has been owing not to a lack of intention or disposition so much as to the formidable difficulties that have stood in the way, in consequence of the divided state of popular sentiment. Politically speaking, it presents incomparably the best record of any antecedent party in power. It has carried all the great measures to emancipate the enslaved and establish freedom and equality throughout all the land; and, except trivial cases of a seeming lack of backbone among some of its professed members to the contrary, its face is still to the foe, and the hope of a change for the better at the South lies in its continual administration of the National Government. Happily, nothing is so bad as was the old slave system. There is a bright as well as a dark side to contemplate. God still reigns, and justice shall yet be done. Be not despondent, but hopeful to the end. Faithfully yours,
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON.

The following letter was received from Mr. Wendell Phillips:

BOSTON, Jan. 1, 1877.

DEAR FRIEND DOWNING: A sprained wrist hinders my writing at length. Such a meeting as you tell me of must do good. But the cloud is so dense one knows not what to advise. I like the line Hayes holds—the old Republican one—which means a just nation and perfect protection to all races; so I cling to him and his side. If his rival succeeds, we must gird ourselves for another grapple with caste. If Tilden wins, it is by rum in New-York and revolvers in the South. Yours, &c.,
WENDELL PHILLIPS

JUSTICE TO A DEAD MAN.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE LATE W. B. ENGLISH AND HIS CONNECTION WITH THE WESTERN SISTERS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Never have I seen more incorrect statements than those made by the various New-York dailies in their biographies of the late Miss Lucille Western, the actress. Only one—THE TIMES—stated her age correctly, and all have united in heaping unjust reproach upon her former step-father, W. B. English. Except THE TIMES, all give the year of her birth as 1843, which would have made her 15 years old when she appeared in New-York in "The Three Fast Men." She was at that time a woman of 24. THE TIMES also states that "in 1853 or thereabouts" her mother "married a dishonorable manager, W. B. English," who introduced the sisters to the public in the above-named play. The truth is that W. B. English married their mother as long ago as 1853, if not prior; for from that time for years after Mr. English managed the Portland (Me.) and Worcester (Mass.) theatres, and their appearance in the "Three Fast Men" was more an individual act of their own than of Mr. English. Mr. English was not known as a "dishonorable manager." The writer, though young at that time, knew him well, and he made heroic attempts under adversity to establish and maintain the legitimate drama in Portland, at the old theatre in Union street until it was burned down in the Winter of 1855-6, producing such stars as Mrs. Farren, Messrs. Wyzeman Marshall, Proctor, and other celebrities then in the zenith of their powers. He was known in those provincial cities as a quiet, respectable, and honorable man, formerly connected with the Boston press, and doing his utmost to establish the legitimate, and I well remember his production of "Macbeth" at the old Portland Theatre, in the Winter of 1854, with Mrs. Farren as Lady Macbeth, supported by Wyzeman Marshall. The élite of the city attended, and applauded the production as it deserved. During all these years, the two sisters, Helen and Lucille, had every opportunity and advantage possible for the development of their abilities. But they did not evidence the possession of any serious ability—Lucille appearing frequently in such plays as "Satan in Paris," and "Asmedeus," and Helen as merely a lay figure. When these sisters appeared in "The Three Fast Men" they had arrived at maturity, and were beyond Mr. English's control, though doubtless he lent himself to their success as far as possible. The authority of a step father, as against that of their mother and their own desires and caprices, was much too weak to render him responsible for their after career, and while no generous man will withhold admiration for the physical beauty and wild energy—and pity for the unfortunate career—of the late actress, it is most unjust to lay the responsibility of those misfortunes on her dead step-father. The papers may continue to state that she was born in 1843 if they wish, but every one in the theatrical profession or elsewhere, who is acquainted with her life, knows that at her death she was 43 years of age.

NEW-YORK, Sunday, Jan. 14, 1876.

THE STEAMER NEWPORT STILL AGROUND.

NEW-HAVEN, Jan. 14.—A determined effort was made on Saturday at high water to float the steamer Newport, which is grounded in this harbor. Empty barges were placed around her under the guards to raise her, while a steamer and two barges pulled until the hawsers parted, without effect. She will probably remain in her present position until the next perigean tide.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

THE ATTITUDE OF GERMANY—THE DIVISION OF BULGARIA INTO TWO PROVINCES PROPOSED—THE TURKS STILL STUBBORN.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 14.—A denial is given to the rumor that Baron von Werther had made a threatening declaration indicating a change of attitude on the part of Germany. An official telegram from Berlin likewise denies that Germany has assumed an attitude less favorable than before to a peaceful arrangement.

LONDON, Jan. 14. A dispatch from Constantinople says it is stated that the final communication to be made to the Porte at Monday's sitting of the conference will make no mention of a gendarmerie, the division of Bulgaria into two provinces, or the confinement of Turkish troops to certain garrisons, and will considerably modify the suggestions relative to the international commission and the appointment of Governors of provinces. At the last meeting of the European plenipotentiaries, the Marquis of Salisbury spoke in favor of bringing the conference to a close, while Gen. Ignatieff recommended further concessions. Gen. Ignatieff, at an interview with Midhat Pasha on Saturday, mentioned the concessions proposed by the powers. He suggested that the gendarmerie would be composed of Mussulmans, instructed by foreigners in the Turkish service, and that the international commission should be a mixed body of Ottomans and foreigners. Midhat, however, did not agree to these concessions, considering they were an attack on the independence of the Empire. The European Plenipotentiaries were to meet, and the Turks were to hold a Cabinet council, to-day. Lord Salisbury visited the Sultan to-day. Intelligence from Constantinople, up to a late hour to-night, represents the Turks as apparently still stubborn.

LONDON, Jan. 15.—The Standard's special from Constantinople reports that Salisbury's interview with the Sultan, yesterday, was very satisfactory. A Vienna dispatch to the same paper says war stores have been sent by eight steamers from Odessa to Poti. In the event of war, hostilities will probably commence in the Caucasus. Further advices from Prague represent that Gen. Tchernayeff was ordered to cross the frontier in six hours, and was threatened with force as he manifested a disposition to resist. He was sent to the Saxon frontier in a wagon, accompanied by Police, and arrived in Dresden yesterday.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times says advices received there confirm the impression that the Porte will at the very last moment accept the compromise now offered by the powers. The compromise will probably prove to be that the Porte be asked to accept the programme, not as something unalterable, but only as a sort of basis for discussion.

THE FAMINE IN INDIA.

LONDON, Jan. 15.—The India Office publishes a dispatch, dated Jan. 12, from Lord Carnarvon, acting as Indian Secretary in the absence of Lord Salisbury, to Lord Lytton, Governor General of India. It requests that a weekly summary be henceforth sent by telegraph, giving the main facts in regard to the famine. Lord Carnarvon, summing up the information he has hitherto received, considers it alarming that 840,000 persons are already employed on the relief works in Madras and 250.000 in Bombay. The Government estimates show the famine in Bombay will gradually increase, reaching the maximum in April, when a million persons will require relief, after which it will gradually decrease. In Madras the prospect is proportionately worse. The districts affected in Madras cover 80,000 square miles, and contain a population of 18,000,000. In Bombay the famine-stricken territory covers 54,000 square miles, and has a population of 8,000,000, 5,000,000 of which are in districts more immediately affected.

A Times special from Calcutta gives a later summary of the situation. In one of the Bombay districts, Sholapore, the crops have totally failed. Things are nearly as bad in two other districts. The crops have partially failed in six districts. Already 287,000 persons are on the relief works. In Madras the famine prevails in 12 districts, and a million persons are now on the relief works. The cost to the State is estimated at over £2,000,000 sterling in Bombay and £4,000,000 in Madras.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

MADRID, Jan. 14.—Señor Silvela has taken the oath of office, and entered upon his duties as Minister of Foreign Affairs. The Council of Ministers has approved the Extradition Treaty concluded with the United States. Negotiations have been opened for a similar treaty with Great Britain. The existence of armed bands in Upper Arragon and Catalonia is officially denied.

PRAGUE, Jan. 15.—Gen. Tchernayeff, late of the Servian army, who recently arrived here and was welcomed by a demonstration of Czechs, has left the city at the request of the authorities. A public meeting to protest against the course of the authorities was dispersed by the police.

PARIS, Jan. 14.—The public announcement of the changes of Sub-prefects has been postponed for a fortnight. Minister Jules Simon has been obliged by the demands of many Senators and Deputies to remodel his scheme in such a manner as to give it greater importance. The Minister, receiving the Deputies of the Department of the Seine on Saturday, said the Government intended to make a large use of the privilege of pardon in favor of the Communists, and would appoint a new Amnesty Committee.

OBITUARY.

Mr. William E. Warren, the well-known accountant, died at his residence, No. 53 West Fifteenth street, on Saturday, of heart disease, aged 60 years. Mr. Warren was born on March 20, 1817, in Bethany, Conn. Having moved to this City, he soon made a reputation as an accurate accountant and a man of unquestionable probity, and was made Deputy Controller, the office having been created expressly for him, and served as such under both Hawe and Brennan, at a time when the City accounts were much involved. He also held other offices of public trust in this City, besides filling at different times the positions of Secretary of the Erie Railway Company and Treasurer of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company. He was also the first President of the International Insurance Company. Years of successful and conscientious work brought him the esteem and respect of the many business men by whom he was employed.

Joseph H. Goldsmith, a prominent citizen of Southold, Long Island, formerly Treasurer of Suffolk County, and a lawyer of long practice, died on Thursday. He was Secretary of the Suffolk County Mutual Insurance Company and counsel for the Southold Savings Bank at the time of his death. He was in his 78th year.

SYNOPSIS AND INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15—1 A. M.—The storm centre which was last night north of Lake Ontario, has rapidly disappeared eastward over the Gulf of St. Lawrence, accompanied by brisk and high westerly winds and occasional snow from the lower lakes to Nova Scotia and New-Brunswick; frequent rains have been reported from Arizona and Southern California, and light snows from Nevada, Utah, Dakota, and Minnesota, with falling barometer at the Rocky Mountain stations; an extensive storm is apparently approaching the Mississippi Valley; a high pressure area is advancing southward over Manitoba and Dakota. The rivers in Western Pennsylvania, the Ohio and Cumberland, have continued to rise, and the ice is still moving.

INDICATIONS.

During Monday in the South Atlantic States, falling barometer, after a temporary rise along the coast, stationary or rising temperature, increasing easterly to southerly winds, threatening and rainy weather.

In the Gulf States, falling barometer, increasing south-east to south-west winds, warmer, threatening, and rainy weather, possibly succeeded in the Southwest by rising barometer and winds, shifting to colder, northerly.

In Tennessee and the Ohio Valley, falling barometer, easterly to southerly winds, warmer, rainy, and stormy weather, probably succeeded by rising barometer and winds shifting to colder, northerly.

In the Upper Mississippi and Lower Missouri valleys, rapidly rising barometer, brisk and occasionally high northerly winds, gradually diminishing in force, colder stormy weather and snow, succeeded by clearing weather.

In the upper lake region, falling followed by rising barometer, easterly winds, backing to colder, northerly, cloudy, and stormy weather, with snow.

In the lower lake region and Middle States, falling barometer, increasing easterly to southerly winds, cloudiness, rising temperature and rain, turning into snow in the northern portions.

In New-England, rising followed by falling barometer, winds shifting to easterly or southerly, low succeeded by slowly-rising temperature, and increasing cloudiness, followed by snow.

The rivers in Western Pennsylvania will probably fall temporarily, and the Ohio and Cumberland continue to rise.

Cautionary signals are ordered for Milwaukee and Grand Haven.

MR. BENNETT'S DEPARTURE.

HIS FRIENDS CHUCKLING OVER THE WAY HE ELUDED THE VIGILANCE OF THE REPORTERS—HE WILL PROBABLY REMAIN ABROAD FOR TWO YEARS—MR. MAY KEEPING OUT OF THE WAY TO AVOID ARREST.

Mr. James Gordon Bennett is now far out at sea, a passenger on board the Inman steam-ship City of Richmond. His friends chuckle over the way he eluded the vigilance of the reporters for four days, but are very much astonished that he should have been seen when leaving his news-yacht at the Sandy Hook bar, a time at which they had thought he would be most safe from observation. The account of Mr. Bennett's movements after his return from the dueling ground, published in THE TIMES of yesterday, while correct in the main, contained several inaccuracies. When Mr. Bennett left the Herald office on Wednesday evening he did not go on board the yacht, although Capt. Lyons had quarters prepared for him. He visited the house of a friend, and on Thursday again went to the Herald office. His presence there was kept a secret from all but two or three persons. Only the forethought of Jimmy, Mr. Bennett's colored servant, prevented a revelation, however. There hangs over the desk of the proprietor of the Herald a bell-cord which he is accustomed to pull almost unintermittently while in his office. It has been the habit of his employes to guess his temper from the way in which he pulled this cord. Jimmy, knowing that Mr. Bennett is absent-minded at times, drew the cord to one side, so that whenever his employer clutched for it he grasped only the thin air. One sound of the gong would have proclaimed the whereabouts of Mr. Bennett throughout the City. Toward midnight, on Thursday, Mr. Bennett, accompanied by his valet, "Baron" Vegel, Mr. William Henry, Superintendent of the Herald establishment, and Capt. Thomas Robinson, chief of the ship news service of the Herald, crossed over to Jersey City and made their way to the dock of the Lehigh Valley Coal Company, where the yacht Herald lay with steam up. Mr. Bennett and the valet went on board, and a few minutes later she ran out into the river and then down toward Sandy Hook. Mr. Henry and Capt. Robinson returned to the ferry. They were muffled up to avoid recognition, but could not deceive one of their friends, a gushing Hibernian, who accosted them and said, with some exaggeration, perhaps, but with true enthusiasm, "This, gintlemen, is the grandest moment of my loife. I'm glad to see ye Billy! How are ye Tom! Where are ye goin?" His acquaintances did not show much pleasure at meeting him just then, and quickly took leave of him. Capt. Robinson remarked, as he was departing, "Don't give it away." The Hibernian replied, with some bitterness in his tone: "Give what away? Shure ye haven't tould me anything."

From the time Mr. Bennett went on board the Herald, he did not leave until yesterday afternoon, when he and his valet were transferred to the City of Richmond. On the little vessel he was quite cheerful and complaisant toward his crew. He did not refer to the cause of his leaving the City, but said he hoped to return to this country after about six weeks. A very different belief obtains among the employes of the Herald, however. They think he intends to remain abroad for at least two years, and that a conference with Mr. Connery, Mr. Henry, and "Uncle Joe" Elliot, held on the yacht on Saturday, he gave full and specific directions for the conduct of the Herald during his absence. The gentlemen named above went down to Sandy Hook in a tug on Saturday morning and remained with Mr. Bennett until he went on board the City of Richmond. When he reached the deck of the steamship he was welcomed by a jovial party, composed, it is believed, of Messrs. S. Howland Robbins, Carroll Livingston, Louis Lorillard, and one other person not indicated at present. These well-known members of the Union Club are said to have boarded the steam-ship at her wharf early in the day, before the other passengers began to arrive. It cannot, indeed, be said definitely that the gentlemen named are on the City of Richmond, but there are many indications that they are. A party of gentlemen, wearing ulsters, and otherwise muffled up, arrived at the steam-ship on Saturday morning, and went into a private saloon from which they were not seen to go out up to the time the ship sailed. More than this, Messrs. Robbins, Livingston, and Lorillard cannot be found in New-York. It also seems that arrangements were made that the passenger-list of the steam-ship should not be sent to the newspapers. For the first time in years the agents of the Inman Line failed on Saturday to send THE TIMES a list of her passengers.

The strange circumstance of the departure of Mr. Bennett for Europe excited a great deal of comment throughout the City yesterday. Many persons thought he should in courtesy have remained to help Dr. Phelps out of trouble, and to share the responsibility before the law with Mr. May. A very intimate friend of Mr. Bennett said, however, that no harm will come to Dr. Phelps. Even if he should lose his position as Police Surgeon, he would gain a great deal. Jim Bennett takes care of his friends. Fred May's case worries me most. Poor boy! He can't go to Europe like Jim. He hasn't got the money. He and his family deserve great sympathy in this affair."

There now remains no room for doubt that the account of the duel published in THE TIMES of Thursday was truthful in every respect. All the dispatches received since Thursday confirm it. A contemporary yesterday published a dispatch from Baltimore, which stated that Mr. May was at the Maryland Club on Thursday night, and bore no mark of his encounter with Mr. Bennett. It seems that Mr. May is keeping out of view simply to avoid arrest if an indictment is found against him here and a requisition is issued by Gov. Robinson to Gov. Carroll. A gentleman who is a friend of Dr. Phelps said yesterday that the latter told him, "Whatever may have been the result of the duel, it is certain that Mr. Bennett acted in a way to command the respect and admiration of all who know the facts."

STATEMENT OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY RUSSUM, OF MARYLAND.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 14.—District Attorney Russum, of Carolina County, Md., is at the Girard House, in this city. He says that from all that he can learn, the dueling ground was McGinness' farm, which is located partly in Delaware and partly in Maryland, and the scene was about 400 yards from the Delaware line, near Marydel. His informant tells him that Mr. May was hit, and that he was attended by Dr. Allen Smith, of Baltimore, and also that the patient was in a ducking-house on the Gunpowder Creek.

It is reported that Fred May stopped at one of the hotels in this city from Monday morning until Wednesday night, when he took the midnight train for New-York, and that he registered as Fred Miles.

THE TILDEN CONFERENCE.

Among the prominent Democrats who called on Gov. Tilden at his residence on Sunday evening, were Gen. John M. Corse, of Illinois; ex-Gov. Andrew G. Curtin, of Pennsylvania; and Col. Alexander K. McClure, of Philadelphia. Gen. Corse called alone and remained only a few minutes. Ex-Gov. Curtin and Col. McClure came together, and had a protracted interview. It was positively denied last evening, at Gov. Tilden's residence, that any conference was had on Saturday evening in reference to the propriety of calling a national Democratic convention to be held at Washington on the 14th of next month. Hon. Abram S. Hewitt and last evening, that he had heard nothing of such a meeting being held, and knew nothing whatever in reference to it. He had come home from Washington to spend Sunday with his family. Hon. John Bigelow called on Gov. Tilden yesterday, and returned to Albany the same day. Col. McClure returned to Philadelphia yesterday afternoon. Mr. Hewitt is said to be strongly opposed to any attempt to hold a mass convention in Washington, deeming it inexpedient to do so. There has been considerable talk about holding a series of public meetings of the Democracy in the principal cities, and demanding that the House of Representatives take an active part in counting the Electoral vote, and that whoever is decided by the House to be elected shall be inaugurated. It is also said that a mass-meeting of this character will be held in this City within a fortnight.

FAST HORSES HIPPODROMING.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 14.—At the Bay District Park, on Saturday, a match purporting to be for $5,000 a side, mile heats, best three in five, to wagons, was trotted between the horses Rarus and Sam Purdy. The former won in three straight heats. Time—2:31¼, 2:27¼, 2:28¼.

AMUSEMENTS.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The third concert given this season by the Philharmonic Society took place at the Academy of Music on Saturday evening. The programme was, in respect of variety, the most interesting interpreted during the current year, and the performance was enjoyed by a more numerous gathering than had been brought together since the series commenced in November last. The pièce de résistance of the night, as well as the most important in point of novelty, was the symphony which occupied the first part of the concert. Goldmark's work is called "Ländliche Hochzeit," or "The Country Wedding," and is divided into five movements. The first illustrates a wedding march, the second a bridal song, the third a serenade, the fourth a "garden scene," and the fifth a dance. "Ländliche Hochzeit," though by no means a composition representative of profound thought or remarkably happy inspiration, is nevertheless a very delightful achievement. The name of "symphony" is a rather ambitious one, and it might, with greater propriety, have been described as a series of tone-pictures, suggestive of rustic life—but this is of small moment. Three of its movements are worthy of hearty praise. The bridal song, and the serenade, rest upon distinct and quaint themes, handled with consummate art and with an appreciation of what we may term local color which it may be deemed unworthy the ambition of a Wagner to imitate, but which is nevertheless very welcome as a relief from the excess of "intellectual" music to which too frequent concessions to the demands of many modern composers would subject the public. The andante, which reminds one of the sensuous writing of Gounod, while the instrumentation is powerful to a degree the composer of "Faust" seldom reaches, is extremely poetical, and, withal, perfectly shapely. Dr. Damrosch's orchestra supplied a capital rendering of the symphony; the first movement, which is decidedly formal and rather long because of variations which are scholarly but not specially attractive in form, and the last, which borders upon the commonplace may not merit repetition, but the intermediate pieces will surely be listened to once more with gratification. The choral forces of the Oratorio Society of New-York, and Mrs. Butman, Misses Hall and Cranch, and Messrs. Leggat and Stoddard were concerned in the interpretation of the second half of the programme. This began with Haydn's clearly-written chorus entitled "The Tempest," and subsequently made known the five numbers constituting Beethoven's music to "The Ruins of the Athens." But two of these are at all familiar, and acquaintance with the others hardly appears worth cultivation. The familiar portions of the work are a highly characteristic—in a conventional sense, be it understood—chorus of Dervishes, and the well known "Marcia alla Turca," to which a clever gradation of sound, from fortissimo to pianissimo, lends a peculiar charm. The chorus was sung with passable effect, and the march capitally played by the orchestra. Then M. Butman sang "L'Absence," a romance by Berlioz, in the themes of and accompaniment to which a strong resemblance to Romeo's air in the "Romeo and Juliet" cantata is discernible, and afterwards a quintett, septett, and chorus, from the same composer's "Troyens," were executed. The three numbers proved to be agreeable specimens of smooth writing for voices and instruments, but their impressiveness, when removed from their context, is slight. Beethoven's "Fantaisie Chorale" for pianoforte, soli, chorus, and orchestra, carried the concert to a close. This avowedly fanciful effort, which has less significance, possibly, than any work of equal proportions from the same giant mind, afforded Mr. Bernard Boskelman, a pianist of considerable brilliancy and vigor, an excellent opportunity for distinction, and the arabesques of the music allotted to him enriched with much color and sparkle the harmonic tissue of the orchestral score.

ENGLISH OPERA.

Four representations of English opera will be given at the Academy of Music next week, the first occurring on Tuesday, Jan. 23, by Miss Clara Louise Kellogg and her company. "The Bohemian Girl" will first be sung. Wednesday "Faust" will be given, and Friday evening and Saturday afternoon "The Flying Dutchman," which has not yet been heard in this City, is to be made known. In spite of the dreariness of the times, there can be no doubt that a general desire for a brief season, at least, of opera, prevails, and the success, artistic and material, which Miss Kellogg has had throughout the country since early Fall indicates that the performances about to begin are very likely to fully meet the demand and its attendant expectations.

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.

The new comédie-vaudeville called "Lemons" will be produced at the Fifth Avenue Theatre this evening. It is a bright and vivacious work, and, from the names of the artists who are to appear in it, it will undoubtedly have a representation worthy of its color and liveliness. Mr. Coghlan, Mr. Crisp, Mr. Brougham, Mr. Lewis, Mr. Hardenberg, Miss Davenport, Mrs. Gilbert, Miss Cowell, and Miss Rigl are all to be concerned in the performance, which will therefore call into requisition Mr. Daly's whole metropolitan company.

GENERAL MENTION.

Mr. Booth performs to-night in "Hamlet," at the Lyceum Theatre.

A second concert of English glees occurs at Chickering Hall, on Thursday evening next.

"The Marble Heart," with Messrs. Thorne and Sheridan and Miss Rogers in the principal rôles, will be acted at the Park Theatre, this evening.

At the New Broadway Theatre, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," with Mrs. G. C. Howard and the "Georgia Jubilee Singers," will be represented on and after this evening.

The last week of the run of "Santa Claus" will be entered upon at the Eagle Theatre, to-night. On Jan. 23, Mr. Oliver Doud Byron will act at that house, and, on Jan. 29, Mlle. Aimée and her opera bouffe will begin a protracted engagement, appearing first, probably, in "La Petite Mariée."

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Signor Masini has appeared with Mme. Patti in St. Petersburg.

"Paul and Virginia," at the Paris Lyrique, is still drawing well.

Bazin's "Maître Pathelin" is to be revived at the Opéra-Comique.

"La Reine Margot" has been reproduced at the Paris Porte St. Martin.

Pantomime is still the reigning attraction at almost all the London theatres.

M. Massenet's "Le Roi de Lahore" is now in active preparation at the Grand Opéra, in Paris.

Mr. Rosa and his English Opera Troupe, with Mr. Santley, were, at last accounts, in Liverpool.

A new tenor, named Clodio, has produced a not unfavorable impression as Radames, at the Paris Italiens.

Rossi, the Italian tragedian, is engaged at St Petersburg for Lent. He is to play at the Theatre Marie.

Herr Bilse, with his world-renowned orchestra, has returned to Berlin from an extended tour through Germany.

Miss Kate Santley is giving opera bouffe performances at the Royalty, in London, which is now under her direction.

At the Pas de loup and Chellet popular concerts, in Paris, Félicien David's "Le Désert" is frequently performed.

The 237th anniversary of the birth of Racine was celebrated by appropriate performances at several of the Parisian theatres.

The Duke of Coburg has conferred upon Sir Julius Benedict the distinction of Commander of the Second Class of the Saxe-Ernestine Family Order.

Laurent, an excellent Parisian comique, has been compelled by sickness to quit the stage; he profited by a benefit performance at the Opera Comique.

Signor Salvini intends to reappear in London during the approaching season. His first performance will probably be at Drury Lane in the character of Macbeth.

The Communal Council of Brussels has voted 1,500 francs as an encouragement to Mlle. Dulat's, for the success that young Belgian artist has obtained at the Paris Théâtre Français in "Rome Vaincue."

The "Queen of Connaught" was lately read at the London Olympic. The scene is laid in Ireland, and the play is an adaptation of the popular novel of the same name. Miss Cavendish will reappear in the new work.

A Dutch correspondent of the Athenæum writes: "'The School for Scandal' has, for the first time, been brought on the Dutch stage. The translation is generally happy, and the piece has met with considerable success."

At the Paris Odéon, a charming little Japanese comedy, entitled "La Belle Sainara," has been given with Porel and Mlle. Antonine as the hero and the heroine. It is a graceful and picturesque piece, and admirably acted, it seems, especially by Porel, who, in the rôle of the poet Komi, achieved a veritable success.

An important literary discovery has lately been made in the library at Cassel, where Rudolf Genée, occupied with studies of English dramas antecedent to those of Shakspeare, has found a hitherto unknown edition of Marlowe's tragedy, "Edward II.;" in fact, an edition four years older than that of 1594, previously understood as his first one.

According to the Swiss Times, Herr W. Tappert has made a collection of all "the low, libelous, hateful, and insulting expressions which have been printed about Master Richard Wagner, his works, and followers, by his enemies and slanderers." This collection, in the form of a "Wagner Lexicon," will shortly be published by Fritzsch, of Leipsic.

It is hoped by old London playgoers to realize £1,000 by a benefit farewell appearance of Mr. John Parry, who in the course of an active and honorable professional career has done so much to make life agreeable. Mr. Hollingshead has left the Gaiety Theatre for the entertainment, which is to take place on the 7th of February. The patrons include the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Dukes of Westminster and Beaufort, and a number of gentlemen interested in art and letters.

A Paris letter, dated Dec. 23, says: "The rather rare spectacle of a first-class funeral led passers by the Madeleine this morning to inquire who could be the personage whose escutcheon, with the letter T., was hung out in front of the church. It was Tamburini, the great baritone singer, recently deceased at Nice, aged 76, whose body had been brought to Paris, his favorite residence, for interment. There were, relatively to his former fame, few followers. The chief mourners were two sons, one of whom is the husband of an English lady, and a son-in-law, the tenor Gardoni."

The Commercio Portuguez relates the following anecdote: "Dom Luiz has almost terminated the translation of 'Hamlet,' the celebrated drama of the great English tragedian Shakespeare. His Majesty lately read his translation to a gentleman devoted to the study of literature. This gentleman ventured to compare the translation with the original, and observed to his Majesty that the translation of some phrase had escaped the royal pen. His Majesty expressed his astonishment, because he had already submitted the translation to several persons, and nobody had warned him of the oversight—a proof of the listeners' attention or want of sincerity. Kings are unfortunate; there are few persons who venture to tell them the truth."

A RUSSIAN SWINDLER.

HE TRIES HIS HAND IN PARIS AND GETS FIFTEEN MONTHS' IMPRISONMENT FOR HIS PAINS.

Recently the gay world of the Paris Boulevards was excited over the arrest of a Russian gentleman who was taken before a Police Magistrate. There the Judge questioned him about what took place at the Hotel de Russie. "You arrived there," said the President, "with great assurance, and gave yourself all the airs of a rich personage. You stated that you were a millionaire seven times over, master of yourself and fortune, and that you had come to Paris to enjoy your admiration of Mme. Judic, whom you pretended to have known at St. Petersburg. You complained of the Figaro announcing your arrival, and said what a nuisance the reporters were. You went a few days later to a jeweler in the Palais Royal, and bought a ring for seven thousand francs. You asked the jeweler how much the stone in the ring would be worth were it a real one, and he replied it would fetch 4,000 francs. The next day you told the landlord of your hotel that you were afraid of losing the ring, the stone of which was valued at 4,000 francs, and you gave it to him to mind for you. The landlord was more and more dazzled, and lodged you without dreaming of presenting his bill. You were very extravagant at the hotel, and gave luxurious dinners to persons whose acquaintance you had made. You expressed the most violent admiration for Mme. Judic, you sent her nosegays and wrote letters to her. You succeeded in borrowing 300 francs from your landlord on the ring in question; but, fortunately, he had the precaution to take the ring to a jeweler, and, on discovering that it was but worth 7 francs, and not 4,000 francs, he immediately sought you, and managed to get back his 300 francs. He then told the Police, and you were arrested." The Judge then reminded the prisoner that he had also swindled the keeper of the Café de Suede out of 150 francs. Bolinsky had become a customer of that café, where he met some of the actors of the Variétés. One night he said he was much embarrassed. He wanted 150 francs to pay for a supper, but he had no other money on him than a Russian check for 8,000 francs, which he could not get cashed till the next day. The lady at the counter, touched with his misfortune, gave him the 150 francs in exchange for a check which he drew on M. Ephrussi, but which, of course, the banker did not pay. Among the witnesses examined was M. Baron, the actor, who explained how he became acquainted with the prisoner. "Belinsky," he said, "attended the performance of 'Belle Helene' every night, and every night he waited for me on leaving the theatre. He said he was madly in love with Mme. Judic, and invited my colleague and myself to dine with him at his hotel. We accepted, and soon after we learned he had been arrested." The Government prosecutor contended that the prisoner was nothing but a professional swindler, and deserved the utmost rigor of the law. In the course of his charge he read some of the letters sent by Belinsky to Mme. Judic. One ran thus: "I am a landlord in Russia, and possess a fine stud of horses. I should be the happiest man in the world if, in remembrance of your passage through our capital, you would do me the honor to accept a pair of Russian trotters. As I am here only for a few days, I shall feel greatly obliged if you would leave a reply at the theatre, and fix the day when I shall have the honor of seeing you." Mme. Judic, however, appears to have been deaf to these touching appeals. The prisoner's counsel pleaded that Belinsky was not a swindler, but only a foolish youth whose head had been turned by the seductions of Parisian life, and who had got into debt in order to act the Russian seigneur. The jury, however, found him guilty of swindling, and our young Russian adventurer and Slav sympathizer was sentenced to 15 months' imprisonment and 50 francs fine.

GERMAN SINGING FESTIVAL.

The first carnival of the season of the Beethoven Maennerchor came off last evening at Beethoven Hall, in Fifth street. The large hall was filled with the members of the association and their invited friends, and delegates were present from the Albion and Heinebrund Societies. Mr. Richard Weinacht presided, and he and his assistants, who were seated on either side of him, were dressed in Turkish costumes. Comic songs were sung and speeches made, and a variety of performances of a burlesque character were gone through with, all of which caused great merriment. Among the persons who spoke during the evening were the Secretary, Mr. Leydel; Miss Boremsky, Mr. Bousky, Dr. Muhr, Mr. Bersin, Mr. Weinacht, and others. The hall was decorated with large pictures, and, with the company in their gaudy costumes, presented a very gay appearance. The festivities were continued until a late hour of the night, all seeming to enjoy themselves heartily.

NOT TO WADE HAMPTON'S CREDIT.

A story lately told to the credit of Wade Hampton is thus disposed of in a paragraph printed in the Louisville Courier-Journal: "A story is going the rounds of the papers to the effect that when Wade Hampton was made heir to his father's vast estate, except an allowance of $100,000 to his two sisters, he refused to assert his rights, and insisted upon an equal division of the property. Another version of the story says it was not Gov. Wade Hampton, but his father, who destroyed the will. Gen. John S. Preston, alluding to these statements, writes: 'The whole story is a fiction. Neither Col. Wade Hampton nor his father left a will. Of course neither Col. Wade Hampton nor his son Gov. Wade Hampton ever destroyed a will. Col. Wade Hampton, the father of Gov. Hampton, was admitted to an equal share of his father's estate by the consent of his stepmother and her daughters, who, under the law of Louisiana, inherited three-fourths of the estate. I do trust this statement will stop the reiteration of this silly fiction, which is unjust to the descendants of Gen. Wade Hampton through his daughters, Mrs. Gov. Manning and Mrs. Preston.'"

FINE ARTS.

CHOICE COLLECTION OF PAINTINGS.

The art rooms of Mr. S. P. Avery, at No. 88 Fifth avenue, appear to contain this year more paintings by artists sure of the popular favor than any season previous. Mr. Avery has a certain judgment of what will be pleasing to a majority of his compatriots, and if heretofore he has been successful in selling to Americans the paintings he has picked up during his frequent trips abroad, the present collection ought to have the same result. In the front room, on the second floor, where most of his important purchases are, a small Detaille gets the benefit of the light from the right hand window. "Two Sharpshooters," in French uniform and with French faces, both very much alike, lie on the crest of a green hill—one watching, the other about to fire. The other window brings out strongly the Venetian coloring which Carl Becker, of Berlin, sometimes attempts. It is a striking picture of a young girl in what may be called a Florentine costume. Her head-dress or hat forms a kind of broad aureole, against which her yellow hair shows advantageously. The costume has some clever satin painting, and the face itself, although by no means Florentine, but rather German than anything else, has a certain bold attractiveness. Carl Becker is nothing if not bold, but he is so too often at the expense of agreeableness. Near the Detaille hangs Mr. Avery's cheval de bataille for this season, a picture which marks his knowledge of what New-York picture-gazers like. It has been painted expressly for him by Cabanel, the well-known French artist, whose paintings have been coming over here for a great many years to be admired, and, presumably, to be bought. A woman of great beauty and intellectual expression of features, stands fronting the beholder, with her head turned away a little toward the landscape on her right. The landscape is meant to represent the Italian Maremma, and she stands on a castle overlooking it. Smoke arises in the distance and forms the lowest note of a series of grays, blues, and purples in the surroundings, the face and the dress of the woman. There is great spirituality in her face, and one knows she is unhappy for some reason; but one is equally confident that she knows she is being looked at. Mr. Avery's catalogue gives her history at length. She is Pia di Tolomei, who was lodged in a castle of the poisonous Maremma by her husband, and there perished of miasma. The story is tragic enough for any one, and Cabanel has handled his colors so as to reinforce and increase by their subtle effects the pathos of the face. It is a picture for the ladies to weep over, and they will have on their side all the weight that attaches to Cabanel's long life devoted to painting, his medals and memberships, and his position as Professor at the Ecole des Beaux Arts. The cold-souled critic may venture to suggest that the face is that of the highest type of Parisian Jewess—not an Italian of the thirteenth century—and that the effect is sentimental. But then the opinion of the ladies will always carry the day.

Examples of the Spanish artist now on a visit in New-York are also to be seen at No. 88 Fifth avenue. Leon y Escosura, who makes Paris his headquarters, and paints a good deal at Blois, has a picture here, the background of which he gets from the castle at the last-named place. It shows soldiers resting at the château. His color is as vivid as usual with him. He delights in brilliant effects as much as any of the recent painters, and if he has not yet succeeded in satisfying the fastidious, he has made himself a name and sells his pictures well. An older and more legitimate favorite with the public here is Schreyer, whose pictures did not go begging at the late sale of Mr. Johnston's gallery. His "Wallachian Team Coming Through a Wood" is up to his usual mark. The driver, astride of one of the wheel-horses, has his whip-arm out in the gesture familiar to Schreyer; the horses are all done to the life—little Servian horses, accustomed to strive with dreadful ruts and lumbering, ill-greased wheels. A man on horseback is still in the shadow of the wood on the right. Variety in treatment is gained by the fall of the light. The confused team is coming toward one out of the dark strip of beech-wood into the glow of sunset. This affords a double darkness on which to relieve the first line of horses, which is bathed in what remains of the evening light.

A picture full of rest and quiet is a water scene by P. J. Clays. A cluster of boats lie idly on the smooth surface of a canal. A landscape of Holland appears beyond them, and their sails are looped in picturesque disorder while they wait for a breeze. This artist is well thought of for the sentiment of his landscapes, as well as his masterly handling of the brush. A Toulmouche is also of the number, and represents some extraordinary fine clothes attended by two ladies in a garden. Every one has seen repetitions of the much-dressed young woman whom Toulmouche paints teasing a cockatoo or reading a letter in a well-furnished room. In this picture he has asked her to step out into the garden, and introduced a sister to keep her company. The two are smiling broadly over a book, presumably a book of fashion-plates, for Toulmouche's young women have no soul above a fashion-plate. Why should they, indeed, when the artist himself appears to be enthralled by the fascination of delicate textures, silks, and satins? As fine painting almost as that on the dresses of Toulmouche Mr. Avery has to show in a little picture by R. Goubie, (1876.) Two horsemen have ridden up to the vine-covered gateway of a château. One has dismounted to open the gates. The horses' heads are away from the spectator. Each is a wonder of fine and finest painting. The whole picture shows unremitting industry and great skill with the brush, nor is there any sign that attention to details has hurt the art. Firmin-Girard, who has amused Paris with his picture of the flower market, has a small figure here, showing a young girl seated on a garden bench, smiling at the antics of her lap-dog. Those who enjoy pictures of this kind will find this a very pleasant specimen. P. C. Comte turns from the universal flood of modern realistic paintings to history, and shows us the little Duc de Guise swearing to avenge the murder of his father. That event is before him in a tapestry. A coronet and his father's sword lie between him and the picture. He leans against the knees of his mother, who is evidently schooling him in ideas of revenge. Like a great many artists who have painted historical subjects, Comte puts on color in a way that suggests flatness and coldness after seeing the warm tints and solid painting of the realistic artists of the day, such an artist, for instance, (to carry it at once to an extreme,) as Boldini, of whom there is a small specimen in this collection. It represents a man in Louis XIV. costume, red coat, three-cornered hat, near a vase. The spot is one in the avenue of vases in the gardens of Versailles. There is something very taking in the reckless dash of Boldini's painting. It is a quality said to be Spanish. Fortuny, who made a mark in brilliant pictures of that kind, is represented here by a little sketch, for whose authenticity Mr. Avery vouches. A mediæval figure leans against a portal which is understood to be a doorway from the Alhambra. There are also here two representatives of a young artist who will have a hard time in counteracting the oppressive shadow of his father. This is Charles Meissonier, whose steps do seem much feebler than they would had we not associated his name with the painter of Le Rize. One picture of the son of Meissonier is something in the style we are accustomed to see from the brush of the father, although he does not, like his parent, embody a comparatively unimportant subject in a small picture. His arquebusier at a window, of a castle in Mephistopholean as to dress and fairly enough painted. The other picture is a street in Nice, hot and bare, with a poplar showing against the cream-colored side wall of a house. There is a water-carrier and donkey, a woman at a gate, a priest, &c.

Bougereau is another favorite whom the unerring judgment of Mr. Avery added to this popular collection. It is needless to say that the point is a baby, and that it will prove satisfactory to parental minds. The mother is as characterless as the most characterless of Bougereau's matrons, but the little girl who smiles and amuses the infant, and the infant itself, are all that the most parental can demand. The gallery is not entirely without American paintings. Mr. Church, who is perhaps more talked about than any other American artist, shows a painting of the mountain Cotopaxi, with a lake at its foot, clouds, haziness, and general tropical Heart-of-the-Andes effects. It is a fancy sketch which does not claim local exactness, but exhibits all of Mr. Church's artistic points. Many more are here whose reputation is established: a Merle, consisting of an ideal head; Baugniet, Delort, Campriani, Vibert, Diaz, Boughton, and a water-color by Meissonier.

TWO FAST TROTTERS IN COLLISION.

THE SHOCKING ACCIDENT ON SATURDAY NEAR POUGHKEEPSIE — TWO HORSES IMPALED ON THE THILLS OF THE SLEIGHS AND ALMOST INSTANTLY KILLED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Jan. 14.—The shocking accident to two trotting horses on South avenue, yesterday afternoon, has scarce a parallel in the annals of fast-driving accidents. During the entire sleighing this Winter South avenue, from the Soldiers' Fountain to a point a mile beyond, has been the accepted trotting ground of the city, and every fine afternoon hundreds of people have assembled there to witness the trials of speed. The trotters Silas Rich, Joe Petit, Pondietta, Alida, and others, composing the private stock of the city, have appeared there almost daily for sharp contests. The course has, at times, been so much crowded with trotting horses that the frequent narrow escapes from collisions have made the drivers reckless, and such an accident as that of yesterday has been predicted for weeks. The day's sport was nearly over, and 40 or 50 trotters were making their last "spurts" at about 5 P. M. Both sides of the avenue were lined with people watching the sport when, suddenly, the cry of "There they come!" was heard, and, looking up the avenue, the trotting horse

The statement of the Associated Banks issued from the Clearing-house on Saturday last shows a gain of $2,355,125 in surplus reserve, which raises the excess held by the banks above legal requirements to $20,813,225. The specie average shows an increase of $1,366,600, and the legal tenders of $1,759,700, the latter being due to the release of capital following the January disbursements and the return flow of money from the interior to this centre. The other changes are an increase of $3,084,700 in deposits, of $13,900 in circulation, and a decrease of $626,700 in loans.

The following shows the condition of the banks on Saturday last, as compared with the previous statement, and with the statement for the corresponding week last year:

The heavy payments for interest and dividends by the Treasury, banks, and other corporations since the beginning of the year have not yet restored complete ease to the money market, notwithstanding that the currency movement has been in favor of this centre. Early in the week the ruling rate for call loans was 7 ₱ cent., and at the close 5@6 ₱ cent. was paid by borrowers, although exceptional transactions were made at lower figures. The banks now hold a larger amount of specie than at any previous time for years past, and are stronger in specie than in legal tenders, which is something quite unusual. The legal-tender average is lower, by over $7,500,000, than at this time last year. The discount market was quiet, the offerings of prime names having been light. The rates for this class of paper ranged from 5 to 7 ₱ cent.

The foreign advices reported a firm market for British consols. United States bonds were irregular, but the fluctuations were not violent, and on the whole the market for these securities was firm. The Bank of England for the week ending Wednesday last showed a decrease of £216,000 in specie, but no change was made in the rate of discount.

The London Times of Dec. 27, in a well-considered article upon the status of American securities, says "the Republican Party in the United States can point with triumph to solid and splendid financial results," and adds that "the credit of the United States is higher than it has ever been before—higher even than that of France, which has lately emerged triumphant from the most searching trials." The gold speculation was depressed early in the week and the price fell off to 105¾, but subsequently a firmer tone prevailed, and the quotations rose to 106⅝. The late advance was principally due to the cornering of shorts induced by advises from abroad in regard to the more threatening aspect of the Eastern question.

The foreign exchange market was weak, the supply of bills being more than adequate to meet the requirements of bankers who had imported specie and bonds, from whom the principal demand proceeded.

Government bonds lower early in the week, in sympathy with gold, the decline ranging from ¼ to 1⅛ ₱ cent.; but subsequently a strong undertone characterized the dealings, and some issues closed higher than the quotations current at the opening. Sixes of 1881, 1868s, new 5s, and currency 6s showed an advance of ¼ to ⅝ ₱ cent., the greatest improvement being in new 5s. There was a considerable short interest in the market early in the week, and when it was discovered that bonds were being picked up in all directions for wealthy institutions and private capitalists, the covering process was quite important. At least $3,000,000 to $3,500,000 were taken for the account of leading banking institutions, including $2,000,000 bought by a California bank, and probably $2,000,000 more were picked up for smaller corporations and individual investors. These purchases materially reduced the supply of floating bonds and hence the great strength of the market in the late dealings. The reduction in the rates of interest by some of the large savings banks and the low prices for Government bonds have undoubtedly stimulated purchases by parties of moderate means, such purchases aggregating a considerable amount during the past few weeks. In railroad bonds the dealings were well distributed, but the market failed to respond in the degree looked for to the January disbursements. State bonds were quiet, and without marked change, except in the case of Louisiana consols, which advanced 5 ₱ cent. on small dealings.

The advance in Western Union and the wide and sudden fluctuations in Illinois Central constituted the preminent features of speculation on the Stock Exchange throughout the week. The Western Union movement in particular has attracted the attention of operators, and its pros and cons have been the subject of eager and excited discussion. The operators who are manipulating the speculation have either been unable or disdained to give any reason for the faith which they profess is in them, and have utterly failed to furnish any points as to the present condition of the company or prospective advantages which would justify the rise that has taken place, and the still further advance which they predict. Certain it is that the outside public have not been to anything more than a very limited extent purchasers of the stock, and this imparts an artificial character to the speculation which undoubtedly constitutes an element of weakness, a fact that is likely to become apparent when the time for realization shall have arrived. The Illinois Central, after declining to 58, rose sharply, under covering by the shorts, to 65, but later, when the "squeeze" ceased, reacted to 60¼, closing at 62¼. The coal shares were strong. The St. Paul stocks, especially the preferred, were weak and lower. Lake Shore declined to 53¾, but subsequently recovered. Michigan Central was strong in the late dealings, and advanced to 62, closing a reaction of ½ ₱ cent. Investment shares were steady.

REMOVING THE SNOW.

BROADWAY CLEANED FROM UNION SQUARE TO THE BATTERY.

A BUSY SUNDAY FOR THE STREET-CLEANING BUREAU—A THOUSAND MEN AND OVER FIVE HUNDRED CARTS EMPLOYED—THE WORK NOT COMPLETED, OWING TO A LACK OF MEN—COMMISSIONER NICHOLS EXPLAINS HIS POSITION.

The Street-cleaning Bureau began yesterday the work of cleaning the streets of snow and ice, commencing the work which should have been completed a week ago. The work was confined yesterday almost entirely to Broadway, from Union square to South Ferry. The result has been the cleaning of Broadway of all the loose snow, which was nearly knee deep in the middle of the street, and the partial removal of the ice which had formed on either side to the depth of from one foot to 18 inches. About 10,000 cart-loads of snow and ice were removed and dumped into the North and East Rivers. It was impossible to complete the cleaning of Broadway, and there still remains a vast amount of ice, which will be carted off to-night. Broadway would have been thoroughly cleaned yesterday if a sufficient number of men and carts could have been procured.

Operations were begun at 6 o'clock in the morning, and from that time until late in the evening 1,000 men and between 500 and 600 carts were at work incessantly. The workmen and carts were divided into gangs, the first of which was set to work on Broadway, from Fourteenth street to the north side of Ninth street; the second from the north side of Ninth street to the south side of Washington place. The next worked from Washington place to Bleecker street, and the next worked nearly down to Prince street. The remainder of Broadway was similarly subdivided. Each of the gangs was under the direction of a foreman who was made responsible for the proper performance of the work allotted to his gang. Each foreman had sub-foremen, who were held responsible by him for work on sub-divisions of his general division. There were about 20 foremen and about 75 sub-foremen. The foremen were the regular ward foremen employed by the Street-cleaning Bureau. They reported with the workmen and carts ordinarily under their charge, to the station-houses once, twice, and in some cases three times a day, so that they might be ready to go to work upon the streets as soon as I could get permission from the board to go to work. But the board would not give its assent. Mr. Smith, President of the board, said that I had no right, under the charter, to do the work. He said he had advised with counsel, and upon their advice should decline to vote in favor of doing the work. When the last snow came I renewed my efforts. I had my plans all in readiness to clear Broadway and some of the down-town streets leading to the ferries. A week ago Saturday I told Mr. Smith what I proposed to do. He told me that I had no right to do it, and his opposition and that of Mr. Erhardt made it impossible for me to go ahead. If I had had my way, I would have had Broadway and the principal cross-town streets cleaned long ago. It would have saved the City money, too. To-day it will cost $6,000 to clean Broadway. A week ago I could have done it for $4,000, because at that time the snow was lighter than now, and because there was then comparatively little ice. Mr. Smith has told me since the opinion of Corporation Counsel Whitney was rendered, that I was being blamed for what I am not responsible for. 'I am the man to blame,' said he. 'It was I that dissuaded you. I did not believe you had authority to do the work a week ago, and I don't believe you have authority to do it now.'"

In regard to future operations of his bureau, Mr. Nichols said that it was his purpose as soon as Broadway should be cleaned to attack Wall, Fulton, Cortlandt, Grand, and other cross-town streets leading to the ferries, and then to go on with the work as far as necessary. In addition to the work on Broadway yesterday, considerable work was done in Printing-house square, Park Row, and Fourteenth street from Fourth avenue to University place.

A SATURDAY NIGHT TRAGEDY.

AN OLD MAN ATTEMPTS TO KILL HIS WIFE AND SON AND IS HIMSELF FATALLY WOUNDED.

At a late hour on Saturday night people residing in Forsyth street, between Broome and Delancy, were startled by several pistol shots, followed by screams, proceeding from a small tenement house situated in the rear of No. 121 Forsyth street, inhabited by a number of poor German families. The Police of the Tenth Precinct were notified, and Officers Lemlein and Kramlin were detailed to investigate the affair. Entering a narrow court-yard fronting the house, the officers found a group of half-dressed, excited men and women, who informed them that Frederick Krick, a German, aged 61, occupying the front basement, had attempted to murder his wife and son by discharging a pistol at them, and that the son, George Krick, aged 20, had, in defending his own life and that of his mother, seized an axe and struck the father senseless. On gaining access to the apartments of Krick, the officers found old Krick lying on the floor, bleeding copiously from several ghastly wounds on the head. His wife, an old, gray-haired woman, miserably clad, was crouching in a corner, moaning piteously. The son had left the place and surrendered himself to the Sergeant on duty at the Eldridge Street Station, where he unhesitatingly described the circumstances of the affray. His statement, which is corroborated by his mother and other witnesses, is to the following effect: His father, who was of a quarrelsome disposition, had frequently, while under the influence of liquor, threatened to murder his wife. He had no occupation, the family relying solely for support on the earnings of the son, who is employed in the capacity of journeyman butcher in Washington Market. Old Krick was seldom unarmed, and when intoxicated took particular delight in flourishing formidable weapons. On Saturday morning he loaded a revolver with three bullets, remarking to his wife as he did so, that one bullet was intended for her, a second for his son George, and the third was to be applied to the termination of his own existence. As he had made similiar threats on divers occasions, Mrs. Krick was not alarmed. Krick soon after left the house but returned in the afternoon, and terrified his wife by displaying in addition to the revolver, a large dagger, and a single-barreled pistol. He again reiterated her of his intention to kill her and George, and also to end his own life. He then went away, and did not return until 11 P. M. A few minutes before that hour the son arrived home from the market, and immediately went to bed, but was soon awakened by loud noises in the outer room. Krick had returned, and was executing his threats. The son jumped from his bed with the view of protecting his mother. On reaching the door he was confronted by his father, who immediately leveled the revolver at the young man, and fired two shots. The bullets missed their mark, and lodged in the wall. Then came a pistol charged with, as he alleges, blank cartridges, and discharged it twice for the purpose of frightening his father. Failing to produce the desired effect, he seized an axe, and struck the old man four times on the head, rendering him insensible.

The Police finding that Krick's condition was critical, telegraphed for an ambulance, in which the wounded man was removed to Bellevue Hospital. A Coroner was summoned to take Krick's ante-mortem statement, but the order was countermanded by Dr. Peli, because Krick was not in a condition to make a statement. No hopes of his recovery are entertained. George Krick was taken to Essex Market Police Court yesterday morning, and was remanded to the Tombs to await the result of his father's injuries.

BRUTAL TREATMENT OF CHILDREN.

SERIOUS CHARGES AGAINST REV. EDWARD COWLEY, SUPERINTENDENT OF THE CHILDREN'S FOLD—THE CHILDREN BRUTALLY BEATEN AND MALTREATED—THE RESULTS OF AN INVESTIGATION—THE BRUTAL SUPERINTENDENT TO BE REMOVED.

At a regular meeting of the State Charities Aid Association on Dec. 5 last, a committee was appointed to investigate the management of the Children's Fold, No. 157 East Sixtieth street, owing to a statement made by Mr. Melville Brown that rumors were afloat affecting the character of Rev. Edward Cowley, the President of that institution. The Children's Fold was founded about ten years ago by a committee of ladies who had been interested in the St. Stephen's Fold. Mr. Cowley was chairman of the committee, and has since presided over the institution. Its objects are the care of orphan children, and up to the year 1874 it was conducted as a private enterprise At that time, however, a bill was passed by the Legislature giving to the Children's Fold articles of incorporation and certain legal privileges of guardianship. The Commissioners of Charities and Correction have allowed the sum of $2 a week per capita to the inmates of the institution, and this amount formed a considerable portion of its revenue. There are something over 50 inmates of the Fold. They are clothed, fed, and sheltered by the institution, but are sent to the public schools to be educated, and receive their religious instruction elsewhere The charter of the institution provides that any child over 10 years of age who has been for six months in the Fold, and whose maintenance during that period has been defrayed from the funds of the institution, may be placed out at service. This privilege also extends to the disposition of children under 10 years of age who have been in the Fold over 12 months. The statement made by Mr. Melville Brown to the State Charities Aid Association alleged that Mr. Cowley was said to have exercised wanton cruelty toward the children under his care, as reported by children who had formerly been inmates of the Children's Fold. One of these statements was made by Jennie Mills, a girl of eighteen, who had been an inmate of the Fold for eight years. She said that Mr. Cowley was in the habit of treating the children with great cruelty. He would often beat them with whips and other articles, and, not being content with this method, would frequently kick the children while administering punishment. On one occasion Mr. Cowley had punished her little brother with a shoe, and striking him on the head had cut him badly, causing a wound from which the blood flowed freely. Jennie further asserted that Mrs. Cowley was continually complaining to her husband regarding the conduct of the children, and that Mr. Cowley, after hearing her stories, would fly into a passion and beat the unfortunate children with a whip or his slipper, whichever was nearest at hand. Jennie cited the case of Fannie McCurdy, only 6 years of age, whom she alleged was punished so frequently by Mr. Cowley that she would kneel to him in the most abject manner. At one time he struck this child under the eye with such force as to raise a lump which remained for several days. Fannie received this brutal punishment because she had refused to perform some menial act of service for Mrs. Cowley's nephew. Jennie Fuller, another victim, stated that she had been on one occasion locked up by Mr. Cowley during an entire night, in a water closet, for some act of disobedience. Both Mr. and Mrs. Cowley, she said, were not only in the habit of abusing and maltreating their unfortunate charges, but frequently used opprobrious language to them, taunting them with being "little bastards," and telling them they were only fit to be inmates of disreputable houses. Mr. Cowley was also in the habit of swearing at them. The food served to the children, she said, was some times very poor, and that, from the use of bad meat, at one time, a skin disease had broken out among them. Two little girls, named Fanny McBride and Kate McCurdy, related similar tales of abusive treatment.

After hearing these statements, the committee of the State Charities Aid Association commenced an investigation of the manner in which the Children's Fold was being conducted, and in order that no injury might be done to the usefulness of the institution, whose mode of operations the State Board favors, the investigation was conducted with as much secrecy as possible. The result of the inquiry of the committee was laid before the Board of Trustees of the Children's Fold, together with a resolution recommending a change in the management of the institution, involving the retirement of Mr. Cowley from the position of Superintendent. The committee, comprised of Theodore Roosevelt, Mr. Henry L. Hogner, and Mrs. Josephine S. Lowell. Mr. Roosevelt and Mrs. Lowell visited Albany last Friday and laid the entire matter before the State Board, and the latter will probably indorse the action of the committee and make a report to the public.

Mr. Theodore Roosevelt informed a TIMES reporter last evening that he was sorry for the publicity that the matter had obtained, and that he had every reason to believe that the Children's Fold would be properly conducted hereafter.

CLEVER CAPTURE OF A BURGLAR.

At 3 o'clock yesterday morning the family of Mr. Charles Heath, residing in a handsome dwelling on South Orange avenue, Newark, N. J., were awakened by noises in the house. Attired like Mark Twain's Sandwich Islanders, in a night-shirt and a rifle, Mr. Heath dashed out into the hall. Two men ran out of the house through a rear door. A third he was in the act of seizing, when the fellow succeeded in eluding his grasp, and followed his companions into the yard. Mr. Heath followed, and discharged his rifle just as the burglar was mounting the fence. The ball missed its mark, but the shot brought him to terms, and he meekly surrendered. When searched, a five-barreled revolver was found upon him. Some officers who had heard the shooting ran to the house, and the prisoner was given into their custody and taken to the Police Station. There he gave his name as Frank Doyle, and his place of residence as South Orange. The burglars had packed up about $500 worth of apparel, and placed it in the yard, where it was found.

MEETING OF SPIRITUALISTS.

Lyman C. Howe, trance-speaker, lectured before the Society of Progressive Spiritualists, at Republican Hall, West Thirty-third street and Sixth avenue, last evening, upon the subject, "What do we know, and how do we know it?" Several hundred persons were present and listened to the address with marked attention. At the close of the lecture a copy of a petition to the American Minister at London, praying for his interference in behalf of Dr. Slade, the American medium, was circulated for signatures. The petition recites the history of Dr. Slade's arrest on a charge of "vagabondism and palmistry," preferred by Drs. Lankester and Donkin, and his subsequent conviction and sentence to three months' confinement in the House of Correction. It concludes by requesting "his Excellency" Mr. Pierrepont to see that justice is done in the case, and that American citizens traveling abroad be protected against the operation of "antiquated laws," unknown to them and antagonistic to the spirit of the age.

THOUGHTS OF THE PULPIT.

THE DESTINY OF THE REPUBLIC.

SOCIAL PROBLEMS DISCUSSED BY REV. JOHN COTTON SMITH — THE INFLUENCE OF CHRISTIANITY IN THE COMING CENTURY.

Rev. Dr. John Cotton Smith delivered another of his series of lectures upon the "Past and Future of the Republic," in the Church of the Ascension, Fifth avenue and Tenth street, yesterday afternoon, his subject being "The Influence of Christianity in the Coming Century upon Social Evils in the Republic." He said we knew what would be in the future from what was now known. Natural forces operated in the future by the laws which governed them in the past. We inferred the unknown from the known. The development of history was governed by universal law. He took it for granted that in the future, as in the past, good would prevail over evil. God was evidently guiding this nation in its future as in its past history, and the past history of the Republic gave evidence that it had a great destiny in the future. The more completely a nation conformed to Christian ideas the more prosperous it became. The progress of education in this country had swept away innumerable prejudices which had previously been great barriers to the advancement of Christian civilization, and the principles of the Christian religion had proved to be the great safeguard of the Republic. In the future these principles would come to be so recognised by the Government that we should have law framed and administered on a Christian basis, and yet have no visible or formal union of Church and State. This was the only country in which there had been an attempted divorcement of Christianity from social and political matters, but the principles of Christianity were so powerfully working that their recognition must follow as a matter of course. The opponents of Christianity had been compelled to shift their ground. They had formerly attacked it on the ground of transcendentalism, and because it was the mere product of myths and legends, but they now were forced to admit its historical basis. Notwithstanding all reports to the contrary, Christianity was never so firmly intrenched as it is to-day, and never was there so much inquiry into the truths of the Bible as at the present time. The attacks on Christianity were growing more reverential in their character, and greater consideration was being paid in discussing the nature and objects of the mission of Jesus. Christianity differed from every other form of religion, in that it strove to remove all the social evils and moral wrongs which have desolated humanity, and the ultimate triumph of Christianity would be coincident with the disappearance of these evils and wrongs. The demoralization of society at the time of the advent of Christ was something intolerable and almost incredible as compared with the present time. One of the great social evils of the present day was pauperism. Several socialistic or communistic efforts had been made for the amelioration of the condition of the poorer classes, but they all lacked the kind and charitable spirit which dominated Christianity. What was wanted was a Divine socialism which should carry out the ideas of co-operation on a Christian basis. The power of Christianity actuating and animating the free principles of Christianity would solve this great social problem, which, at present, seemed so full of difficulty and danger. The cold, unsympathetic operation of natural laws alone would not answer; the inspiration of Christianity was needed. The solution to the question of relieving beggars, some said give to all, and you will be sure to aid some who are worthy; others said, give to none, for fear of impostors. The right way was to act from a sense of duty as well as charity, and endeavor to investigate, as far as practicable, into the justice of each individual case. The erection of suitable dwellings for the poor was what was greatly needed in this City. Mr. George Peabody had made such a provision in London that Lord Derby recently said that in a short time every poor man in London could own a home. Dr. Smith postponed the consideration of other social evils for want of time to present them as fully as he desired.

CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS.

CELEBRATION OF ITS NINTH ANNIVERSARY —SERMON BY REV. DR. CHARLES F. DEEMS — COMMODORE VANDERBILT'S MUNIFICENT GIFTS TO THE CHURCH.

The ninth anniversary of the Church of the Strangers was celebrated yesterday, Rev. Dr. Charles F. Deems conducting the exercises. It has been the custom heretofore to celebrate the anniversary of this church on the first Sunday in January, but owing to the fact that the funeral services of its founder, Commodore Vanderbilt, were performed in it on Sunday last, the celebration was postponed until yesterday. The church and altar are still heavily draped with black, in memory of Commodore Vanderbilt, and his family pew is also covered with emblems of mourning. Mrs. Vanderbilt did not attend the services yesterday, being confined to the house with a severe cold. Her brother, Mr. Robert Crawford, and his family, and her cousin, Dr. Barrett, of Virginia, were present. All the seats of the church were occupied at an early hour, and many persons stood in the aisles and vacant spaces near the doors during the exercises. After the regular morning services, during which Dr. Deems offered a prayer appropriate to the occasion, and the reading of a number of church notices, Dr. Deems said that he had been accustomed to receive at his house, from 4 to 6 P. M., on Mondays, Thursdays, and Fridays. These receptions had been appointed especially for the members of his church and strangers who desired to see the Pastor. But so many others had taken advantage of the appointments as to drive his own people away, and overrun him with applications for what he could not give. It would seem as if it was the impression that his house was a general intelligence office and the head-quarters of the Department of Charities and Correction. He wished it to be distinctly understood that he had no time to go about seeking employment for any one, and that he would not give pecuniary aid to any one in his house. The best time to see him was to call between the hours of 9 and 10 A. M. This was done through the Sisters of the Stranger, who met every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, in the Chapel, from 3 to 5 P. M. The fund in their hands was intended for distressed strangers, and not for the settled poor, who should apply to the City charities. He would not be so elaborate in his complaint, if the house he built with the interest from it was done with

THE LOUISIANA SITUATION.

THE PRESIDENT'S ORDER.

EXCITEMENT IN NEW-ORLEANS—THREATS OF "CLEANING OUT THE TROOPS"—GEN. AUGUR'S INTERPRETATION OF HIS INSTRUCTIONS—WHAT HE WOULD CONSIDER A BREACH OF THE PEACE—A RATTLESNAKE EDITORIAL IN NICHOLLS' DEMOCRATIC ORGAN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 15.—The situation here remains about the same as on Saturday. The President's dispatch of yesterday to Gen. Augur gives the Republicans and all good people great comfort, and seems to be a beginning of the end. It appears to be a complete recognition of the legal State Government, but Gen. Augur does not feel the necessity of doing any act to sustain it. He stands upon his order to keep the peace, and, interpreting that, he believes that a White League uprising, which by armed force has scattered the Police, taken possession of the city, forced the door of the mortgage office and installed pretenders in office, driven the Judges of the Supreme Court from the proper court room for the purpose of setting up a bogus court, and put armed sentries around the State-house to the terror of the members of the Legislature, are measures not breaking the peace of the Commonwealth. As a poor bulldozed man said before the Senate Committee: "A Republican must be killed before he can be protected."

The city is in a state of feverish excitement. The White League, called "a Sheriff's posse," are massed at Jackson square and in the court-house, near by, as if expecting an attack. Mr. Bourges, appointed acting Sheriff by Chief Justice Ludeling, demanded of the insurgents to-day possession of the Supreme Court-room, and of course was refused. They told him to come and take it. Five thousand White Leaguers are ready to fight at the sound of the fire-bell signal, and no force that Gov. Packard can muster would have any chance of succeeding against them. There is much hot talk on the streets of cleaning out the United States soldiers, and of making wholesale assassination of Republicans. The Democrat, official organ of Nicholls, says this evening:

"Mr. Packard, however, is playing a dangerous game. The patience of the people is well-nigh exhausted, and if they are forced into a conflict which is calculated and designed to again rob them of the Government of their choice and the blessings of an honest and efficient administration, their wrath will be difficult to restrain, and we, for one, hope no hand will be able to restrain it. If Mr. Packard forces this conflict, we appeal to our friends to spare, as far as a final and complete victory will permit, the lives of the Metropolitans and the negro dupes. We advise them to let the full weight of their vengeance fall upon the leaders of this iniquitous, murderous and most damnable scheme, and to follow Packard into his hotel, and if need be into the Custom-house itself and hang him from its highest window."

This is but a sample of what is printed and gives but a faint idea of what is talked. Gov. Packard's proclamation of this day appeals to the good citizens of the State to assist him in restoring order, preserving the peace and enforcing the laws; but it is not likely to disperse the armed White League, acting under the orders of Mr. Nicholls. The Legislature met to-day with a quorum in joint session, but did not succeed in electing a United States Senator.

THE DISPATCH OF THE PRESIDENT RELATING TO RECOGNITION—PROCLAMATION OF GOV. PACKARD COMMANDING THE LAWLESS BANDS AND CONSPIRATORS TO DISPERSE — GEN. AUGUR'S CONSTRUCTION OF THE PRESIDENT'S DISPATCH.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 15.—The following was received at a late hour last night, and copies furnished to Messrs. Packard and Nicholls:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 14.

Gen. C. C. Augur, New-Orleans, La.:

It has been the policy of the Administration to take no part in the settlement of the question of the rightful Government in the State of Louisiana, at least not until the Congressional committees now there have made their report. But it is not proper to sit quietly by and see the State Government gradually taken possession of by one of the claimants for Gubernatorial honors by illegal means. The Supreme Court set up by Mr. Nicholls can receive no more recognition than any other equal number of lawyers convened on the call of any other citizen of the State. A Returning Board existing in accordance with law, and having judicial as well as ministerial powers over the count of the votes and in declaring the result of the late election, have given certificates of election to the Legislature of the State; a legal quorum of which house, holding such certificates, met and declared Mr. Packard Governor. Should there be a necessity for the recognition of either, it must be Mr. Packard. You may furnish a copy of this to Mr. Packard and to Mr. Nicholls.

U. S. GRANT, President.

The following was issued at 10 A. M. to-day:

PROCLAMATION.

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

Whereas, There exists an organized and armed combination and conspiracy of men which is now openly unlawful and violent resistance to the lawful authority of the State Government; and whereas, an unlawful and revolutionary body claiming to be the General Assembly is now holding sessions and assuming to act as the Legislature in the City of New Orleans; and whereas, certain persons are without authority, and in defiance of law, assuming to act as the Legislature in the City of New-Orleans; and whereas, certain persons are without authority, and in defiance of law, assuming to act as executive and judicial officers in places to which they have not been elected and commissioned or legally appointed; and whereas, certain persons are without authority, and in defiance of law, assuming to act as Judges of the Supreme Court; and whereas, during the past week the aforesaid combination and conspiracy has culminated in the massing in the streets of the White League—large bodies organized in companies and under commanders—which armed bodies have taken possession of the streets and thoroughfares, have marched over the city, have taken unlawful and forcible possession of the stations of the Metropolitan Police, of the State Arsenal, of arms of the State, and of the court rooms of the Municipal Judges, of the office of the Recorder of Mortgages, and have also taken possession of the rooms of the Supreme Court, and of the records and archives of the same, and have violently prevented the Judges thereof from access to the same:

Now, therefore, I, Stephen B. Packard, Governor of Louisiana, and in the name and by the authority of the people of Louisiana, command said body of persons pretending to be a General Assembly to desist from further prosecution of their lawless and treasonable conspiracy, and to immediately disperse. And I command the persons aforesaid claiming to act as Judges of the Supreme Court, and all persons supporting, aiding, and abetting them thereby, and all persons unlawfully assuming to act as executive and judicial officers, and all persons having possession of the police stations, and assuming to act as policemen on the streets, and all armed bodies of men not acting under authority of the lawful Government as above recited, to immediately desist from the aforesaid unlawful acts, and to disperse and retire to their homes, and abstain and desist from the law; and I command all persons having in their possession or under their care and control any arms and munitions or other property belonging to the State, taken from the lawful custodians thereof, to immediately deliver up the same to the proper authorities. I further order and command all good citizens of the State to assist me in restoring order, preserving the peace, and enforcing the laws.

Given under my hand and great seal of this State this 15th day of January, A. D. 1877, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and first, at New-Orleans.

STEPHEN B. PACKARD.

By the Governor.

EMILE HONORE, Secretary of State.

Up to noon nothing farther had been received by Gen. Augur from Washington. A Republican extra says:

"For the last few days the White Leaguers have had masters all their own way, but with the beginning of a new week comes a change. The clear and positive language of the President in his dispatch to Gen. Augur cannot be misunderstood. The proclamation of Gov. Packard is expressed in terms equally plain. The White League interregnum is at an end. The State will proceed without further delay to resume control over all the departments of the Government which had been temporarily possessed by lawless means in the interest of a little ring of local office-seeking politicians."

The Picayune extra says that every preparation has been made by the Governor (meaning Nicholls) to quell any disturbance that may be raised by "the drunken rabble of the St. Louis Hotel," and orders are peremptory that any such tumult or emeute on the part of the followers of the "pretender Packard" shall be quelled by the severest measures and at any cost. It also contains the following interview with Gen. Augur:

Reporter—General, I have called to ascertain your construction of the telegram from the President.

Gen. Augur—I construe it as not recognising either of the claimants of the Governorship.

Reporter—What is the necessity for recognition mentioned in the dispatch? Under what circumstances will such recognition become necessary?

Gen. Augur—The President is judge of that; it is for him to determine when and how recognition shall be made. He is as well informed of the facts on both sides as I am myself.

Reporter—In case the "necessity" referred to is considered to have arisen, to whom will application for recognition be made?

Gen. Augur—To the President.

An extra published at 2 P. M. contains the following: Judge Shaw has issued a writ of habeas corpus requiring Criminal Sheriff House to produce the bodies of the Assistant Sergeants at Arms, now in the parish prison, who were arrested by Boylands' Police while attempting to arrest Senators at Mr. Pinchback's house. The writ was served by a person appointed Sheriff by Judge Shaw.

The following order has been received by Sheriff Handy:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, SIXTH DISTRICT COURT, } PARISH OF ORLEANS. }

To Thomas Handy, Civil Sheriff of the Parish of Orleans:

Considering that a certain proclamation signed by S. B. Packard, a wicked and shameless impostor, has come to the view of this court; considering that the pretensions of said individual to be Governor of Louisiana have no foundation except so far as he falsely claims to be supported by the irresistible power of the national forces, it is ordered that the Civil Sheriff of this Parish of Orleans do provide a sufficient force to guard this court from any violence or intrusion.

By order of the court:

J. V. GUILLOTTE, Clerk.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 15, 1877.

Gov. Packard to-day made an official requisition upon Gen. Augur for assistance to reinstall the Supreme Court in the building from which they have been dispossessed. It is supposed Gen. Augur had referred the matter to the authorities at Washington for instructions. A number of bankers telegraphed President Grant to-day in relation to the Nicholls Legislature, showing that the Senate had a quorum of members about whose membership there was no contest.

Nicholls' Police at the Court-house and the stations have been reinforced to prevent the recapture of those places, but there is no indication of an aggressive movement at the State-house. It is probable that the Senate committee will conclude its labors Friday.

THE INVESTIGATION.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 15.—The Senate Committee resumed consideration of East Feliciana Parish to-day.

Dr. Conith, Judge Kilburne, and L. J. Fugua, testified to a quiet and peaceable election in November last. The last named said that the day before the parish officials were driven away in 1875 the people of Clinton feared an uprising, and that D. B. Gorham, who is now acting as Republican counsel here, had asked him for a gun to fight the blacks.

Jesse Harrison, Aaron Harrison, and John Morton (all colored) testified to voting the Democratic ticket, and that there was a peaceful election.

THE SENATE SUB-COMMITTEE.

The Senate sub-committee were engaged to-day in examining witnesses relative to the Parish of West Feliciana. Washington Spooner, L. J. Cotton, and J. W. Armistead testified to general intimidation by Regulators, and to numerous acts of violence to induce them and other colored men to join the Democrats, and that while on the day of the election everything was quiet, there had been so much intimidation before, caused by whippings and riding throughout the parish, that colored men were afraid to vote the Republican ticket. Cotton said he was whipped by Capt. J. J. Barrow for refusing to join the Democratic clubs, and that Barrow afterward threatened to shoot him. He finally voted the Democratic ticket, but after the election his house and stock of cotton were burned. Spooner gave a long list of colored men who were forced to vote the Democratic ticket, and said he could furnish a list of 25 or 30 others.

THE HOUSE COMMITTEE.

United States Commissioner Woolley testified before the House Committee to-day in regard to the affidavits appearing in Senator Sherman's report, and said that he knew that very few of the affidavit papers were brought to him, and that he called out the names and swore the persons answering. In regard to the registration books being brought to the Custom-house a few days before the election, witness denied Judge Dibble's statement that he had ordered them to be brought there, and said no did not know who had ordered them to be brought.

Gov. Kellogg filed statements relative to public debts, &c., all of which have appeared in his Message and the reports of State officials. Gov. Kellogg testified at considerable length in regard to Supervisors, their appointment, &c. In answer to a question of Mr. Townsend as to the statements of P. B. Morgan about conversations between Kellogg, Anderson, (the Supervisor of East Feliciana,) and Morgan as to election matters in that parish and elsewhere, Gov. Kellogg said: "Morgan has perjured himself; I never had any such conversation. On one or two occasions he came to my room, and finally he insisted on my giving him more. He told me he was clerking in the Custom-house. I inquired of Herwig and found that Morgan was employed there. I requested his discharge, and he was discharged."

E. A. Burke testified as to fraudulent registration and the closing of registration before persons could register. He stated also that Supervisor Anderson told him of a conspiracy on the part of the Republicans to throw out a large number of polls and parishes, and said he would furnish the proof for $4,000, and if not, he would make terms with Kellogg, Pitkin, and others. He failed to raise the $4,000, and it ended there.

COMMENT ON RECOGNITION.

VIOLENT TALK AMONG THE WHITE LEAGUE REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS — NICHOLLS TO BE SUSTAINED EVEN AGAINST THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT — MODERATE MEN OF BOTH PARTIES SATISFIED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The announcement that the President had instructed Gen. Augur, Commander of the United States troops in New-Orleans, to recognize the Packard Government, if the occasion should arise, which was printed in THE TIMES this morning, has created a great deal of excitement and comment here. The Southern members, and especially the Democratic Representatives from Louisiana, denounce the President in unmeasured terms, and declare that his action is arbitrary and unjust. Some of the more violent among them say that even if the troops do interfere they will be unable to keep Gov. Packard in power. They openly threaten that if Nicholls is not allowed to continue his bogus administration as he has commenced, the Packard Government will be overthrown in spite of the troops, and the Republican Legislature broken up, even though it be necessary to fire on the flag to attain that end. They are determined, they say, to have a military Government rather than Packard. As has already been stated, these and other like expressions come from the more violent White League partisans, and they are generally regarded as nothing more than the Southern bluster to which the country has become accustomed. The moderate men of both parties take a very different view of the affair, and, with but few exceptions, they join in commending the action of the President and in expressing the opinion that his recognition of Gov. Packard is well calculated to prevent trouble and preserve the peace.

PLACED UNDER HEAVY BONDS.

BOSTON, Jan. 15.—In the Municipal Court this morning, Benjamin Hawes and Isaac F. Fosenden, the parties who were in the sleigh by which Mr. Augustus G. Hill was run over and killed on Tremont street, corner of Beacon, yesterday afternoon, were held in $10,000 each for examination on the 19th inst.

THE MISSISSIPPI ELECTIONS.

THE INVESTIGATION BEFORE THE SENATE ELECTION COMMITTEE—EVIDENCE OF INTIMIDATION—DEMOCRATS SPEAKING AT REPUBLICAN MEETINGS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections continued this afternoon the investigation in regard to the conduct of the late election in Mississippi. Judge G. T. Swan, Clerk of the United States Circuit and District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, was examined by Senator Mitchell. He testified that personally he saw no intimidation of voters, but he had often been appealed to by colored men about the time of the last election, who came to him and complained that they were unable to register, because they could not give the exact geographical location of their place of residence in the election district in which they lived. He referred all persons who came to him to the United States District Attorney, but those who made the complaints were generally unwilling to go into the courts and testify, for fear of being thrown out of employment or of having bodily harm done them by their political opponents. Witness stated that one of the frauds practiced on the ignorant voters at the late election, by the Democrats, was to give out Democratic tickets with likenesses of Hayes and Wheeler on them. Witness attended a Republican convention at Raymond last July, and during the session of the convention George W. Harper, a Democratic newspaper editor, of Jackson, made a fiery Democratic speech; witness and other members of the convention objected to Mr. Harper's speaking, but their objections were of no avail. The witness was examined at some length in relation to the Clinton riot, which occurred on the 4th of September, 1875, but his testimony did not differ from the accounts heretofore published of that affair.

William Price was the next witness called, but the committee adjourned before concluding his examination.

THE ICE IN THE OHIO RIVER.

THE BREAK-UP ONE OF THE MOST DISASTROUS ON RECORD—THE ESTIMATED LOSSES—SEVERAL STEAMERS AND BARGES DESTROYED—PERILOUS VOYAGES ON FLOATING ICE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 15.—The ice has been running on the Ohio River to-day in great quantities, but the damage to property has been small in comparison with yesterday. A gorge formed at Middleport Point, 200 miles above here, at 2 o'clock this morning, and for 18 hours the ice continued to pile up in huge blocks until it reached an immense height. At 9 o'clock to-night the gorge broke with tremendous force, playing havoc with a number of steam-boats and barges. Every precaution possible was taken, but when the crash came it caused general destruction. Two steam-boats were sunk, two others carried away by moving ice, and three more broken to pieces and left valueless. Great excitement prevails, and there is danger of further loss. To-day the banks of the Ohio are strewed for miles with wrecks of steam-boats and coal-barges. Considerable damage to property has been done at points below here. It has been the most disastrous break-up ever known on the Ohio River, and the total of losses will hardly fall short of $4,000,000. The rivers are all rising now, and there is a prospect of disastrous floods.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 15.—The present break-up of the ice in the river has been one of the most disastrous on record, not only at this place, but at every point between here and Pittsburg. The lowest estimate of the damage done here is $250,000, and the highest estimate is placed at $400,000. The heaviest losses seem at this writing to be with coal-dealers. There were 70 loaded and 150 empty barges sunk or carried away from their landings at this place. The most of those not actually sunk have been left in such a condition that nothing can be done for them, and they will be eventually lost. It is not certainly known whether there was any loss of life attending the break-up at this point, though a number of barges that were swept away had men aboard who have not since been heard from. Two of the boats—half barge and half cottage—which were used as family habitations, were carried away. A father and son on one of them escaped to the shore on the ice, and the rest were eventually rescued at points below the city. When the wrecked steamer Calumet was swept away, Capt. Dugan and the mate were aboard, but made their escape by jumping on the Go.den City when the wreck reached that steamer. The small propeller Mocking Bird, and the steamer Naomi, were sunk late last evening. The steamer Alex Kendall, which was sunk below the city, had a cargo of merchandise from Cincinnati, valued at $10,000, which will prove a total loss. The Cincinnati and Maysville packet, Handy, was also sunk; she was valued at $4,000, and owned by Capt. Pennyall. The following are the estimated damages suffered by coal-dealers through the movement of the ice during Saturday night and Sunday: At Walter's Landing, $60,000; at Stewart's Landing, $5,000; at Crant & Wells' Landing, $22,000; at Walmer's Landing, $3,000; at Cochenower's Landing, $2,500; at Pickleheimer's Landing, $6,000; at Samuel Brown's Landing, $14,000; at the Queen City Elevator, $20,000; at Collier & Budd's Landing, $3,000; at Zimmerman's Landing, $6,000; at Salt Barges Landing, $8,000; at Licking River, $7,000; two produce boats, $3,000. The river here and at points above, is reported full of floating ice. No gorges remain in this vicinity.

MADISON, Ind., Jan. 15.—A storm of rain and sleet began here yesterday and continued all night. The ice in the river was very heavy this morning. The steamer Bannock City has been destroyed by the ice. No other damage has resulted to boats in the Kentucky River as far as known. Twelve barges have been carried away from this city, and over 100 have passed in the ice since daylight. John McLaughlin, the man who was carried away in a coal barge from Cincinnati at 10 o'clock yesterday morning, was rescued this morning from a cake of floating ice by a party of men near the Mammoth Cave Furnaces. He left the barge at daylight, and tried to reach the shore on the ice, but failed, and had been drifting on the small ice-floe from which he was taken for several hours.

LOUISVILLE, Jan. 15.—The gorges above are all broken, and the river is free of ice. The only steamer damaged, so far as heard from, is the Peyton. She had a hole knocked in her side by the ice, and is now believed to be sinking. The river is rising at the rate of two inches an hour.

It is said that a scene similar to that presented by the Ohio River at this point to-day was never before witnessed. The rain fell all day, and the ice was so clogged that one could scarcely see an object 100 feet away. The wharf was lined with people all day. Gorged ice, varying in size from a wheelbarrow to a circus tent, floated down the river and over the falls the entire day, stretching from the Kentucky to the Indiana shore as far up and down the stream as the eye could reach. The noise made by the ice as it proceeded over the falls resembled very much that heard at Niagara, and the scene here is said to be equally as grand as the one there. The grandeur was increased by parts of steam-boats, dozens of barges, flat boats, rafts, logs of timber and many other kinds of perishable property all heaped together and floating swiftly on with the ice. It is said that a part of the steamer Bannock City passed over the falls to-day, and another report states that a barge containing five men crying for help also went over. The damage here, singular to say, has been very small, not more than seven barges having been injured and lost, and no steamers whatever, except the Peytona, in whose side a hole was knocked this morning.

THE FINANCES OF MASSACHUSETTS.

BOSTON, Jan. 15.—The annual report of the State Auditor was submitted to the Legislature this afternoon, and is in substance as follows: Estimated expenditures for 1877, $4,771,300; revenue, $4,008,241; deficit, $763,059. Of the funded debt, $850,000 will fall due in 1877. There must therefore be a State tax of from $1,200,000 to $1,400,000, which is the smallest State tax since 1861; that of 1865 was $4,706,000. The funded debt of the State is $33,550,000, a reduction of $336,000 from the previous year. The net cost of the Hoosac Tunnel and Troy and Greenfield Railroad has been $17,200,979, of which $3,000,000 was added during the past year.

GENERAL POLITICAL NEWS.

A FRUITLESS HUNT.

FAILURE OF THE LATEST DEMOCRATIC EFFORT TO HELP THEIR CASE—THE CHAIRMAN AND SECRETARY OF THE REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON THE WITNESS STAND—COLD COMFORT FOR THE TILDENITES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—Ex-Gov. McCormick, Secretary of the National Republican Committee, was this morning examined by the Committee on Privileges of the House, and testified at length as to the telegrams which he sent to Florida and other States during the recent political campaign. The Democratic members of the committee were allowed to freely examine the dispatches in question, but they were unable to find anything in them which helped the cause of Tilden and Reform. Then they tried to make Mr. McCormick uncomfortable by asking him what amount of money his committee had expended for the purpose of carrying the election. In this they also failed, for the witness told them very promptly that although their question was opening a new and unusual field of inquiry he had no objection to answering. He first desired, however, to consult with other members of the committee, not necessarily for advice but out of respect for them. At this point the form of the question was changed, and Mr. McCormick was asked if any money had been contributed to the election fund by Government employes, and, if so, what was the amount? The witness expressed his willingness to answer this question also, but asked that before doing so he might be allowed to consult with his associates on the committee. His request was granted, and the examination was closed for the day.

This evening, during a conversation with your correspondent, Mr. McCormick stated that he had seen a number of his colleagues, and that they were not only willing but anxious to have the questions referred to answered freely and fully. If the interrogations are pressed the witness will be able to show that the amount expended by the Republican Committee was remarkably small, much less, indeed, than in any recent campaign, and that every dollar disbursed was for legitimate and legal election purposes. If the questions are asked, similar ones will be put to certain members of the Democratic Committee, and there is good reason to believe that they will not be so readily or satisfactorily answered. The reports the Democrats have circulated concerning Secretary Chandler's refusal to testify are mostly false in every particular. He has not answered those questions which relate to deliberations in Cabinet meetings, but he will at least satisfy the committee before they are through with him that they have applied to the wrong person for information which will offset the Oregon corruption proved against the Tilden party. The telegrams which they have are bogus, and probably manufactured for this occasion.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

The House Special Committee on the Duties, Powers, and Privileges of the House have removed their injunction of secrecy in their examination of Representative Purman. On Saturday they asked him how many telegrams he saw signed Z. Chandler on the day after the election, the 8th of November. He replied that he could not distinctly say, but to the best of his recollection about two or three.

Q.—Do you recollect a telegram on the receipt of which Gov. Stearns said, "That puts me on my feet; I can act?" A.—No, Sir; I knew of no such telegram.

Q.—Do you recollect a telegram from Mr. Chandler in which the word "troops" was mentioned? A.—I do not.

Q.—In which he mentioned that he had seen the President? A.—I do not know; I have no recollection of any telegram of that kind.

Q.—Have you any recollection of any telegram in which he stated that he had seen the President and the Secretary of War? A.—I certainly have not; it may be that I did not see the telegram.

Q.—Did you see a telegram from Mr. Chandler in which he said, "Let nothing go undone?" A.—I do not recognize these words as having come to any telegram, and yet, of course, I have a confused recollection of all our telegrams from all parties; I have no recollection of any telegram coming from him containing these words. Witness, on further interrogation said he had no recollection of any telegram in particular.

Q.—You have mentioned two or three telegrams; can you tell the substance of the language of them all? A.—My recollection now of the substance of these telegrams would be this—to preserve the result of the election. The substance was this: "As you have carried the State by a Republican majority, preserve it and keep yourselves from being defrauded out of it."

Q.—Is that the substance of all those telegrams. A.—Yes, Sir. Witness said he had also received a telegram from William E. Chandler to about the same effect as above.

Q.—Can you tell how Mr. Chandler, in New-York, could find out, on the 8th of November, that Florida had been carried for Hayes? A.—Because I myself telegraphed to New-York from Florida some time early on the 8th, or probably on the night of the 7th, that the State had gone Republican by several thousand majority.

Q.—To whom did you telegraph? A.—To the National Committee, from Tallahassee.

Q.—Was there any answer to your telegram? A.—I can only answer that by saying I received telegrams, and that Gov. Stearns received telegrams, and that Mr. Martin received telegrams, and that we threw them into a common pool, regardless as to whom they were addressed; whether I received any direct answer to my first telegram I do not recollect now.

Q.—Where is that pool now? A.—Possibly the telegrams are burned up or destroyed, or probably somebody in the State has custody of them.

Q.—Did you see any telegram that anybody else sent except yourself? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you see this telegram from Gov. Stearns? "We cannot carry it for Hayes unless we have the army to back us and money immediately; train wrecked; Kuklux." A.—I never saw that telegram.

Q.—Or anything like it? A.—Nothing like it ever came under my observation to my knowledge.

EX-GOV. M'CORMICK'S TESTIMONY.

Richard McCormick, Secretary of the National Republican Committee, was examined to-day. He was asked whether he sent any telegram to Florida or Louisiana on the 8th of November, and replied, none that he remembered, except those sent in Secretary Chandler's name. He prepared some of them. He thought he saw or knew of but two or three from Mr. Chandler to the States of Florida, Louisiana, and South Carolina. The telegrams were in his possession. The telegram to Florida was addressed to Mr. Martin, the Chairman of the Committee. As to Louisiana, the telegrams were divided. Sometimes the telegrams were sent to Mr. Packard, sometimes to Gov. Kellogg, and sometimes to Mr. Pitkin, the Marshal. He did not remember any one else to whom telegrams were sent. The telegrams received were in witness' possession. In some instances copies of the telegrams sent from the committee were preserved and others not, owing to the great confusion in the rooms. He would produce all the telegrams he had. The witness then produced a telegram dated New-Orleans, Nov. 11, 1876, and sent to Secretary Chandler by Mr. A. Dumont, Chairman of the Louisiana Republican State Committee, and addressed to the people of the United States. This was not, however, published. It commenced by saying: "Persistent efforts having been made by the Democratic politicians of the country and this State to conceal from the people of this country the true condition of affairs in this State, it is deemed necessary to state them plainly, and without coloring." After a long statement on the subject, the address concluded as follows: Ever since the surrender in 1865 the armed Southern mob have, either in mass or in detachments, wantonly defied the authority of the Government, riddled its guarantees with bullets, and with cold hands have drawn a smear of blood across the amendments to the Constitution; and it now remains for the American people to consider whether they can permit the candidate of these murderous combinations to ascend to the Executive chair of the Republic, because of the suppression of our popular consent, and because the Returning Board, duly constituted and gladly utilized even by the Democrats of Louisiana in 1872, are now threatened in their lives and persons should they dare declare the result as the law and the evidence, and their oaths constrain. The Democracy of the North has dispatched some of its leading members hither to influence Northern opinion through the prints, and incite the disciplined White Leaguers to save Tilden by their bayonets. We call upon the Logans, the Dixes, the Hoars, the Blaines, and the Mortons, to be likewise present and satisfy themselves and those at the North, to whom they can authenticate our honest purpose and our grievances.

A. DUMONT,
Chairman Republican State Committee.

The following question was asked: Do you know of any moneys being used at the late election on behalf of the Republican National Committee to influence votes? Objected to by Mr. Burchard, who said that if that general field of examination were entered upon, the Republican members of the committee would offer testimony on the other side. The objection was overruled, and witness was directed to answer the question.

Witness—As that question involves the general policy and conduct of the campaign, I should like the committee to allow me to confer with the members of the Republican National Committee before I make the reply. I do not say, of course, that I will not answer it, but I think I ought to confer with the gentlemen of the committee of which I am simply an executive officer.

Q.—Was there any assessment made on office-holders, throughout the United States, to obtain money for the purpose of being used in the election? A.—That is the same class of question, and I should like to ask the same privilege before answering it. You are entering upon a field which I did not suppose would be touched at all.

Further examination of the witness will be resumed to-morrow.

SECRETARY CHANDLER'S TESTIMONY.

The committee have also removed the injunction of secrecy placed upon the testimony of Secretary Chandler taken on Saturday. The testimony related mainly to correspondence between Secretary Chandler, as Secretary of the National Republican Committee, and Gov. Stearns and others in Florida, relating to the election in that State. The examination was conducted by Mr. Field. The following were some of the questions and answers:

Q.—On the 8th of November did you communicate by telegraph or letter with any persons in Florida? A.—I cannot answer that question; I should think it very likely, but I have no recollection.

Q.—To the best of your recollection did you? A.—I should think that the probability was that I did.

Q.—With whom? A.—If with anybody it was with Gov. Stearns; I remember receiving a telegram from him; my impression would be that I received it, but I am not certain on that point.

Q.—What was the telegram which you received from him? A.—I cannot answer that; there was something in it about a train being wrecked which was taking people to investigate; I should think it must have been the night after the election that that telegram was received.

Q.—Was the word "Kuklux" used in it? A.—That I cannot answer; the idea was that this wrecking of trains was done by evil-disposed persons to prevent the true returns from being brought in.

Q.—Was that telegram received from Stearns after you had sent him two telegrams that same day? A.—No, Sir; I should say not; my recollection would be that I had sent him no telegram prior to that.

Q.—Was not that telegram an answer to a telegram from you? A.—I think not; I have no recollection of having sent him a telegram prior to that.

Q.—Was not this telegram from Stearns to you, viz: "We cannot carry it for Hayes unless we have the Army to back us, and money immediately. Train wrecked. Kuklux?" A.—I don't think that was the telegram.

Q.—Will you state that it was not? A.—No, Sir; I have never seen the telegram from that day to this.

Q.—Have you no recollection about its contents? A.—(After examining the memorandum quoted by Mr. Field)—I will try to find that telegram; it is possible that this was the telegram, but it would not be according to my recollection.

Q.—Did you not, on the 8th of November, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, telegraph this to Gov. Stearns: "We have blank votes and must have Florida, South Carolina, and Louisiana, by fair means or otherwise; you can have all the soldiers and money you want?" A.—No, Sir; I never sent any such telegram, nor the substance of it.

Q.—Were any telegrams sent in your name without your knowledge? A.—Not that I am aware of.

Q.—Had anybody any authority to use your name in the telegraph office? A.—No, Sir; except under my direction.

Q.—Did you, on the same day, and after the one which I have asked you about, if any such was sent, telegraph to Gov. Stearns this: "You must send couriers to every county and doctor the returns to show a majority for Hayes?" A.—No Sir; I sent no such dispatch.

Q.—Did you send any of that purport in any way? A.—It is very possible that I may have telegraphed or written to him to send a man out to examine returns and prevent frauds; if I sent one at all it was to that purport.

Q.—Do you recollect whether you did or not? A.—No, Sir; I do not.

Q.—Is not this telegram to you about the wrecked train in answer to your telegram about sending out messengers? A.—No, Sir; I should say not; my recollection is that the first dispatch was from him.

Q.—Did you send a telegram to Gov. Stearns to send out couriers to different parts of Florida in relation to the returns? A.—I say that that is probable; I have no recollection on the subject; I know that I then wrote the telegram that I wanted these polls watched to prevent frauds.

Q.—The telegram from him was, as you say you think, on the 9th? A.—It was on the day after the election; on the night of the 8th, I should think.

Q.—After you got the telegram that the train had been wrecked, did you then telegraph to him to send couriers? A.—I cannot answer that; I knew that all day on Wednesday the thing looked pretty dark; I do not think that I sent any telegram to anybody.

Q.—But if you got this telegram from him that the train was wrecked in going out, do you think that after that you sent a telegram to him to send couriers? A.—I cannot answer that.

Q.—Refreshing your recollection as to that, do you not think that you telegraphed to Mr. Stearns on the first day after the election? A.—No, Sir. My recollection would be that I did not.

Q.—Did you not on that day, or the day after the election, telegraph to Mr. Stearns that William E. Chandler leaves for Florida to-night on important business? A.—I telegraphed that in all probability; I should say, however, that was the second day after the election.

Q.—Did you give him instructions in writing? A.—No; what for?

Q.—They were all verbal? A.—He was a member of the Executive Committee.

Q.—Did he receive any instructions? A.—None whatever.

Q.—He went there to do whatever he saw fit? A.—He went there to exercise his own judgment.

Q.—Without any instructions or information? A.—He had no instructions whatever, either written or oral.

Q.—Was anything said to him about money or troops? A.—Not that I am aware of.

Q.—In your communications with Gov. Stearns did you in any way say or insinuate anything about money? A.—I think not; I have no recollection of it.

Q.—Did you say or intimate anything about troops? A.—I should think I did.

Q.—What did you intimate or say? A.—That troops would be sent to keep the peace, or words to that effect; sent to Tallahassee.

Q.—Had you any authority to say that troops would be sent? A.—That I decline to answer.

Q.—On what ground? A.—On the ground that I have no right to divulge anything between the Executive and a member of his Cabinet.

Q.—Had you had an interview with the President on the subject of troops? [Objected to by Mr. Lawrence, and the question withdrawn.]

Q.—Did you make that communication about troops of your own motion, or at the suggestion of some one else—not in the Executive Department? A.—I decline to answer the question.

Q.—In any of your communications with Gov. Stearns, either to him or from him, was anything said about money? A.—I should think not; I have no recollection of it.

Q.—Did you, after your return to Washington, subsequent to the election, telegraph to Gov. Stearns that you had seen the President and Secretary of War? A.—I have no recollection of sending such a telegram.

Q.—Did you not, in a communication to Gov. Stearns, mention that you had an interview with one of these officers? A.—I say I have no recollection of it.

Q.—Will you say that you did not? A.—I cannot say that I did not, but I have no recollection of having sent such a telegram.

Q.—Did you telegraph in those words or their substance, viz: "I have seen the Secretary of War and am authorized to say to you that you can have all the money and troops that you want. Let nothing be undone?" A.—I never signed any such telegram.

Q.—Or any telegram containing a part of that? A.—Not to my recollection.

Q.—Did you send any telegram to him after your return to Washington? A.—I have no such recollection.

Secretary Chandler was questioned as to his correspondence with persons in Louisiana, and the following question was put: Will you produce the telegrams and letters that have passed between you and Gov. Kellogg since the election? A.—I will if I have them; I have not the slightest objection; there was not anything which I was not ready to show to the newspapers.

Mr. Field—Be good enough to look for them and produce them to the committee. Witness—Certainly.

Q.—In any communications with any officials in Louisiana, has anything been said about money or troops? A.—I cannot answer that; I do not recollect.

Q.—To the best of your recollection, was anything said about either of those subjects? A.—No, Sir; in no communication to me.

Q.—Whether to or from you? A.—I should say not; that would be my recollection; I want here to make a remark; a telegram is very much in the nature of a postal card in the mails, and I never put on the wires anything which I was not willing to see in print the next day.

Mr. Field—But you are aware that Congress has found it very difficult to get any of these telegrams.

Witness—For the first time.

Mr. Field—These postal cards have been in some way or another covered up.

Witness—There are, I suppose, 1,700 telegram offices where messages can be taken off 1,700 times, and I have never sent a telegram in my life that I was not willing to see in print the next day.

Q.—Did you authorize any telegram in the name of any one else? A.—Never, that I am aware of.

Q.—Did you sanction or were you informed of any telegram being sent on the business of the committee in the name of anybody than yourself? A.—Gov. McCormick sometimes telegraphed in his own name as Secretary.

Q.—With the exception of Gov. McCormick and yourself? A.—That is all.

THE NEW-JERSEY SENATORSHIP.

THE STRUGGLE FOR THE DEMOCRATIC NOMINATION—M'PHERSON AND GREEN—BEDLE MAKING A CATS-PAW OF JUDGE GREEN—THE PROBABLE REPUBLICAN NOMINEE—LAST NIGHT'S SESSION—THE SENATE COMMITTEES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TRENTON, Jan. 15.—The reconvening of both houses this evening was the signal, also, for the gathering of the friends of the several candidates for the United States Senatorship. The larger share of the interest is manifested in the result of the contest between the Democratic aspirants, because that party have, on a joint ballot, an apparent majority of one. Senator John R. McPherson still holds the lead which he has all along held, and expresses himself as confident of capturing the Democratic nomination. Judge Green is, however, gaining ground, and the developments of the next 24 hours may place him in the foreground. A large delegation of friends, mostly from Bergen County, is here warmly urging his claims. Among other things urged by him against McPherson, is the fact that he is from Hudson County, which has already secured her share, and more, in the distribution of Legislative gifts. His friends are confident that he is the coming man, while McPherson, with equal confidence, lays claim to 25 of the 41 caucus votes. Ex-Gov. Parker is also in the field, but his canvass has not as yet been very active. He will probably receive some votes from Burlington, and the votes of the Democrats in the Monmouth delegation. Attorney General Vannatta will probably receive, at the outset, what little of support Morris County may be able to give him. Besides Green and McPherson, the most prominent person mentioned in connection with the contest is Gov. Bedle. It has been thought in some quarters that Green's candidacy is merely a cover for his; but if that is the case it does not seem likely that Green knows it. The little Governor may, nevertheless, be using the Judge as a cat's-paw, without the Judge's knowledge. A clause of the new Constitution precludes the Governor from being el

SOUTH CAROLINA CHIVALRY

TWO REPRESENTATIVE MEN.

RESULT OF AN INQUIRY INTO THE CONDITION OF THE PALMETTO STATE—WADE HAMPTON AND GEN. BUTLER—THE WICKEDEST STATE IN THE UNION.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

I.

I listened in Columbia, South Carolina, to the testimony of nearly 200 witnesses. I glanced over 1,000 pages of depositions in the office of the United States District Attorney. I read all the letters and reports addressed to Gov. Chamberlain during the campaign. I have studied, also, every protest and affidavit from the Supervisors of Election, the United States Marshals, and the citizens of both parties that were presented to the Board of State Canvassers, and that formed the basis and justification of their official action. I have read every report and private letter addressed to the President and Department of Justice from citizens of South Carolina. I have endured the silent misery of reading over a file of the Charleston Courier and News, of which that illustrious statesman, Mr. Benjamin Wood, is the actual proprietor. I have had long and confidential interviews with leading South Carolina politicians. Finally, I existed for three weeks in Columbia. It does seem a shocking waste of life, and I do not recall the record with pride. I mention it solely to shew that whatever I may say of South Carolina has been learned with patient toil and with every opportunity for obtaining information, both authentic and official.

II.

I believe that South Carolina is the wickedest State in the Union. Her Democratic politicians are utterly untruthful, unscrupulous, and deceitful.

This is a grave charge. Let me furnish specifications. I take the Rifle-club "Governor"—Hampton—and the Rifle-club Secretary—Butler—as my shocking examples.

Gen. Hampton is not the leader of the South Carolina Rifle-club Democracy. He is only the standard-bearer. The commanders of that armed organization are Butler and Gary, of Hamburg. I remember reading in a Grecian classic, (I think it was in Herodotus,) that an invading army once captured an Egyptian city by holding up the sacred bird—the Ibis—as they advanced to assail its walls. The besieged did not dare to fire on the hated "two-legged animals without feathers," lest they should slay the holy two-legged animals with feathers. The Southern Democracy have constantly practised this ancient artifice, and we have played the part of the besieged. Sometimes our Ibis was the Union; sometimes it was the Constitution; recently it was conciliation, and now it is the sanctity of the ballot-box. Fresh from Lee's legions, the Bourbons shriek that the Republicans are inaugurating a revolution; throwing off in haste their Kuklux garbs, they protest that we seek to pervert the will of the people as expressed by the Electoral returns. There are some things in this world so absolutely perfect in their way that I almost reverence them—my friend Gen. Butler's maidenly diffidence, for example; my friend Barnum's stern veracity of statements; as exhibited in his show-bills and advertisements; the jelly-like fluidity of the President's purposes; the saintly devotion to principle under the temptations of the New-York Herald; and above all and over all, hazen forever, the political honesty and sincerity of the Southern Democratic leaders. They carry out their crafty Ibis policy both as to principles and men. In South Carolina they shout lustily for "honest government," and nominate a fraudulent bankrupt for Governor; for "law," and nominate the leader of the Hamburg massacre for United States Senator; for "order," and organize rifle clubs to overawe and assassinate the peaceful Republican voters; for a "reduction of taxation," and levy a black-mail assessment of 10 per cent., which they hope to collect by the terrors of social ostracism and business proscription against the unwilling contributors. Gov. Chamberlain owns property in South Carolina—all that he possesses in the world is there. Gen Hampton does not possess a single house or a solitary foot of soil in the State; and yet they cry out against carpet-bagger politicians, and cheer for the landless and penniless adventurer whose only assets are the "dust of his ancestors."

III.

Hampton is a man of very limited ability. In the North he might rise to be a member of a City Council or even a State Legislature; but I knew of no county in Massachusetts in which he would not be confronted by scores of rivals of higher culture and greater talents than himself, if he aspired to political distinction. He seems to be a great man because the average of intelligence is so low and the figure-heads of the masses so dense. He has a certain gift of speech, but he cannot compare as an orator with Elliott, the black Attorney General, nor, either as a rhetorician or a statesman—neither in the power of utterance nor of guidance—to Gov. Chamberlain or Senator elect Corbin.

His part in the late campaign was to talk conciliation to the negroes in order to influence Northern opinion. But it has been proven that at the same meetings at which he spoke in a soothing-syrup style to the blacks, he sat silently in his seat on the stand and listened to the fiercest and most blasphemous speeches against the Republican leaders, and especially to Gen. Ferguson, of Mississippi, who publicly, then and there, explained and advocated the adoption of the Mississippi plan in South Carolina! The indignant Congressman who hurled in the teeth of his opponent the fierce declaration, "You are a fraud, Sir—f-r-o-a-d, fraud!" depicted in terse even if uncivil terms the true character of Gen. Wade Hampton.

IV.

Gen. Butler is a man of ability. He is the real leader of the Democracy. One of Sherman's soldiers borrowed a leg of him, and so he goes on crutches, or, at least, he went on crutches when I saw him. Commonly, he wears an artificial limb, and as he sits on horseback one would not suspect that he is lame.

"Look at dat ar Butler," said a negro to me; "he goes on crutches since yo'uns come here, but if you'd a-seen him when de red shirts was here, gem'l about so lively, you'd a thought he had four legs!"

Butler is a man of 40 or 45. He has quite a handsome face. When he is talking quietly one would not suspect that he is the famous brigand of Hamburg. But no man can hide his true character. I heard him describe the part he took—up to midnight—in the tumult that ended in the slaughter of the unarmed negroes in that town. His features had not that repose that marks the face of Vere de Vere when he spoke of Gov. Chamberlain and the negro Police officer at Hamburg. He admitted that at a public "joint-discussion"—at a Republican meeting, called by Republicans, at which armed Democrats demanded a "division of time"—he talked of Gov. Chamberlain in "terms more graphic than polite," and among other things that he denounced him as a "public liar." He told that when a colored constable refused to go on an errand for him, but "sat insolently fanning himself," he compelled him to get up and give him his chair, although there was another chair unoccupied near by. He spoke of the negro's "insubordination," which seemed to consist of obeying an order of his employer, the Trial Justice, to stay in the court until he came back.

V.

Butler sought to prove that he left Hamburg at midnight. The slaughtering was done between 3 and 4 o'clock in the morning. He said he left the town in company with R. J. Butler, Tommy Butler, and Henry Getzen, R. P. Butler's son-in-law. But the negroes who testified swore that Gen. Butler was in command all night, and that they heard him giving orders and the slaughterers constantly speaking of him as their leader.

VI.

R. P. Butler said that in the old times he kept a pack of bloodhounds, "but the Yankees shot them." He seemed to have an honest pride in stating that he was quite famous as a slave-hunter. Horrible stories are told by the negroes about this wicked old man. He is one of the best representatives of the class typified by Legree, in Uncle Tom's Cabin, whom I have ever seen in the Southern States.

Of course, he swore that he left Hamburg with a mob raging in its streets at midnight. But a Doc. Adams testified, vividly describing the horrors of that awful morning:

"While I was standing in the back yard I could look right into my bed-room window, and also into my sitting-room window, and I saw them taking down my pictures and breaking up the furniture; they broke up everything I had in the world; took all my clothes, my mattresses, and feather bed, and cut it in pieces and scattered it everywhere—destroying every thing that I had; I didn't have a suit of clothes only what I had on my back; they took all my wife's clothes, and broke up all my furniture, and everything; by that time they commenced getting very thick in the square, and I jumped over a little cross fence in Schiller's yard, and as I got up to the fence I heard somebody say 'Halt!' and I looked over the fense and I saw old man R. P. Butler run out of the back part of Lafayette Davis' store and he shot; and I heard him say: '——— him! I have got him;' this was a man by the name of Moses Parks. So he shot him. He turned round and said, '——— him, I have got him,' and shot Parks and killed him."

VII.

Tommy Butler, the son of this slave-hunter and assassin, admitted that he was in the fight; but as I do not think that the insolent boy's word will be seriously quoted by any friend of Butler, it is not worth the trouble to show the part he took in it.

VIII.

Henry Getzen, the third witness called to prove that Gen. Butler left Hamburg to the mercy of a mob, and went quietly to bed, half a mile away, was arrested on a charge of murder as soon as he left the room in which the meetings of the committee were held. It was on an old warrant, which could never be served, because whenever the officer went after him he crossed the river and went to Augusta.

Doc. Adams told an episode of Getzen's life, in relating the doings of the night:

"I went back," he said, after describing how he had concealed some of his friends, "after the other men, but I didn't find them; while standing in a little corner field, near a garden, looking out, one of the men, who was the Town Marshal, ran across the garden and I called him; but I supposo he didn't recognize my voice, as he didn't stop; he ran on and jumped over the fence, and I managed to get up on some part of the trestle of the railroad and could see through it; the moon was shining very bright; the corn made a shade where I was, and, of course, they did not see me; they stopped the Town Marshal—his name was Jeems Cook—Henry Getzen, a man by the name of Bill Morgan, and I recognized one of the men I thought to be Konlo Chaffee, but I was not certain whether it was him or not, but I knew Henry Getzen and Bill Morgan; I recognized their voices; they stopped him and told him, '——— you, we have got you. You have been Town Marshal here, going about here arresting Democrats, and you won't arrest any more of them after to-night;'

Said he: 'Mr. Getzen, I know you, and I will ask you to save my life; I have not done anything to you; I have only done my duty as Town Marshal;' 'yes,' says he, '— you; your knowing me aint nothing; I don't care anything about your marshalship; we are going to kill you;' and they fired; there was four or five men in the crowd, and all of them shot him; he fell; I stayed there and saw them taking his boots off, and they took his watch out of his pocket. * * * they were all down in a huddle, and I couldn't see who it was took the watch."

"Mr. Getzen," Adams said on another occasion, "is the prime leader of all the difficulties and crowds that have been brought in there since the Hamburg riot. He would go to Augusta to select the men and bring them in there. While they were arresting these men he would lay in Augusta, and creep over at certain times of night and go back. But since they have been expecting court to go on here. I showed the District Attorney a letter to-day that was received from there yesterday morning by Harry Mayfield. He [Getzen] shot a second time at a man named Charley Terms, a blacksmith, and Dr. Ingall shot at him Sunday night with a double-barreled gun, and Henry Getzen shot at him with a 16-shooter."

IX.

Gen. Butler now justifies his conduct in leaving the town of Hamburg at midnight to the mercy of an armed mob, largely made up of citizens of Georgia, to his belief that neither he "nor any human power" could have controlled it—that it would have been as impossible to influence these furious men as to direct the course of a tempest. It is necessary that he should make this defense in order to explain his desertion of the town. No other explanation could make this theory seem probable. But on July 16, 1876, before he crouched, as he has since crouched, before the storm of condemnation that swept down from the North, he, coolly and defiantly, and with a pride of personal courage, wrote thus:

"I might have avoided the storm by fleeing from it. But I conceived that I had certain duties to perform, and I was not brought up in that school which allows any man to desert his friends and clients when they are in danger and their families and property in jeopardy. I am indifferent to the opinion of those howling hypocrites, and ask no favors at their hands, and shall grant none."

X.

And now he seeks to shew that he did "desert his friends and clients"—a whole townful of them—when they were "in danger and their families and property in jeopardy" from a furious mob.

These are the two brightest examples of the South Carolina Rifle-club Democracy. Hampton, with a business record that would disgrace him forever in any Northern State; a plausible hypocrite who talks of peace and order and encourages bloodshed and anarchy. Butler, who would have been tried and convicted as a murderer and punished on the scaffold ere the in any community north of the Potomac!

THE LONG ISLAND SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

The third annual Sunday-school Convocation of the Diocese of Long Island was held last night in St. Peter's Chapel, corner of Bond and State streets, Brooklyn. Right Rev. A. N. Littlejohn, Bishop of the Diocese, presided. The topic for discussion was the advisability of providing a uniform system of Sunday-school lessons for all of the Episcopal Sunday-schools of the country. Bishop Scarborough, of New-Jersey, was the first speaker. The two great wants of the Episcopal Sunday-school, he said, were normal instruction for the teachers and uniform lessons for the scholars. The Sunday-school must be organized. Its work for the next generation was to be of paramount importance, and must be so managed as to fulfill its mission. A great trouble in Sunday-schools was, that teachers were not capable of properly instructing the classes submitted to their care. For this reason the improvement of the Sunday-school must begin with the improvement of the teachers by a normal school if possible. No one could overestimate the advantage which would accrue to the Church if a normal school for teachers could be established. But there was a certain degree of impracticability about the scheme, and the next best thing was a system of uniform lessons for the scholars. Perhaps the —iocese of Long Island, through its Bishop, could issue a weekly leaflet. If it would do so it would accomplish one of the greatest of Sunday-school labors. The Diocese of Long Island has attained the reputation of being at the head of the Sunday-school work in the country. Having once taken the van, Bishop Scarborough said he hoped it would go still farther and undertake the production of a weekly Sunday-school lesson for the use of the Episcopal Sunday-schools of the United States. Addresses were also delivered by Mr Seth Low, S. D. C. Van Bokkelin, and various gentlemen representing different churches of the diocese. The movement of the Church in favor of Sunday-school lessons has become quite general, and it is probable that before long these will be concerted action between the cities of New-York, Philadelphia, and Brooklyn, which will secure the end desired.

THE BURNING OF THE LEXINGTON.

In view of the recent disasters which brought death and suffering to many a household, it may not be amiss to refer to an appalling calamity which occurred 37 years ago yesterday. The late Commodore Vanderbilt's fast boat, the Lexington, which plied between this City and Stonington, left her pier at the battery with 75 passengers, and when off Eaton's Neck Light, was discovered to be on fire. Efforts were made to extinguish the flames, but without avail. In less than an hour every person on board, except three, perished in the flames. As may be expected, the calamity produced a profound impression at the time, which was scarcely less intense than that which followed the recent Ashtabula and Brooklyn disasters.

ARRIVALS AT THE HOTELS.

F. S. Chanfrau, the comedian, is at the Astor House.

Gov. Charles R. Ingersoll, of Connecticut, and Prof. Fairman Rogers, of Philadelphia, are at the Albemarle Hotel.

Congressman Thomas C. Platt, of Owego, N. Y., and J. M. Silva Continho, of the Brazilian Centennial Commission, are at the St. Nicholas Hotel.

Gen. Adna Andersen, Receiver of the Chicago, Danville and Vincennes Railway Company, and Paymaster George E. Hendee, United States Navy, are at the Everett House.

THE VOTE OF LOUISIANA.

VIEWS OF AN EX-CONFEDERATE AND EX-DEMOCRAT.

MR. C. IRVING DITTY, ONE OF THE PRESIDENT'S COMMISSION TO VISIT NEW-ORLEANS, GIVES THE RESULT OF HIS OBSERVATIONS—THE EXTENT OF DEMOCRATIC INTIMIDATION NEVER TO BE KNOWN—RIGHTEOUSNESS OF THE DECISION OF THE RETURNING BOARD.

Mr. C. Irving Ditty, one of the President's Commissioners to visit New-Orleans, and an ex-Confederate officer, has published a letter, giving at great length his views on Louisiana politics. In beginning his statement, Mr. Ditty says he has been led to make his views public because the question as to who will be President turns upon the result of the election in Louisiana, and also because the absence of his signature from the report made to the President by the Republican visitors to New-Orleans has been commented upon, notwithstanding the substantial coincidence with that report of his views as published in the Baltimore American. He says he failed to sign the report in the first instance because of an imperative summons to his home, which compelled him to leave New-Orleans before the report was prepared. Continuing, he says: "I had, however, before leaving considered much of the evidence brought before the Returning Board, and a great deal that was not; for I did not confine myself to the record, but earnestly sought information from all available sources, and from people of all classes and politics. Indeed, my opinion is that the evidence outside the record is much stronger than that passed upon, and will, when understood fully, confirm the judgment rendered by the board." Mr. Ditty then goes on to say that as he is unknown outside of Maryland, and as the value of his conclusions will be judged somewhat by his antecedents, some personal reference may not be amiss. He is a native of Maryland, was reared as a Southerner and slaveholder, and never voted any other than the regular Democratic ticket until the Maryland State campaign of 1875. He believed in the right, but not in the policy, of secession, and thought coercion monstrous. He served in the Confederate Army as a private and as an officer, from Manassas to Appomattox. He has never been a politician, and was never a candidate for office, until in 1875, when, forced to act by the gross corruption of the Democratic Party in Maryland, he took part in politics. His course in the late campaign, he says, was a choice between evils. He was forced to repudiate Democracy, but was not so desirous of Republican success as to be blind or indifferent to the means by which it came.

Mr. Ditty then proceeds to give his impressions of Louisiana politics, and says the examination of the Election laws of that State by the Democratic and Republican visitors served to remove many errors as to the text, and led to a discussion of the law, through which the public was benefited by the presentation of the conflicting arguments of both parties. He then shows that the law was passed with the concurrence of both parties, and was made necessary by an abnormal state of society. He thinks the legal questions involved can be safely left to the decision of the Louisiana Supreme Court, and says: "The means used by the ex-master class were of such character as to defy ordinary legislation or such as looked merely to punishment as a preventive. It, therefore, only remained to make the means defeat the end. On this principle the law is framed, and in effect says to bull-dozers and evil-doers: 'You shall gain nothing by your practices, because the vote, wher ever tainted with fraud, violence, intimidation, bribery, &c., to such extent as to materially affect the result, shall be thrown out.'" He then alludes to the fact that this principle is recognized in the Baltimore Election law, which was framed to meet the fraud and violence devised and engineered by the Democratic leaders in that city and State, and continues: "I have thus digressed into Maryland politics, not to argue that one wrong justifies another, but to show the lack of honest principle that marks the average Democratic politician, in order that people may understand their real nature and purpose. The course of the Democratic party in the Oregon matter, and its course generally wherever it has had power and opportunity, justifies us in doubting its honesty and the truth of its charges." He next refers to the powers of the Louisiana Returning Board and says its members are capable and willing to discharge their duties faithfully and honestly, and he believes did so discharge them. The Democratic vacancy in the board, he shows, was created by the action of that party and in pursuance of its deliberately-chosen policy.

"In other words," Mr. Ditty says, "the filling of the vacancy in the Louisiana Returning Board, on the showing of the Democrats themselves, was to give them the opportunity, which their declared doctrine fitted them to use, to do that which they charged the Republicans with intending to do—to render a corrupt or unjust and partisan decision. There was, great talk, too, about an attempted bribery of some of the board by the Democrats, and with some good ground, as many think. I do not pretend to say, for I have no means of knowing, whether such considerations contributed toward the failure of the board to agree upon a Democrat with whom to fill the vacancy, but if any of its members shared the general suspicion of attempted bribery or the openly declared Democratic belief as to its possibility, it is easy to see that there was grave reason for caution in filling the vacancy. As far as I could ascertain, however, there is not the slightest ground for the charges made, except the universal prejudice against Republicans.

He then says the evidence upon which the board acted, although voluminous and in some instances conflicting, is, to an impartial man, clearly in favor of the action of the board. He continues: "Intimidation of voters necessarily involves intimidation of witnesses, where the opportunity for both is the same, as is the case in Louisiana. This fact has been abundantly shown in the pending investigations, where witnesses have made the most pathetic appeals for protection, and declined to name the wrong-doers. Nor must it be forgotten, in this connection, that the Democrats admit the existence of lawlessness and violence in Louisiana, and only deny its political origin and significance. Now, as it invariably happens that wherever these evils exist, there large numbers suddenly cease to vote the Republican ticket, to such an extent in many localities at the late election as to merge large Republican majorities into Democratic unanimities, we may confidently leave the political effect of this admitted lawlessness and violence to answer the denial of its political origin and significance." In the case of the contested parishes, he asserts that there was a substantial agreement between the official returns and the Democratic copies, and shows that the statements regarding the exclusion of Democratic counsel from the sessions of the board are not founded on fact.

Continuing his argument, Mr. Ditty says: "From all the information and evidence, then, which I could obtain during my visit to Louisiana, carefully considered by the light of the prior knowledge of the Southern character and situation which I possessed as a Southern man, a former slaveholder, and an ex-Confederate soldier, I am clearly of opinion that the action of the Louisiana Returning Board, so far at least as the Presidential Electors are concerned, was just and righteous." As to the State vote he does not speak with certainty, but says: "If, however, as to the Electoral vote, it should hereafter appear by a more calcful consideration of the case made before the board or from subsequent investigation that a wrong decision has been rendered, I hope and believe that a way will be devised to undo the injustice, for I am not mistaken in my estimate of Gov. Hayes if, in such case, in default of other methods, he would not himself find the remedy by declining the Presidency."

Mr. Ditty then gives at considerable length the grounds of his belief in the justice of the decision of the Returning Board, first, in connection with the fact that large numbers of negroes have moved into Louisiana from the adjoining States of Mississippi, Texas, and Arkansas, where the shot-gun policy has converted many of their brethren to Democracy, while many whites have moved out of the State, thus leaving it strongly Republican. He then gives statistics of population to shew "that with a reasonably fair and peaceable election Louisiana, after making every possible allowance for legitimate persuasion, and even the milder forms of intimidation, would have gone Republican at the late election by 15,000 to 20,000 majority. That my own Democratic friends, that is claiming a majority of the colored voters as Republicans, whereas we have converted them almost to a man. The answer is that the colored voters of Louisiana were undeniably all Republican at a late period, and their sudden wholesale conversion would be simply miraculous. * * * Whatever may have been the shortcomings and wrong-doings of the Republican Party in the South, the negro knows that he owes everything to it, and nothing to Democracy. He has every possible reason for being Republican and not one for being Democratic. Accordingly we find him Republican, and radically, fanatically so, making his political faith a part of his religion, and regarding one of his fellows who falters therein as a traiter to his race and an apostate to his Church. * * * If a majority of the colored voters in Louisiana, particularly in those precincts and parishes where that class of voters largely outnumbers the whites, have been converted to Democracy, who is to molest or make them afraid, especially while the 'White League' guarantees them protection? The idea of such conversion of the negro to Democracy is so absurd to one who knows his character and surroundings as to leave little patience for its refutation. The colored voters of Louisiana, and I might say of the South, have not been converted, but on the contrary, except in very rare instances, remain as firmly Republican as ever under the powerful influence of gratitude and fear, for the majority fully believe that the return to power of the Democrats means their re-enslavement."

Mr. Ditty then refers to the extensive "bull-dozing" by the White League Democrats, detailing the modes employed to intimidate negroes, and asserting that half the cases of outrage and violence have not and never will be known, for these crimes have sealed with fear the lips of the witnesses. "These causes and these only explain the sudden disappearance of the entire Republican vote in certain localites." He then says that it must not be supposed that all, or even a respectable minority of the white Democrats of Louisiana, commit violence with their own hands. While all admit its existence, most condemn it, and deny its political significance. The outrages are usually committed by the "poor white trash," who, in the days of slavery, were openly despised by the negroes, who are essentially aristocratic in their ideas. These "poor white trash," while advancing the cause of Democratic reform, indulge their private malice by violence and bloodshed among the negroes. Mr. Ditty briefly reviews the Pinkston case, and shows that the Democratic denials of that atrocity are not substantiated. He reiterates the statement that violence and murder are done for political purposes, and says no real effort is made to bring out the truth by those who deny it. The Democrats of Louisiana, he says, are so anxious for the success of their party, that they accept the result of an election in their favor without being curious as to the means employed to secure success. Other modes of intimidation of a milder form, but scarcely less effective were employed, such as the domineering threats of a landlord to a tenant, the latter being dependent on the former for food until the crop is "laid by." "Is it any wonder," continues Mr. Ditty, "that these negroes say, as did one of them who came to the rooms of the Democratic visitors to prove that he and others were willing Democrats, 'My heart is Republican, but the soil from which I live is Democratic.' Certainly when the nature of the colored voter and the means used to control him are once fairly understood, people will cease to be surprised that such control has been gained or that the negro is often compelled, as is now being done, to deny it on oath. The people of Louisiana, and the South generally, regard theirs as a white man's country exclusively, and have never yet been able to accept negro equality before the law."

After referring to the excitement of the ramifications of the White League and other military organizations, Mr. Ditty says: "The existing state of affairs was not expected by Northern men, who thought negro suffrage would be a correction and preventive of possible evils. But there never was a greater mistake than to give the negro the right to vote on the 4th of July and the right to ballot as he pleased as a means of protection, and there never was the slightest doubt as to the result in the mind of any Southern man. If there is any one thing that is plain in this Southern question it is that the negro cannot protect himself as a voter against his former master's influence, until at least his is greatly changed by education, which will make no progress until the white vote is divided." He next refers to the ostracism of white men who avow themselves Republicans, and states that if such a man has been a Confederate soldier, his offense is magnified an hundred-fold. "The sentiment of general hostility to all white Republicans, though not so virulent as that felt to the ex-Confederate Republican, is yet sufficiently bitter to account for all the results in question. No observing man can be ignorant of the fact that the animosity to white Republicans, always more or less apparent in the South, but which, prior to the late exciting canvass, had died out to a great degree, has, by the influences of that canvass, been wonderfully revived and intensified. Nothing was plainer or more repeatedly avowed during my late visit to Louisiana than the determination of the extremists, who now control, to drive out of the State every white man who voted the Republican ticket at the late election. These people, politically, have but one idea—to rid themselves of Republican rule in State and local affairs—and they declare frankly that to realize that idea as an end so righteous as to sanctify any means." Then, referring further to the bitter prejudices of the Southern people, Mr. Ditty asserts: "Give those people their Governments into their own hands, and they care very little who is President of the United States. But as long as the desire for home rule, as they understand it, remains ungratified, as long as any part of the South, with or without cause, cries out against carpet-bag government, so long will strife and unreason prevail, and the white vote remain solid."

Mr. Ditty then refers to the hostility to Republicanism, saying: "The political disease of the South, as already explained, is a virulent, unreasoning hostility to Republicanism and the administration of local government by persons other than natives. Until the exciting cause, the administration of local government by nonnatives, is removed, or the condition of the patient so changed by time that the exciting cause loses its effect, all remedies must fail. Of course, I am not to be understood as advocating revolution or violence in the Southern States, by which Governments lawfully existing, although administered by carpet-baggers, are to be subverted. The bad example that would be thus given to the whole country, and especially the strengthening of the disposition, already alarmingly prevalent in the North, to disregard the decisions of law, would forbid the countenancing of anything but peaceable and legal methods. My point is that the desire of the South for self-government, as they understand it, must be gratified before the voice of reason and justice can be heard. Dismiss the idea of military adjustment of the trouble as impracticable because soldiers can be used only under certain circumstances, and can only suppress actual violence or revolution effected by accessible organization. They cannot reach the isolated plantations or cabins scattered over the country, unless under actual military governments and the master force than now exists. For many reasons the country would not consent to have the Southern problem solved by the military factor. As matters now are, and especially as they will be in case of Mr. Tilden's inauguration, it certainly would be wise, until the Southern madness passes, for Northern men to avoid seeking homes in the South, and for those already there to leave if they can by any possibility arrange to do so; but in any event to abstain from politics or office. In a short time the pecuniary loss resulting from the absence of Northern capital and immigration would force the Southern people to see their folly and injustice. But fortunately there is a speedier and better remedy in the policy that Mr. Hayes, as President, could adopt. Mr. Hayes would meet the Southern question now under circumstances infinitely more favorable than those which embarrassed Gen. Grant's Administration. The latter had a great deal with the raw wounds of the war and the confusion and errors of reconstruction, while Mr. Hayes, with all the benefit of past experience, would find these wounds soothed by time, and the great principles and changes of reconstruction settled and accepted—in profession at least—by all parties. Southerners will not again decline to hold office or participate in public affairs under Republican rule, as they did at first, with the idea that such action would be treason to the South and an insult to her soldier dead. Taught by experience and suffering, they will accept now the friendly hand of their former foe, and aid a Republican President to re-establish peace and law within their borders. With such a policy as Mr. Hayes could and would be sure to adopt, the conservative element in the South would speedily dominate, as by its numbers and character it is entitled to do; the white vote would be divided, proscription for political opinion would cease, and the negro would be secured in all his rights. I fear the reverse from Mr. Tilden's inauguration, because it would be the triumph of the extremists, who now control. We all know that prior to the late canvass an era of good feeling had dawned, and an earnest disposition to bury war animosities had been manifested all over the South. The exigencies of the Democratic canvass, however, raised the fatal cry of "a solid South," and from that moment Northern Democrats, with all the selfishness and treachery that distinguished them in 1861 and 1865, while protesting against the "bloody shirt"—against appeals by Republicans to the war memories of the North—were themselves straining every nerve to fire the Southern heart. It the truth is ever known, we shall find that while Northern Democrats were freely promising indemnity for Southern war losses, they were furnishing capital to organize and equip the bull-dozers, "293" companies, and rifle clubs of the South, and to subsidize newspapers and orators to revive the dying war spirit of that section. * * * The Southern whitee, left to themselves, with their political offices filled by native-born citizens, would to-day prefer Hayes to Seldon. Southern people, and especially Southern soldiers, as is natural to brave and generous men, respect and admire Mr. Hayes, who proved his devotion to principle on the battle-field, and who fought them openly and fairly, while they feel and often express contempt for Mr. Tilden and the whole class of Northern Democrats whom he typifies."

In conclusion, Mr. Ditty reviews the wrongs of the Southern people, the bitterness engendered by the war and the reconstruction measures, and says: "These things are great wrongs, but while they are condemned, let the provocation be considered, and the remedy largely tempered with charity. Let those who would indulge in wholesale denunciation put themselves in the place of this people, and consider whether they would have done as well."

NOT SUITED.

The Lewiston (Me.) Journal relates the following: "Recently a man came into one of our clothing stores of a Saturday evening and said he wanted to buy a pair of black pantaloons suitable for a funeral occasion, as his mother had died. The man examined the pantaloons and asked permission to take them home to try them on. Permission was granted, and the next Monday the man returned the trowsers, saying they didn't exactly suit. But he had worn them at his mother's funeral the day before."

THE TEXAS AND PACIFIC JOB.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your article, "Pledging the Public Credit," in to-day's paper, must commend itself to every one who wishes to preserve that credit. Perhaps you are not aware that shares in the "Texas and Pacific Construction Company" have been, until recently, and, I think, are now, for sale in this city for $950,000, only one-fourth—$62,500—ever to be paid, the holder of which, if the bill recommended by the House Committee on Pacific Railroads is passed, will probably receive at least half a million cash proceeds, or bonds and stock equivalent thereto. If this scheme for increasing the public debt and depleting the Treasury for the benefit of speculators is successful, the old "Credit Mobilier" of Oakes Ames and Company will be completely thrown into the shade by this new one. SLEEPING-CAR ROBBERY.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

A gentleman residing in the same hotel with myself started last night in one of the Springfield cars for Boston, and was robbed during the night of a valuable gold watch and a large amount of money while occupying a sleeping berth. These articles were in his vest, and were placed, all together, before going to sleep, under his mattress. In the morning he found his vest, watch, and money all gone. Such robberies in the sleeping cars are frequent, and the car companies should be held responsible for them. In a suit at law an individual thus robbed could no doubt recover his losses. The car companies do nothing to prevent such robberies, but, on the contrary, offer a premium, so to speak, for their commission. At 10 o'clock the lights are put out in a sleeping car, and it is so dark that a human form can scarcely be seen moving in the passage-way between the two rows of berths. Thus, it is easy work for the thieves to accomplish their object. A guard should be stationed in the passage-way between the berths, so that no person could move without being seen. The cost of such guard to the car company would be insignificant, and the protection to the traveling public would be complete and perfect. Were it known that a guard was constantly on watch in a sleeping car during the night, it is not likely that the thieves would undertake their fashionable midnight depredations. But the car companies will offer no such protection, unless they are forced to do so by suits at law. They are becoming the terror of the public. They burn people alive, and as a sort of quiet recreation, attract them into expensive sleeping compartments, where they are robbed of every thing valuable about their persons. Is it not time for a reform? Perhaps the porters may sometimes be the thieves? Who knows? Who cares? Certainly not the car companies! This, at least, is a reasonable inference.

NIGHT WATCH.

TAMMANY REPUBLICANS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Article XIV. of the Constitution of the Central Committee of the Republican Party of this City declares in substance that no person shall be eligible for delegate to the Central Committee, nor to any convention, who directly or indirectly holds office under or by Democratic authority. This article was adopted several years ago by the Central Committee in order to rid the party of a set of despicable men who maintained a sort of leadership in the Republican ranks by a power which received its nourishing sustenance from the bowl of Democratic pap that was passed so freely around in those days.

Well, there is a very well-organized attempt being made in all our associations now to have this Article XIV. abrogated. The whole scheme is fathered by men who hold office under or by Democratic authority, and who desire something more or more of something. This article should stand:

First—Because it has done great good so far in ridding the party of men who were bringing ruin and disgrace upon it in this City.

Second—Because no one should in any wise be intrusted with party leadership who is at the same time a parasite upon the bounty of Tammany Hall.

Third—Because it is satisfactory to the great body of earnest Republicans, who do not crave close communion with small men and smaller measures.

Fourth—Because it will still continue to do great good in the future to the same extent as it did in the past.

Fifth—Because to render that article null and void would be to open up the channel of Municipal politics to further corruption, to pollute our own party with nameless bargain and sale conspiracies; and would still further tend to place our political machinery in the hands of mutual-interest jobbers, similar to the compacts of 1869.

It has been said that really fine political talent is debarred by this merciless clause from taking part in the councils of the party. Who has the talent? Who is he? What are they? Name him or them, and you name something not consonant with the words Republican patriot. The young men of the party are interested in preserving every bulwark that protects Republicanism from the ulterior purposes of the demagogue.

A PROTEST FROM HUNTINGTON.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

As a high-toned, independent, leading Republican journal of America, we have for THE NEW-YORK TIMES the greatest admiration. We were the more surprised and pained to notice in your Thursday's issue an attack on the character of the people of Huntington, Long Island. It may have seemed very funny in the Metropolitan writer sitting in the sanctum of one of the most wicked, profligate, and corrupt cities in Christendom, to class us with the Sioux and Choctaw Indians. With all our faults and vile misrepresentation of facts, we never yet have been charged with the crime of burning down orphan asylums, or hunting inoffensive negroes and hanging them to lamp-posts for the crime of being black. As citizens of Huntington, we cannot boast of the superior civilization of living in a society that would condone or tolerate such crimes as these, whether committed by big or little Tammany Indians! It is true, Huntington has become noted for a sensational scandal on account of a "tar-and-feather outrage" which its best citizens neither condoned nor approved, but who achieved unmerited odium by refusing to hunt down and implicate innocent men in the supposed crime of murder. That time, as well as a most searching investigation, has proved the originally suspected parties to have been entirely innocent of any such charge, there cannot be a question of doubt. And if the testimony of three or four of our reputable citizens be of any worth, whose eyes have seen Kelsey, not as a pair of prepared tarred legs—not as a murdered, bloody corpse—but a pretty lively corpse we should say for murdered man—alive and well, and a hearty one to all appearance, every impartial citizen here, fully informed of the exact facts, will pronounce the so-called "Kelsey outrage" the champion humbug of the age! A split in the First Presbyterian Church—a quarrel over which should run one of the best Union schools in the State, and a political ring beaten by the bay by the religious and best moral sentiment of the community, saw in this supposed crime its opportunity, and all that vile calumny and slander could invent was hurled at a church which it hated as the devil is supposed to hate holy water. It is by this class of our citizens, with the help of the sensational press, that Huntington has been defamed and disgraced. Ladies whose characters and refinement are above suspicion have been basely dragged into the scandal by shameless vampires in our midst who had no characters to lose.

FRIDAY, Jan. 12, 1877. HUNTINGTONIAN.

WHERE ARE THE WOMEN?

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

It is not a cheering reflection at this period of the nation's history that if matters progress as they have been progressing during the last decade there will not be a woman left in the country. This may seem a startling announcement, and to men old enough to remember that women once were really valuable to society at large, and to individuals in particular, a cause of regret. For they will recall how well and pleasantly women served in shops; how cheerfully they cleaned and kept in order their houses; how exquisitely they got up their shirts and mended their stockings; how well they dressed beef-steaks and mashed potatoes; how joyfully they sang to their spinning wheels and their cows; what admirable daughters they were to large agriculturists and small tradesmen; what wives to grocers and butchers and tavern-keepers; what mothers to soldiers and sailors; how handsome, too, fresh-colored, and beaming with healthful beauty, and guided by that honest, straightforward, hardy sort of intellect which knows how to make the best even of a bad husband! To go further back to the time which we so proudly commemorate in this year of our Lord 1876. Women then were plenty, though the labor of the census-takers was much less arduous than now, and if they were reluctant to tell their ages, they were not a bit ashamed of being women, and if any one had termed them "ladies" they would have absolutely felt as if called "out of their names." Indeed, "in time of the war" not only were the useful, healthful, hearty, blooming, industrious farmer and tradesmen's and soldiers' and sailors' wives and daughters proud—absolutely proud—of being American women, but the wives and daughters of the aristocracy, or F. F.'s, took up the enthusiasm, and the wives and sisters and sweethearts and mothers of our heroes coveted no greater distinction than that of being American women.

I used to think—being a woman myself, and, furthermore, not ashamed to own it—there was a sort of natural, indeed, so to speak, a physical reason for ladies being women—in fact, that a lady must be a woman, or what was she? But that was a mistake.

We have been "progressing," topsy-turvying ourselves and others; working wonders these last 50 years; catching lightning and boxing it up, as if it were a toy for a Christmas tree; rattling over the world on railways, and boring the poor earth in more senses than one; we have tunneled the rocks through the mountains, and sunk wells that go down to the nether world; we have laid the cable that flashes thought through the watery miles that separate us from the Continent of Europe; we have invented the best labor-saving machines, constructed the biggest engines, sailed the fastest yachts, and made the greatest number of "bull's-eyes," and we are as proud of ourselves as if we were all peacocks, with comets for tails.

But while the world is turning us, and we are

Washington Territory, to the effect that Chapman's reputation for truth was bad; that he is entirely unscrupulous in pursuit of his interest and his enemies; that charges made by him against any one would not affect the person charged among those who knew Chapman. In presenting the letter Mr. WINDOM said that the writer of it was well known by nearly every one in Washington and Oregon. He was a life-long Democrat, and not a member of the party to which he (Mr. Windom) belonged. Hon. O. Jacobs, formerly Chief Justice of Oregon, also authorized him to say that the letter of Mr. Tilton was not too strong. So far as he [Mr. Windom] was charged with receiving any consideration, he had only to say every word was without foundation.

He moved that a committee of three Senators be appointed to investigate that charge now on file against him in the Interior Department, and that the committee be composed exclusively of Senators on the Democratic side of the Chamber.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, did not think it would be proper to order such investigation.

Mr. GORDON, of Georgia, said he had no idea that there was a Senator on this floor who did not know the charge was false. The whole country knew it, and any investigation by the Senate would dignify the assault upon the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HAMLIN, of Maine, censurred in the remarks of the Senator from Georgia, Mr. Gordon, and said it would be an error to investigate such a dirty character as this.

Mr. CRAGIN, of New-Hampshire, said during the last session of Congress this same Chapman made charges against the present Governor of Washington Territory when his nomination was pending before the Committee on Territories. The committee was unanimous in the opinion that Chapman lied, and recommended the confirmation of the Governor's nomination.

Mr. DAWES, of Massachusetts, hoped the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Windom] would withdraw his motion for the appointment of a committee of three to investigate the charges against him.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, said he hoped the Senator would not withdraw his motion, but he hoped the Senate would show its appreciation of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Windom] and the falsity of the charges against him by unanimously voting against the investigation.

Mr. MCCRERELL, of Missouri, said if he thought there was the least shadow of truth in the charge he would vote for the investigation; but he did not believe it, and thought it did not require the report of any committee to vindicate the Senator [Mr. Windom.]

The motion for the appointment of a committee of three to investigate the charges against Mr. Windom was unanimously rejected.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules. Pending discussion, on motion of Mr. ALLISON, the Senate went into executive session, and when the doors were reopened, at 4:15, adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MR. ORTON BEFORE THE HOUSE.

The roll of the States for bills, with which the proceedings to-day commenced, was interrupted at 12:25 P. M., when the Sergeant at Arms appeared at the bar of the House, having in his custody Mr. William Orton, President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, under a writ issued against him by the Speaker for contempt of the House in not having obeyed the subpœna of the New-Orleans Investigating Committee to appear there on the 26th of December, and produce certain telegrams. The Speaker having put the usual question to Mr. Orton, whether he was now willing to purge himself of contempt, Mr. Orton filed a written answer, which was thereupon read by the Clerk. Mr. Orton, during the reading, occupied a seat in the area in front of the Speaker's chair, in company with his counsel, Mr. Lowrey. Mr. Orton pleads in his answer, first, that at the time when he was so subpœnaed he was suffering from an ailment of such a character that then, and ever since, it was impossible for him to take a long journey; and, secondly, that the telegrams called for had never been in his possession or control, except as an agent of his company, and that the company had, without any knowledge or participation on his part, taken from him all power and control over telegrams sent through its offices. He disclaims any intentional disrespect to the committee or to the House, and declares his readiness to appear before that committee on its return to Washington and give his testimony fully and freely. He therefore asks to be discharged from custody.

The reading of the paper having been concluded, the whole matter was, on motion of Mr. HUNTON, of Virginia, referred to the Judiciary Committee, and Mr. Orton was remanded to the custody of the Sergeant at Arms.

Under the call of States a number of bills were introduced and referred.

Mr. COCHRANE, of Pennsylvania, offered the following resolution:

Whereas, The Western Union Telegraph Company, through its officers who have been summoned before committees of the House to answer questions in relation to telegrams passing over their lines and produce the same, has refused to produce them, and said officers are now in contempt of the authority of the House; and whereas under acts of Congress the same company has and valuable privileges conferred upon it in connection with their corporate rights:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire whether and what concessions and privileges have been granted by Congress and now enjoyed by the Western Union Telegraph Company revokable by Congress, and if said committee shall determine that such concessions and privileges are revokable, then further to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill revoking in whole or in part repealing the acts of Congress under which they were conferred, and that leave be granted to said committee to report at any time.

Defeated—Yeas, 121. Nays 85; not two-thirds in the affirmative. The vote was a strictly party one, except that Messrs. Cutler of New-Jersey, Le Moyne of Illinois, O'Brien of Maryland, Powell of Pennsylvania, J. Reilly of Pennsylvania, Wells of Missouri, Whitehouse of New-York, and Willis of New-York, voted with the Republicans against the motion.

SALE OF LEAF TOBACCO.

Mr. HATCHER, of Missouri, moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill for the relief of tobacco growers. It provides that tobacco growers shall have the right to sell leaf tobacco free from any tax, fine, or other restriction. Defeated—yeas 102, nays 99; two-thirds not voting affirmatively.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, offered a resolution reciting that fears are entertained that there may not be peaceable ascertainment of the Presidential question, and declaring that any attempt to prejudice or excite the public mind in advance of the authority provided for in the Constitution is unwise, unpatriotic, and full of danger to the country. Adopted.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Illinois, moved to suspend the rules and pass the following bill:

Whereas, Serious apprehension exists in the minds of the people that the deliberations of their Representatives in Congress may be controlled or in some way interfered with by the presence of any considerable portion of the Army of the United States in Washington, during the sessions of Congress; and whereas it is of the highest importance that all the deliberations of Congress shall not only be free from extraneous influence, but that no reasonable ground of fear or suspicion shall exist in the popular mind that any act has been the product or result of any other cause than the unbiased sense of the Representative's duty to his constituency;

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be unlawful for more than one regiment or battalion of infantry, of not more than 500 men, one company of cavalry, and one battery of artillery, not exceeding six guns, to be stationed at or kept for any purpose whatsoever, during the sessions of Congress, within the limits of the District of Columbia, and troops so stationed shall be disposed so as only to guard and protect the public property; that no more than one company shall be stationed in one public building; that all civil or reviewed in greater numbers than one company at a time, and no part thereof shall be brought for any purpose within half a mile of the Capitol during the sessions, without the request of Congress, provided, however, that in time of war or insurrection during said sessions of Congress, Congress shall have the power to call on the President for such increase of troops in said District as it shall seem necessary. Any officer of the United States, in the civil or military service, who brings together, or issues any order for bringing together, a larger body of troops than is above provided, or for keeping or stationing them except as provided in this act, shall be guilty of a high misdemeanor, and shall be subject to all the penalties prescribed for such misdemeanor.

Defeated—yeas 99, nays 97.

The House then, at 3:30, adjourned.

EGYPTIAN SOLDIERS IN TURKEY.

The Rustchuk correspondent of the Politische Correspondenz states that the Seraskier has ordered that the Army of the Danube shall consist of 38 regiments of infantry, 31 battalions of chasseurs, 16 regiments of cavalry, and 3 regiments of "frontier soldiers." The artillery is to comprise 68 batteries of six guns each, and these different corps will compose the active army. The Army of Reserve is to consist of 30 irregular regiments of 1,800 men each. Contrary to the hitherto existing Turkish custom, the Mohammedan land-owners are required in critical circumstances to arm and equip a certain number of soldiers, who are termed sicmins. Such a call has not been made for a century past, and though the Minister of War has now asked for 30 battalions of these men, it is doubtful whether the land-owners will be able to furnish half that number. The correspondent also refers to the demand which has been addressed by the Sultan to the vassal States of Egypt, Tunis, and Tripoli for contingents. During the Crimean war Egypt furnished as many as 40,000 men, but the Sultan has not asked for more than 20,000, and the 9,400 Egyptian soldiers were sent at the outbreak of the Servian war, only 10,600 more will be sent. Tunis and Tripoli are to send 4,800; and these contingents will, it is reported, be dispatched to the Danube. Thus in two months the Porte will, according to the correspondent, have concentrated 200,000 men in that village.

OBSERVATORY AT TROY.

The Troy Times of Tuesday evening says:

"Yesterday the Trustees of the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute consummated the purchase of the Ranken property on Eighth street, for the site of the Rensselaer Observatory, Memorial Observatory. The lot has a frontage of 150 feet on Eighth street, and comprises about three acres. The price paid was $20,000. Two thousand dollars of the purchase money was contributed by the Rankens, leaving the actual cost of the property $18,000. The erection of the observatory will be begun April 7, and it is estimated that, with all modern appliances and improvements, it will cost about $20,000, making the actual cost of the new property $38,000. The site selected is the best in the city for the purpose intended. The view is commanding the observatory will be in close proximity to the other Institute buildings, and the lot contains a commodious dwelling, which will be used as the residence of the Director. Altogether this action of the Trustees is the most decided and important step for the advancement of the interests of the institute that has been taken in years."

LAW REPORTS.

A REMARKABLE DIVORCE CASE.

A PROTESTANT WHO ABJURED HIS FAITH AND MARRIED A ROMAN CATHOLIC LADY—HIS ALLEGED OUTRAGEOUS BRUTALITY ON SHIP-BOARD AND AT HOME—SPECIMEN LOVE-LETTER—THE HUSBAND'S DENIAL OF THE CHARGES.

A divorce case, presenting rather singular and monstrous exhibitions of brutality—if the plaintiff's story is to be believed—was brought up before Judge Donohue in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday. The suit in question is brought by Mary L. Jamison against David F. Jamison, and is for a limited divorce. The plaintiff was living with her mother and step-father three years ago. She is of the Roman Catholic faith, and it is stated her desire was to enter a convent. She met the defendant and became infatuated with him, though he was a Protestant. Her step-father vehemently opposed the match, but Mr. Jamison then changed his religion, and professed the same faith as the plaintiff. They were married in Jersey City on May 6, 1874, and have lived in this City since September, 1875. They have one child. The plaintiff says that, though she has always faithfully discharged her duties, and has treated her husband with kindness and forbearance, he has treated her in a cruel and inhuman manner almost continuously from the time of their marriage until Dec. 29 last, when she left him. During that period, she claims, he was a habitual drunkard, and his acts of cruelty were perpetrated as well in his sober as in his drunken moments. She is now 25 years old, and the defendant is 37. He is a dry-goods merchant, and has been in the habit of traveling out West to dispose of goods. On the day of their marriage the parties went to Europe on a pleasure trip and to visit the defendant's relatives in Edinburgh, Scotland. On the morning succeeding the wedding day the defendant insulted her grossly, she claims, and cast imputations on her chastity. The day after this occurrence he left her alone on the deck of the steam-ship, and she desiring to return to her state-room, and not knowing the way thither, asked one of the passengers to guide her. He did so, but on their way she met her husband, who said angrily: "So, you are bringing a gentleman to your berth!" During the entire passage across the Atlantic, she says, his conduct was exacting, unkind, and cruel in the extreme, compelling her to eat in a private saloon, and, in spite of her protestations, humility, and grief at his unjust and unfounded jealousy, he even compelled her to take her meals apart from him. Arrived at Edinburgh, he took to drinking to excess, and began to complain of his lot. He said he had been ill-treated by her step-father; that the latter had promised him $10,000 with her, which he had not received. He would not have married her, he said, excepting for the money he expected to get. He had only married her for spite, he said. These charges and insinuations on his part, she claims, are unjust and untrue. Her marriage, she believed, was the result of a mutual love, one token of which, in the form of a letter, she appends to her affidavit. While traveling from Liverpool to Dublin he insulted her publicly, and treated her in the worst manner to speak to her, refused to provide for her convenience or comfort, and left her to procure her own berth. He used to threaten to throw her overboard, and told her he would not be seen in the streets with her. He said he had joined her faith and had become a Catholic so as to get her, believing he was to get money with her. As, however, he did not get the money, he was bound to have revenge. He told her no child of his should ever be brought up as a Roman Catholic. The parties after a time proceeded to London, where the plaintiff says the defendant continued his cruel treatment. On one occasion, after they had retired for the night, she says he abused her very much, and knocked her head forcibly against the wall, injuring her severely. On another occasion he again struck her without provocation. On New Year's Day in 1875, while they were at the sister's house in Edinburgh, he said he was not the father of their then unborn child, and that it was a bastard. She ran into a bedroom in which two little children were sleeping. He followed, and she was obliged to fall on her knees and swear that he was the father of her child. She says she felt sure he was insane at the time, and her nerves were completely shattered by his cruel conduct, for which there was no possible provocation on her part. His rage increased, he cursed her, and told her that she lied, and that he would cut her throat with a razor. He started to get this weapon, and she ran toward the hall door. She opened one door, however, and she then ran back to the children's room. The children had awakened by this time and were screaming. Their cries alarmed the neighbors, and the bell was suddenly rung. Her husband, hearing the ring, went to the door. Mrs. Jamison says that but for this timely interference her life would have been taken. In February, 1875, they hired a flat in Edinburgh and began housekeeping. His conduct, she says, continued to be brutal. On coming home to dinner, if that was not ready he would go into the kitchen and throw the materials into the fire. At one time he upset the table and smashed the dishes. He then followed her into the bedroom and struck her violently in the face three or four times, telling her to write that to her mother. When their child, now 20 months old, was 4 months old they sailed to this country, and on the voyage his conduct, she avers, was so brutal as to be the subject of general remark among the passengers.

On arriving in this City they went to the Grand Central Hotel. Here he accused her of stealing and throwing into the fire a pocketbook containing some letters. He took their child in his arms and threatened to throw it out of the window. She snatched the child from him and ran out into the hall, where a number of the hotel guests were gathered, and asked for protection. After this, she says, he threatened to kill her with a shoemaker's knife, and she, afraid or her life, fled from the house, and has not since returned.

The letter above referred to is rather peculiar, and is given just as it appears, even as to lack of punctuation:

"17 BEACH STREET April 17 1874

DEAREST OF ALL WOMEN ON THIS EARTH. the writer comes greeting before you in this way not having Courage to come in person. on a time of our separation drawn near my common sence will not allow me much longer to encroach on your father and dear mother's hospitality and be a nurcen on you; on my bended knees before you I have tried hard to crush the love of you who is dearer to me than life but the memory of you will ever be to me the most blissful portion of my life. Dearest objects of a broken heart can you have no pity on thy ardent lover say only the word darling and heal the heart you have wounded. Oh Mama anything in this world I will do to gain thy sweet and everlasting love. Darling angel I know you have penitence enough to know you have a good home a kind and loving mother but hearken to me on the other hand you have me an ardent lover with a broken heart trust without your soothing and kind love must be banished to some far off place and die of a broken heart. Dearest love you much darling that if you will consent to a marriage with me you can have your own terms. I love you dearest so much that if I possessed all the bank stock and land in America. You and all the money bank stock and land in the world I would give it all for you sweetest of women and give chearefully and break stones on the highway you are dearer to me than all the world and a hundred bushels of rubbles and pave with diamonds I am going to my confession this next week, and may the Blessed Virgin and Mother of our Lord bear witness to the sincere love I have for you, darling to make you happy all the day long would be my delight I hope dearest you will give these few lines your consideration and reply as soon as convenient and believe me your sincere friend, DAVID J. JAMISON."

The case was brought before Judge Donohue yesterday on a motion to vacate an order of arrest under which the defendant is now held in default of $10,000 bail. A. J. Dyett, who appeared for the motion, presented affidavits, among which was one sworn to by Mr. Jamison, in which he denied specifically as well as generally the charges of cruelty. He admitted having accused his wife of stealing the letters at the Grand Central Hotel, but denied having threatened to throw the child out of the window. A long argument followed, after which the matter was adjourned until Tuesday to enable Mr. Dyett to reply to some new accusations.

A FINGER WORTH ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS.

The case of James McMahon against Peter H. Walsh was tried before Judge Sedgwick and a jury in the Superior Court yesterday. The defendant is a stevedore, and the plaintiff was in his employ on Dec. 10, 1874, engaged in loading a vessel at Pier No. 43 North River. Among the articles to be put on the vessel was an iron axle weighing about 1,600 pounds. Donkey engines were used in the work. After the tackle was attached to the axle the defendant noticed a barrel of lard in the way, and he requested the plaintiff to remove it so that it should not be injured by the iron axle. The plaintiff testified yesterday that before he had time to get the barrel out of the way the engine began to work, and the axle swayed to one side and cut off his finger by knocking it against the barrel. The defendant, however, said he gave the plaintiff plenty of time to get himself and the barrel out of the way. The jury gave the plaintiff $1,000 damages.

COURT OF APPEALS.

ALBANY, Jan. 15.—In the Court of Appeals to-day, No. 128 Gallup vs. Babsen, and No. 29, Wells vs. Holbrook, were submitted. The Day Calendar for Tuesday, Jan. 16, is Nos. 123, 124, 41, 133, 134, 137, 138, 139.

SUIT ON AN ALLEGED GUARANTEE.

The case of John F. Halstead against John Koss was tried before Judge Barrett and a jury in Part III. of the Supreme Court yesterday. The plaintiff sued as the assignee of Morris Warner, to whom he leased the building at No. 96 East Broadway to one Charles Obermeyer for four years, at the rate of $1,350 per annum. The plaintiff claimed that Koss, who is the Treasurer of the Fifth Boulevard, had become surety on the lease, and had signed a guarantee to the same. At the trial yesterday Halstead admitted that there had been a change made in the date of the alleged guarantee. Koss, when put on the stand, swore that the signature to the guarantee was not his, though it resembled his in many respects. The jury found for the defendant.

THE LAW OF LIBEL.

IMPORTANT RULINGS BY JUDGE SPEIR—TWO SUITS AGAINST THE HERALD—WHAT CONSTITUTES A CLAIM ON WHICH RECOVERY MAY BE HAD.

Judge Speir, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday, rendered a decision in the case of Matilda Wallace against James Gordon Bennett. The plaintiff was a keeper of a boarding-house in Thirty-fourth street, and claims $3,000 damages for libel, because on Oct. 9, 1876, the Herald published the following statement:

"No. 6 EAST 34TH ST.—Boarding—Applicants before locating here, inform yourselves as to table, attention, and characteristics of the proprietors."

The defendant demurred to this complaint on the ground that it did not contain facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. John Townshend, who appeared for the defendant, claimed there was nothing on the face of the publication which in any wise connected it with the plaintiff, or which could be said to injure the reputation of the plaintiff. The only way, he claimed, in which the alleged publication could be made actionable was to treat it as an attack upon the plaintiff's business, as a notice to deter people from patronizing her establishment. As such it could only be actionable by an allegation that the alleged publication was concerning the plaintiff in her business, and also by alleging specific damages. Judge Speir gives judgment for the defendant on the demurrer, with the usual leave to the plaintiff to serve an amended complaint. In his opinion Judge Speir remarks:

"It is possible, had the complaint contained proper inducements and inuendoes, the publication might be made to affect the plaintiff injuriously. There are no such allegations; nor is there any averment that the plaintiff has sustained any special damages. No evidence can be received in an action for libel of any loss or damage which the plaintiff has sustained by the publication, unless it be specifically stated in the complaint. And where the words are not actionable per se, as in the present case, the plaintiff in order to recover must not only state in his declaration special damage as, the result of the publication, but he must also prove that the special damage alleged was exclusively the consequence of the publication. The plaintiff's counsel contends that his complaint contains, under the Code, enough for the court to discover an injurious meaning in the plain and natural purport of the publication itself, and some damage is to be presumed, and that no special damage need be proved. The Code of Procedure has dispensed with any statement of 'extrinsic facts' to show the application to the plaintiff, but it has not dispensed with the necessity of inducement and innendoes where necessary to point the publication to a libelous meaning. In this case the publication is not defamatory on its face, and can become so only by reference to extrinsic facts, and those facts must be alleged in the complaint to constitute a cause of action. The publication is not an attack on plaintiff's business which would prevent people from patronizing her establishment, and without such allegation, and in the absence of any allegation of specific damages, it cannot be deemed actionable. Every publication is not libelous, although they may concern individuals in their characters and employments."

The case of Phoebe Robertson against James Gordon Bennett is another action for alleged libel, which was made the subject of a decision by Judge Speir yesterday. In this case the plaintiff complained of the following, which was published in the "personal" column of the Herald on Sunday, Nov. 19, 1876:

"The blackmailing crowd in West Twenty-fifth street had better beware. Cautious, 51 and 53."

The plaintiff says she keeps, and has for a long time kept, a boarding-house at Nos. 51 and 53 West Twenty-fifth street, and that her reputation is of value to her. She claims that she has suffered $11,000 damages by reason of the above publication. The defendant demurred on the ground that the alleged libel was not sufficient to give the plaintiff a cause of action. The defendant, however, desired to make answer to the complaint as well as to demur thereto, and made a motion to compel the plaintiff's attorney to receive the answer. In this answer the defendant denies that the alleged libelous matter was published with his knowledge, consent, or procurement by any person in his employ had any right or authority to publish the same. Another defense is that the plaintiff is not the real party in interest, but that William W. Badger, her attorney, is such real party. As a further defense the defendant alleges the truth of the allegation that there was a blackmailing crowd at Nos. 51 and 53 West Twenty-fifth street. The defendant also alleges that the plaintiff's daughter, and not the plaintiff, was the person against whom the publication was intended. The publication grew out of a quarrel, and the defendant says the plaintiff only desired a retraction, which was agreed to by the defendant. The latter says the plaintiff declines to withdraw the suit, but is prevented from doing so by her attorney. Judge Speir granted the motion to compel the plaintiff's attorney to receive the answer on being paid his costs.

A MARRIED WOMAN'S PROPERTY.

The case of Helen F. Taylor and James T. Taylor, her husband, against Adelia K. Broome, was before Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday. The details of the action are rather interesting. It appears that on Dec. 1, 1868, the plaintiff being then a married woman, purchased of the defendant the house and lot at No. 130 East Twenty-seventh street. As part of the purchase money Mrs. Taylor gave back to the defendant a mortgage of $10,000 which was security for the usual bond. Inasmuch as the amount thus given in the transaction was one in which Mrs. Taylor's separate property merely was concerned, still her husband, of course, joined with her in making the bond and mortgage. The defendant recently began proceedings to foreclose the mortgage on the property, at the same time suing on the bond. The plaintiff thereupon began the present action to restrain the defendant from suing on the bond, at least until after the amount received for the property to be sold under the mortgage had been applied toward the payment of the mortgage debt. On the other hand, the defendant claimed that the property would not sell for the amount of the mortgage, &c. Judge Donohue denied the motion for an injunction.

SUING A CORPORATION STOCK-HOLDER.

The case of the Ferro plastic Manufacturing Company against George Bieksthaupt, Jr., was brought to trial before Judge Van Hoesen and a jury, in Part I. of the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday. The plaintiffs sue to recover $1,500 on an agreement by the defendant in October, 1875, to take 15 shares of the company's capital stock. In his answer the defendant says that one W. L. Brockway represented to him in October, 1875, that he had a patent process of making Targore' iron, which is a fine quality of sheet-iron. Brockway said it would require $6,000 to put the process in operation. He said he and his father would furnish $3,000, and he desired the defendant and the latter's brother to supply the other $3,000. He said the business would be very profitable, as the iron could be sold for $8 per keg, and for from $11 to $15 per box. Brockway said the name "Ferro plastic Manufacturing Company, Capital $200,000," had only been adopted "to make the thing look big." The defendant claims that he found the whole scheme was a rather suspicious one, and so refused to have anything to do with it. The case is still on. Dexter A. Hawkins appears for the plaintiffs, and John Hardy for the defendant.

THE CASE OF BOODY AGAINST TILDEN.

Judge Speir, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday granted a motion restoring to the calender the case of Henry H. Boody against Samuel J. Tilden and others. In this case, it will be remembered, Tilden was sued for over $20,000 on account of over-drafts in connection with the "consolidation" of the Chicago and Galena Union and the Chicago and North-western Railroad Companies. Tilden pleaded the statute of limitations in answer. The case was put down on the calender and was called for trial by Judge Dexter A. Hawkins, counsel for the plaintiff, was, however, detained in Brooklyn by the ice in the East River, and was not able to be present. Mr. Tilden's counsel thereupon took a judgment by default and obtained the costs and $1,500 extra allowance. This judgment, &c., was set aside by Judge Spier yesterday.

FIDUCIARY RESPONSIBILITY.

Judge Van Brunt, in the Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday denied a motion to vacate an order of arrest obtained against the defendant in the suit of Jose A. Obregon and another against Juan C. De Mier. The plaintiffs are merchants in Bogota, and the defendant is a merchant of this City. Prior to March, 1875, the plaintiffs and defendant had various dealings with each other, and there was at that time an open account between them. On March 17, 1875, the plaintiffs sent to the defendant a draft at 90 days for $12,000, with instructions to deliver the same in the purchase of silver, to be shipped to them. The order for the purchase was afterward countermanded, and the defendant was requested to pay Messrs. De Castre & Co. any balance which the plaintiffs owed the latter, to pay himself what the plaintiffs owed him, and to forward the balance to Messrs. M. Vengoechean & Co., of Paris. On June 7, 1875, the plaintiffs informed the defendant that that they had thought it best to draw on him in favor of M. Vengoechean & Co., of Paris, for the $12,600, at 60 days. This draft, when presented, was accepted by the defendant, but he did not pay the same at maturity. The plaintiffs thereupon began this action to recover the $12,000, claiming that the defendant had received the sums in a fiduciary capacity. An order of arrest was issued against the defendant, and this the latter sought to have vacated and set aside. Judge Van Brunt holds that the money was obtained in a fiduciary capacity, and that the defendant's liability to arrest was not changed by the acceptance of the draft.

COURT NOTES.

Further testimony was taken for the defendants in the case of John Patsen against the New-York Elevated Railroad Company, and the trial was adjourned until to-day in the Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas.

The well-known case of Duncan, Sherman & Co. against Ella Shaw was brought up before Judge Barrett, in the Supreme Court, yesterday, on a motion to put the case on the preferred calendar for trial. Judge Barrett reserved his decision.

In Part I. of the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, Andrew Giarni, a peddler, who, on Dec. 23, stole 37 geese and one turkey from the store of Joseph Simon, was found guilty. Judge Gildersleeve sentenced the prisoner to three years in the State Prison.

Judge Speir, in the Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday, held, in the case of Kelley against Dusenbury, that the defendant was wrongly arrested, because to obtain the arrest the plaintiff used the testimony of the defendant taken in supplementary proceedings.

Ernest Lohman, a porter in the employ of McBride & Howell, butter dealers, No. 333 Greenwich street, was arraigned at the Tombs Police Court, yesterday, on a charge of stealing butter from his employers. He pleaded guilty and was held in $1,000 bail to answer.

In the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday, Judge Spier approved the sureties on appeal of the defendant in the suit of Ann L. Neill against the American Popular Life Insurance Company, in which the plaintiff obtained a verdict for $5,500. The particulars of the action have been reported heretofore in THE TIMES.

William Shaw, who boasts a number of aliases, and William Brady, alias Mooney, entered the sleeping apartment of Edward Morsday, at No. 337 Spring street, and, as alleged, took from his clothing $115 in gold. They were arrested by Capt. McDonnell and arraigned at the Second District Police Court yesterday. They were remanded to the custody of Capt. McDonnell, as other charges are pending against them.

The case of Cecilia Clarke against Cockerill & Loughran was brought to trial before Judge Van Brunt and a jury in Part II. of the Supreme Court yesterday. The plaintiff claims $5,000 for personal injuries inflicted by the falling of a house at Twentieth street and Second Avenue, which the defendants as contractors were engaged in tearing down. The defendants deny all negligence in the matter. The case is still on.

On Sunday night last the warehouse of Saenger, Beers & Fisher, No. 93 Front street, was entered by burglars, who blew open the safe, but the report of the explosion was so loud that the burglars fled without carrying away their booty. Thomas Donovan and John Reilly, of Brooklyn, were arrested on suspicion, and arraigned at the Essex Market Police Court yesterday. They were remanded back to the custody of the Police.

Jacob Muller, of No. 311 Rivington street, was waylaid by two men in Goerick street, on New Year's night, who stabbed him with a knife, and then stole his gold watch, valued at $75. George Lewis, of No. 32 Goerick street, and Peter Delaney, residing at No. 96 Goerick street, were arrested by Detective O'Connor, and were identified by Mr. Muller at the Essex Market Police Court yesterday. Judge Morgan held them to answer in default of $300 bail.

Judge Speir, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday, granted a decree of absolute divorce to the plaintiff in the suit of Helen E. Lanfare against Robert O. Lanfare. The parties were married about eight years ago and have no children. The plaintiff alleges that about six years ago the defendant went to San Francisco, Cal., taking with him a young lady as a traveling companion, the two being registered on the passenger list as man and wife.

Judge Lawrence, in Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday rendered a decision in the case of Henry B. Snowden against Samuel T. Keese and others. The defendants were sued as Trustees of the Blees Sewing-machine Company for $2,200 owing by the corporation. It was attempted to hold them responsible under the law, because they failed to file their annual report. They demurred on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Judge Lawrence overruled the demurrer and gave judgment for the plaintiff.

DECISION AGAINST THE CITY.

Judge Van Brunt, in the Special Term of the Court of Commou Pleas, yesterday rendered a decision granting a motion for a reference made by the plaintiff in the suit of Charles Devlin against the Mayor, &c. The action is an old one, having been brought to recover about $200,000 on the old Hackley street-cleaning contract. In the procurement of the contract, it is alleged by the City, fraud was perpetrated, some $40,000 having been left on the table of the Common Council. The City opposed the motion for a reference and demanded a jury trial. Judge Van Brunt thinks, however, that a reference is better in the case. He says: "A careful examination of the testimony offered upon the previous trial seems to me to lead to the conclusion irresistibly that any verdict which a jury could render in this case would be the merest guesswork. The mass of figures is so great and so varied, and the evidence in reference thereto is so voluminous, that no person could possibly remember sufficient of the testimony to enable the referee to an intelligent result. Under these circumstances I think that it is the duty of the court to send this cause before a Referee for trial, unless there are circumstances peculiar to this case which would make such an exercise of discretion improper. It is claimed, upon the part of the defendants, the Mayor, &c., that such circumstances do exist, that there is an allegation in the answer that the contract was obtained by fraud, and that because of this allegation a jury trial should be had. An examination of the testimony taken upon this issue shows that it is extremely doubtful that evidence sufficient to establish the fraud claimed was offered at the previous trial, and it is not pretended that any additional can be produced in respect to this issue. Under these circumstances I think that it would be a denial of justice to refuse to the plaintiff a form of trial which will insure to him, in case he should show himself entitled to recover, an intelligent assessment of his damages, based upon the evidence, by compelling him to accept a form of trial wherein he would be obliged to accept a result reached not upon a deliberate consideration of the evidence, but based upon a guess as to what amount of damages he has sustained. I think, therefore, that the motion for a reference should be granted."

A HYPOCRITICAL THIEF.

John J. Mullin, an accomplished and hypocritical thief, who, according to his own admission, has been some six or seven times in the State Prison, and who gives his occupation as a "peddler and reporter," was charged by Assistant District Attorney Rollins, in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, with stealing $1 from the pocket of Mary Gerden, a vegetable vender in Ludlow street, on Dec. 21. The prisoner refused to accept the advice of counsel assigned to defend him, and conducted his own defense, making a pathetic appeal to the jury, in the course of which he wept profusely. The jury promptly found the prisoner guilty, whereupon he raised his Bible aloft, said he had lost all confidence in the teachings of priests, religious instructors, and clergymen of all denominations, and, with tears in his eyes, piously appealed to heaven. Judge Gildersleeve, disgusted at the fellow's hypocrisy, said: "I think you are the worst fraud I have ever met. The sentence of the court is that you be confined in the State Prison, at hard labor, for five years." Upon being removed to the prisoner's box, Mullen threw his Bible flung it around and stamped upon it, exclaiming that it was no good.

SUING A COMPANY'S PRESIDENT.

Judge Speir, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday rendered a decision in the case of William Sloane and others against Chauncey Vibbard. The action was brought to recover $120 64 for carpets furnished to the Fire Annihilator Company, of which the defendant was President. Mr. Hawkins, counsel for the plaintiff, was, however, detained in Brooklyn by the ice in the East River, and was not able to be present. Mr. Tilden's counsel thereupon took a judgment by default and obtained the costs and $1,500 extra allowance. This judgment, &c., was set aside by Judge Spier yesterday.

FIDUCIARY RESPONSIBILITY.

Judge Van Brunt, in the Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday denied a motion to vacate an order of arrest obtained against the defendant in the suit of Jose A. Obregon and another against Juan C. De Mier. The plaintiffs are merchants in Bogota, and the defendant is a merchant of this City. Prior to March, 1875, the plaintiffs and defendant had various dealings with each other, and there was at that time an open account between them. On March 17, 1875, the plaintiffs sent to the defendant a draft at 90 days for $12,000, with instructions to deliver the same in the purchase of silver, to be shipped to them. The order for the purchase was afterward countermanded, and the defendant was requested to pay Messrs. De Castre & Co. any balance which the plaintiffs owed the latter, to pay himself what the plaintiffs owed him, and to forward the balance to Messrs. M. Vengoechean & Co., of Paris. On June 7, 1875, the plaintiffs informed the defendant that that they had thought it best to draw on him in favor of M. Vengoechean & Co., of Paris, for the $12,600, at 60 days. This draft, when presented, was accepted by the defendant, but he did not pay the same at maturity. The plaintiffs thereupon began this action to recover the $12,000, claiming that the defendant had received the sums in a fiduciary capacity. An order of arrest was issued against the defendant, and this the latter sought to have vacated and set aside. Judge Van Brunt holds that the money was obtained in a fiduciary capacity, and that the defendant's liability to arrest was not changed by the acceptance of the draft.

SUIT AGAINST A RAILROAD COMPANY.

Rachel Van Doren brought a suit against the Central Park, North and East River Railroad Company, to recover $5,000 damages for personal injuries received by her in getting off one of the defendant's cars. The case was brought to trial before Judge Sedgwick and a jury in Part I. of the Superior Court yesterday. It appears from the testimony that on March 10, 1874, the plaintiff got on one of the cars at Bayley and Wall streets, in order to ride up to Twenty-third street. She stopped the car, and in getting off, as she alleged, the car started suddenly, throwing her to the ground. Her leg was broken by the fall. On cross-examination yesterday she said that when the car started she did not have hold of either handle, and that for 36 hours after the accident she did not call in a surgeon. A motion for a non-suit will be made this morning.

AN ACTION FOR LIMITED DIVORCE.

The case of Jennie Evans against Alexander Evans was brought before Judge Speir, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday, on a motion by Denis A. Spellissy, the plaintiff's attorney, for alimony and counsel fees. The petition of the plaintiff states that she has brought the action for a limited divorce on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment, and of conduct on the part of the defendant rendering it unsafe and improper for her to cohabit with him. The complaint was served on Nov. 16, 1876, and the defendant answered, denying the allegations of the complaint. The case has been heretofore reported in THE TIMES. Judge Speir yesterday awarded the plaintiff $12 per week as alimony since the beginning of the action, and $50 counsel fees.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The Supreme Court to-day decided that land-grant railroads are not bound to transport the troops and property of the United States free of charge, by reason of that fact, that they are only to allow the Government the free use of their tracks in return for the grants, and that they are each entitled to compensation for all such transportation they have performed, excepting the carrying of the mails, subject to a fair deduction for the use of their several roads. The general course of legislation on the subject of railroads is reviewed at length, and the conclusion is that it demonstrates the fact that in the early history of railroads it was very generally supposed that there could be public highways in fact as well as in name. In view of this fact it is thought that the conclusion is not to be resisted, when construing a legislative declaration to the effect that a particular railroad shall be a public highway, that the meaning is that it shall be open to the use of the public with their own vehicles; and that when Congress, in granting lands in aid of such a road, declared that it should be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government, it only meant that the Government should have the right to use the road in fact as it should be public to require its transportation to be performed by the railroad company, and that when the right to use the road is granted, "free from all toll or other charge for the transportation of any property or troops of the United States," it only meant that the Government shall not be subject to any toll for such use of the road. This is in the case of the Lake Superior and Mississippi, and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Companies, which have been some time under advisement. This reverses the judgment of the Court of Claims. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion. Dissenting: Justices Clifford, Miller, Davis, and Swayne; Justice Miller writing the opinion.

A GOOD SAMARITAN SENTENCED.

On the 3d inst., Alfred E. Latimer, of the Roosevelt Hospital, fell on the ice on Greenwich street, and was helped into a drug-store to have his injuries dressed, by William Lorimer, alias Lamar, living at No. 76 Bedford street. After Mr. Latimer's injuries had been attended to, Lorimer left, taking with him the injured gentleman's watch, chain, locket, and seal, valued at $210. The thief was subsequently arrested, and the stolen property traced. When Assistant District Attorney Rollins called the case for trial yesterday, in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions, Lorimer pleaded guilty, and Judge Gildersleeve sentenced him to three years and six months in the State Prison.

It will not surprise any one to learn that the Joint Committee on the Counting of the Electoral Vote have as yet failed to reach an agreement. The plan already reported seems to have been modified by a new proposal to cast lots to determine which of the Judges of the Supreme Court should be selected to act on the curiously-constructed Board of Arbitration which it is thought might relieve the President of the Senate of his constitutional functions. That would make the device a little more absurd than it is, and if the committees can do nothing better than elaborate hap-hazard schemes like this, they may as well promptly agree to disagree. Such must be the upshot of their labors in any case, and an early recognition of that fact will save their solemn pretense of deliberation from becoming ridiculous.

The hand of that eminent pettifogger, Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD, is very clearly visible in the conduct of the inquiry into the correspondence between the Republican managers and the State authorities of Florida and Louisiana. For example, Secretary CHANDLER was asked yesterday whether he had not telegraphed to Gov. STEARNS as follows: "You must send couriers to every county and doctor the returns to show a majority for HAYES." This was one out of half a dozen such pretended messages read off at yesterday's examination. It is hardly necessary to say that no such telegrams are in existence, and that the fictions yesterday submitted to Mr. CHANDLER were simply prepared with the double intent of entrapping the witness and deceiving the public into the belief that the Democrats have on their hands a great deal of matter which will prove very damaging to the Republicans who assisted in protecting the vote of the doubtful States against violence and fraud. Mr. CHANDLER told the committee that he never sent a telegram in his life which he would not have been willing to see in the newspapers next day, and it is tolerably certain that no telegram was sent by any member of the National Committee, before or after election, which might not be proclaimed on the house-tops. Mr. TILDEN probably wishes that his agents could say as much.

A practical step has been taken toward the reduction of City salaries in the introduction by Mr. LANGBEIN of the Salary bill of last year, which was based on the very exhaustive and carefully-prepared report of Controller GREEN. This is better than wasting time over bills for the appointment of a Commission of Inquiry or any such dilatory means of dealing with a subject of pressing importance. Mr. LANGBEIN'S bill has been sent to the Committee on Cities, and will doubtless be promptly reported thence. Its fate in the Legislature should not be a matter of doubt, and if our Tammany Republicans in New-York will keep their hands off, its early passage ought to be assured. Mayor ELY has committed himself to the principle of the bill, Gov. ROBINSON has shown his appreciation of its necessity, and the tax-paying community is unanimous in demanding the enactment of some such measure of relief. We shall see that the progress of the bill is very narrowly watched, and that the responsibility for delaying or emasculating it is laid where it belongs.

The fact that the announcement in Europe of Mr. TILDEN'S election to the Presidency had for its immediate result numerous transactions in Confederate bonds, is clearly shown by a letter quoted in our special dispatches from Washington. It evidently took REUTER'S agents about a week to make up their minds that any doubt could be cast on the supposititious election of TILDEN, and it was from private sources that people in Europe obtained the first hint that HAYES had received a majority of the Electoral votes. In the interval "Confederates" were sold at 4½ and 5 on the London Stock Exchange, and some prudent holders appear to have got rid of their stock of these worthless securities during the temporary revival of the hopes of the supporters of the rebellion. A belief in TILDEN'S election and its probable consequences having obtained so good a foothold in Europe, it is not surprising that one of its first results should have been to interpose obstacles to the negotiation of the latest issue of the bonds of the United States.

The report of Deputy Superintendent MCCALL on the affairs of the Security Life Insurance Company shows how completely the investigations of the Insurance Department may be rendered futile by the chicanery and fraud of the officers of a rotten company, and how slender a guarantee is afforded in the character and standing of Directors against the issue of lying reports and the acquisition of bogus assets. The official examination of the books of the company shows a deficit as regards policy-holders of over two millions of dollars, though the last sworn statement of the President and Secretary showed a surplus of over half a million. The difference is accounted for mainly by fraudulent over-valuations of real estate, by the assumed possession of securities which were really borrowed with intent to deceive the public, and by the most barefaced falsehoods in regard to the cash balance and outstanding premiums of the company. There seems to be no question that the frauds committed in connection with the management of the Security entitle some person or persons to a sojourn in State Prison, and it would have a very healthy effect on life insurance business should these tricksters get their deserts.

The Finance Committee of the Equitable Society have acted wisely in recognizing the popular demand for an investigation of all that relates to the management of our life insurance companies. The gentlemen to whom they have intrusted the task, so far as the assets and liabilities of the Equitable are concerned, occupy positions in the community which will impart to their report great weight. Its real value must depend upon the methods they adopt in the performance of the duty, and upon the evidence they give in regard to the details of management about which policy-holders and the public are not unreasonably anxious. With the calculations which determine the liabilities they cannot be expected to meddle. These require the technical knowledge of the Actuary, and may be properly left to the State Department, whose officers will, in due time, reach every company. Hon. E. D. MORGAN and his associates will, however, render a great service to life insurance and to the community if their examination of assets take the form, not of a mere audit or even a valuation, but of an analysis of the assets themselves and their relative fitness for the investment of trust funds. The proportion that real estate or mortgages on real estate should bear to the total of investments may not admit of specific rule, but it should be susceptible of some general understanding nevertheless. So, also, in reference to stocks. There are certain classes of these securities which the administrators of trust funds should rigidly eschew. The expenditures of a company—the cost of acquiring and conducting its business—must also be embraced in any complete investigation, not only as a means of re-establishing confidence in the particular company, but as preliminary to a reform which touches very closely the general interests of life insurance.

THE STRUGGLE IN LOUISIANA.

The statement of the President's intentions in regard to Louisiana, which we were enabled to publish yesterday, has been fully confirmed. The policy of non-intervention is ended. The President's dispatch to Gen. AUGUR, while asserting a disposition not to interfere prematurely, declares that the Administration cannot "sit quietly by and see the State Government gradually taken possession of by one of the claimants for Gubernatorial honors by illegal means." It accepts the authority of the Returning Board as conclusive in relation to the results of the election, and adds that the Legislature, duly elected according to the judgment of the board, having declared Mr. PACKARD Governor, the duty of the commanding General will be to recognize Mr. PACKARD if a necessity for formal recognition arise. In the meantime, these instructions appear to be sufficient. A New-Orleans Democratic paper, reporting an interview with Gen. AUGUR on the subject, makes him to construe them "as not recognizing either of the claimants of the Governorship." But this is obviously a mistake. For all practical purposes, the President's acknowledgment of PACKARD'S title to the position he holds is complete. Whether Gen. AUGUR shall or shall not exercise the force at his command as between PACKARD and NICHOLLS, is a question to be determined by events; but under his present instructions he cannot hesitate to sustain PACKARD in the maintenance of his official authority.

The President's interference has not occurred too soon. It might, in our opinion, have advantageously taken place a week ago. The merits of the case were as apparent then as now. The evidence now adduced to show PACKARD'S right was just as clear and conclusive. The illegality of NICHOLLS' action, and the dangers involved in the series of lawless measures by which he has attempted to create for himself a semblance of lawful power, were too manifest to be denied. We are glad to know that the President's inaction arose, not from doubt upon these points, but from an unwillingness to take any part in the settlement of the difficulties until the reports of the Congressional committees shed further light upon them. The aggressiveness of the Democratic party would have rendered further hesitation more than culpable. As long as NICHOLLS and his supporters contented themselves with playing at government, no great harm was done. If they derived consolation in defeat from a travesty of State or City authority, it might have been cruel to deny them the privilege of going through the performance. The forbearance shown toward them was, however, misunderstood. What, in the beginning, seemed a poor joke was quickly converted into a source of real peril. A seceding minority of the regular Assembly set up a Legislature of their own. Armed organizations, obeying NICHOLLS' orders, ejected the rightful occupants of the Superme Court Bench and installed his creatures in their places; took possession of other judicial offices and executive offices as well; captured the records, seized the State Arsenal and the various police-stations, and in other ways usurped the functions of the lawful Government. The fact that the latter was unable to repel by force the lawless forms of force thus created, proves nothing. The revolution was not impromptu. It was a product of the same conspiracy that had attempted to decide the result of the election; all the agencies that had been employed to control the voting throughout the State being for the time concentrated in New-Orleans. Against a movement of this sort, backed by thousands of armed and desperate men, and by a mob that only waited for a word to commence a massacre of the blacks, Gov. PACKARD was powerless. His sole reliance was upon the Federal Government, and he, and the Legislature acting with him, were justified in making the appeal to which the President has responded. His response could have taken no other shape without sacrificing a just cause and exposing New-Orleans to the horrors of anarchy.

What shall happen next is contingent upon the course pursued by the Democrats. Gov. PACKARD'S proclamation will test the temper and purposes of NICHOLLS and the men by whom he is surrounded. He characterizes their movement as a "lawless and treasonable conspiracy," and calls for a surrender of all they have seized and of the positions they have usurped, and an immediate dispersion of the armed organizations on which alone NICHOLLS can depend. The question is, will the proclamation be obeyed? A New-Orleans dispatch says that its orders will be unheeded by NICHOLLS and his bogus Legislature, and that the former "will resist any attempt of PACKARD to recapture the courts or station-houses." The Picayune, in the same spirit, remarks that NICHOLLS has given peremptory orders that any "tumult"—by which we suppose is meant any display of authority—on the part of Gov. PACKARD and his supporters "shall be quelled by the severest measures and at any cost." Reflection may render the Nicholls party less demonstrative. We learn, however, from a later dispatch that a demand made yesterday for the relinquishment of the Court-house was refused, and that that building is held by three companies of White Leaguers, while an adjacent Police-station is occupied by "Battery 2 of the same forces," with guns stolen from the State Arsenal. This is not a promising commencement. We must remember, too, that NICHOLLS and his newspapers have avowed a determination to resort to any measures to prevent the working of a Republican Government. The alternative, as they state it, is, NICHOLLS in the Governorship and a Legislature and Judiciary favorable to his pretensions, or martial law and a Government administered by United States officers. The tone of last evening's Democrat is in harmony with this programme. It invokes the vengeance of the New-Orleans mob upon the head of Gov. PACKARD if he shall dare to assert his authority, and in plain terms counsels his murder and the murder of other Republican leaders. Democratic wrath, it declares, should be no longer restrained, and once let loose it, should finish its work. The country is so accustomed to Southern brutality and bluster that it may regard these as idle words. We hope that they are. But the passions of a mob are more easily roused than quieted, and though NICHOLLS will probably retreat into a safe corner if serious trouble come, his followers may apply literally the lessons he has inculcated. For any conceivable risk of this kind Gen. AUGUR is now prepared. Having assumed the ground indicated in his communication to that officer, the President is not the man to shrink from consequent responsibility. The mere threats uttered by or in behalf of NICHOLLS may pass for what they are worth. But if an attempt be made to fulfill them, we trust that the counter-lesson will be sufficiently prompt and stern to bring even Louisiana Democrats to their senses.

FACTS ABOUT OUR BANKING SYSTEM.

It is now more than twelve years since the national banking system went into operation in this country. This system was established in the midst of the civil war, and while great caution was used to render it as safe and efficient as possible, it had many difficulties to contend with from the start. It was, in its extent at least, a novelty, and though free banking laws, upon a similar principle, had given rise to a large number of banks in the various States, these laws differed from each other in so many regards, and allowed so great a variety in the nature and degree of regulations imposed on banking, that the banks established under them had little in common and worked together with much jarring and loss. At the same time their managers were to a great extent jealous of the new system, and ready to impede and embarrass its workings. This feeling was the more active because the new law took its hold on the community by compulsion, and set up the new banks by taxing the circulation of others out of existence.

In all of its essential features the new system was directly contrary to the old one. It required uniform security for circulation in all parts of the country; this security was sufficient in amount to leave a liberal margin above the face of the notes; the law established minute supervision, and compelled frequent and detailed reports; and, finally, it imposed, at first, rigid restrictions, not only with reference to the circulating notes, but with reference to deposits, and with reference to many important elements of the business in which banks and bankers had previously enjoyed almost entire freedom. Whatever safety it gave to the public was purchased at the expense of privileges which had been extremely profitable, and which were surrendered reluctantly, leaving bitter resentments behind. It is safe to say that a great portion of the animosity which has been shown toward the national banks, and which has been an active element in the politics of the Western States, had its origin in these facts.

Those who have more or less thoughtlessly joined in the opposition to the national bank system, without reflecting on, and perhaps without knowing, the actual changes which it has wrought in the banking business of the country, would do well to read with care the account given by Controller KNOX in his last report of the experience of the several States in respect to banking previous to the establishment of that system. Mr. KNOX does not write as a partisan, but simply endeavors, from official sources, to give such a history in brief as will enable any one who wishes to do so to get at the facts. His figures are far more significant than any of his statements, and he indulges in inferences only in a very modest way. In a table on page 45 of his report he gives the returns of the State banks, as far as they are ascertainable for each year, from 1834 to 1861 inclusive. This period covers the two great "panics" of 1837 and 1857, and the intermediate disturbances. From this table it will be seen that the loans of the State banks, which, in 1837, had mounted above five hundred and twenty-five millions, shrank steadily for the next six years, until, in 1843, they were only two hundred and fifty-five millions, or less than one-half. Corresponding with this severe contraction of credit, deposits fell, in proportion, still more, from one hundred and twenty-seven millions in 1837 to fifty-six millions in 1843, and the circulation from one hundred and forty-nine millions to fifty-eight millions. In circulation the contraction was more than sixty per cent. When it is remembered that a very large part of the shrinkage was caused by failures among the banks; that during the process bank notes, in various parts of the country, were at a discount—at the trading centres of from twenty-five to seventy-five per cent.; that many millions, held by the laboring and producing classes, rapidly lost all value whatever, and that the so-called "capital" of the banks provided very inadequate compensation for the terrible losses suffered by their creditors, and particularly by the innocent bill-holders, we can understand the amount of irremediable misery inflicted by the faulty system of banking then employed. In 1857 the contraction was not so great, but it was more sudden and sharp. The laws were reduced in one year from six hundred and eighty-four millions to five hundred and eighty-three millions; the circulation fell from two hundred and fifteen millions to one hundred and fifty-five millions, or 28 per cent., and the process was accompanied by the same terrible suffering in less degree.

It requires but a moderate knowledge of the banking system now in force to see that, whatever may be its defects, and whatever the errors of the managers doing business under it, it can never inflict the same kind of loss on the country as that which came from the old system. The tax on trade, which was levied in the form of exchange between the agricultural States and the commercial centres, and which is very properly estimated to have been more burdensome than the interest on the United States bonds held as security for the circulation of the national banks, is permanently abolished under the present law, by which all notes have almost exactly the same value in all parts of the Union. The tax on trade, which, in like manner, resulted from comparative ignorance of the strength of the financial institutions in different sections, and from the uncertainty which prudent men felt in their ventures, making business a species of gambling, is now possible only in a slight degree. That there may be too extended credits by national banks, inevitably followed by painful contraction, is of course. No law can wholly guard against such results. They depend on the judgment and honesty of Directors and bank-customers, who cannot be made prudent or punctilious by statute. But these are faults the consequences of which can be avoided by the exercise of caution, and none need suffer severely from them who are determined not to do so. As a protection against them the law provides a degree of publicity that makes it possible for careful men to know in what direction the "ice is weak." At the same time, the comparatively helpless billholder is absolutely safe. His bank note is always and everywhere good at its face. This is a result which would be wholly unattainable under any conceivable combination of State laws.

"ONLY AN ACCOUNTANT."

There died in this City, last Saturday, a man of moderate attainments, a little past the prime of life, and gifted with a talent—a single talent—of which he made a great deal. His name was WILLIAM E. WARREN. He was a native of Connecticut. He seemed a born mathematician. Perhaps he was, more strictly speaking, a born accountant. The science of book-keeping and accounts was as open to him as the stony book of geology was to LYELL, or as the starry leaves of the sky could have been to TYCHO BRAHE. There was no cunning manipulation of accounts that could deceive him, no false or forced balance that he did not detect, and no fraudulent entry which failed, sooner or later, to reveal itself to his cold and searching vision. It might be that some cashier, book-keeper, or trusted accountant, had for years pursued a system of theft disguised by fair-seeming figures and footings. If WARREN were sent for, in a moment of doubt or suspicion, he detected the fraud with unerring accuracy as soon as he had run through the books.

Perhaps this talent is common enough. Perhaps there are thousands of men who are as expert at figures, as familiar with accounts, as WARREN was. But this man had one other trait which is not always found in conjunction with accuracy. His integrity was absolutely unquestioned. There are some men to whom the most glittering bribes, the offers of wealth and ease, are as nothing. These men seem to the rest of the world like phenomenal creations. They are simple and utterly without guile, with all their learning and acquirements. WARREN was one of these. He did not know any such thing as a temptation which could come to him outside of his moderate desires and his moderate competence. When he was once placed upon the trail of a dishonest accountant, there was no threat and no alluring bait which could move him one hair's-breadth from his duty to those who employed him—rather, let us say—from his duty to the truth.

The intricate system by which modern accounts are kept demands, to understand it, familiarity with a certain science. To men engaged in literature, affairs, and the larger problems of commerce, the details of accounts are a sort of mystery. To the head of a great firm, whose business it is to comprehend the daily wants of mankind, the resources of the world, and the condition of every market on the globe, the apparently simple method of keeping accounts is as a sealed book. They see and understand only the footings, the sums total, the balances. The method by which these are arrived at is only dimly understood. The principal delivers over to his employé the accounts of a vast business, the machinery of keeping which is to him as unintelligible as a chapter out of ELIOT'S Indian Bible. By and by, suspicion creeps in. There is a harrowing suggestion that all is not right. The President of the bank, the State Treasurer, or the head of the great importing house is not able to find where the leak is. He may go over the books without finding a gleam of light. If the eloquent and expensive book-keeper accompanies his principal in his tour of exploration, the latter leaves off his examination in a state of mind which may be described as chaotic. There is nothing more confusing than a double-entry clerk's explanation, unless it is a life insurance agent's exposition of the reason why a policy on the endowment, non-forfeitable plan, requires more money this year than it did last year. The wisdom which intelligently grasps the details of problems like these is entitled to the respect and admiration of mankind.

When banks, insurance companies, and business houses were invaded by the spectre of defalcation, the managers turned to their books. They found only hopeless confusion, with evidences of fraud just below the surface. Then they sent for WARREN. Everything was painfully uncertain until this dry, hard, exact man produced his footings. Then the principals were like mariners who beheld the stars for the first time after days of thick weather. PHELPS might protest to the State Treasurer that all was well. But when this man came and applied his sure test to the lying figures, the fabric of falsehood melted away, and the trusted deputy became a felon. In great dismay the Directors of a bank, having suddenly discovered that the bank which they had been directing only in name had been robbed under the cover of columns of figures which represented nothing but falsehood, sent for WARREN. When he produced the footings on a single sheet of foolscap paper, Directors, stockholders, and depositors knew that this was final.

Mr. WARREN is dead, and what may now be said to his credit or discredit is of no avail to him. But it seems only fair that such a career, representing as it does extreme accuracy and absolute truth, should not be closed without notice. It is a good thing that our country, which is so given to shams and loose ways, should have produced at least one man who knew all the intricacies of his business, and who was absolutely honest. Such a man might be whimsical, captious, or self-sufficient. Never mind; he understood those details of business with which business men continually grow less and less familiar. As a man, perhaps, we are not called upon to do him especial honor. But it will be well if the busy, shambling, and unthinking world will stop for an instant and consider the lesson the life of one who, though only an accountant, was as exact as the multiplication table, and whose honor was as stainless as the new-fallen snow.

JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS.

As the readers of Democratic newspapers are fully aware, the President of the United States has been occupied for the last eight years in the constant perpetration of an uninterrupted series of atrocious outrages. The last outrage of which this misguided man has been guilty is, perhaps, more utterly atrocious than any other of the entire list. It is charged that, a few days since, Dr. MARY WALKER called at the White House and desired to see the President in regard to a little claim in which she is interested. It will hardly be credited that she was refused admittance, and informed, in substance, that the President would consent to see her only when arrayed in the garments appropriate to her sex. If this matter is not made the subject of an investigation by the House of Representatives, and the stamp of reprobation set upon the guilty President's brow, we might as well abandon the farce of self-government and submit to Cæsarism at once.

It is, of course, evident, that when the President refused to admit Dr. WALKER, on the ground that she was not dressed in a manner becoming her sex, he was guilty of a bold and tyrannical assumption of judicial functions. It is on of his duties, as the chief magistrate of a great and enlightened people, to submit to be bored by his fellow-countrymen. Under the Constitution, every free American citizen has a right to ring the front door-bell of the White House, and to ask if the President is at home? When the visitor sends in his or her card, the President may decide whether or not he will submit to being bored at that precise moment, but he has no right to go behind the card and decide difficult questions as to the visitor's sex. When Mr. HEWITT called at the White House, the other day, the President did not venture to arbitrarily decide the question of his sex, and to order the doorkeeper to reject him unless he would consent to shave off his whiskers, and clothe himself with skirts and back-hair. Whatever may have been his private opinion in the matter, the President was far too wise to transcend his powers in dealing with the Chairman of the Democratic Committee. And yet, no candid man will deny that, if he could assume judicial functions in the case of Dr. MARY WALKER, he could, with equal justice, assume such functions in the case of Mr. HEWITT. Nothing is more certain than that the President's powers in relation to his visitors are purely ministerial, and could the founders of the Republic have foreseen that the day would come when an occupant of the Presidential chair would deliberately attempt to decide the sex of a person on his front piazza, they would have had grave doubts as to whether the blood and treasure of the Revolution had not been lavished in vain.

While the political crime thus committed by the tyrant of the White House is a terrible indication of our swift progress toward despotism, the disingenuous, not to say cowardly, manner in which it was perpetrated, will awaken the scornful indignation of the world. The President not only assumed that Dr. MARY WALKER was dressed in a manner unbecoming her sex, but he cunningly refused to put himself on record by specifying the precise nature of her sex. It is generally known that Dr. WALKER wears masculine trousers and a feminine "basque." To which of these garments did the President take exception? Did he look upon Dr. WALKER as a woman, and hence stigmatize her trousers as an inappropriate garment, or did he consider her a man, and so find fault with her feminine "basque"? The meanest criminal at the bar has a right to know the offense with which he or she is charged, but Dr. WALKER was repulsed from the White House without being definitely told whether she was a man or a woman. In the seclusion of his private star-chamber the tyrant calmly assumed that he knew her sex, and, therefore, ordered her to dress in a manner consonant with his alleged knowledge; but he refused to give her the slightest hint as to her true sex, and thus left her completely in the dark as to the course which she must pursue in order to meet his views.

Now, the President must understand that in this matter the public profoundly distrusts him. The sex of Dr. MARY WALKER is one of those things upon which even the ablest scientific expert has not yet ventured to give a decided opinion. It is true that a Western dog made up his mind, a few months ago, that the Doctor belonged to the male sex; but it is believed that his opinion underwent a change after he had made an attempt to sample her ankles, and had suffered from the poisonous effects of those aniline dyes which give a dangerous brilliancy to—in short, after the coloring matter of the red stripes had disagreed with him. Since that rash experiment, public opinion as to Dr. MARY WALKER has been undecided, and the weight of evidence tends to show that Dr. WALKER herself has not definitely made up her mind as to her sex. In those circumstances what could be more impudent than for the President to make himself the judge of so grave a question? What is there in his previous history which has fitted him to decide a matter of such momentous importance? How can he expect that a free people will quietly sit down and see a difficult and delicate question of morals and clothing settled by the sword of a grim soldier?

Whether the House should immediately impeach the author of this outrage is a mere question of expediency. In any event, a committee of investigation should be appointed, and the exact facts of the affair be ascertained. If the country quietly acquiesces in this assumption of judicial functions in the Walker case, we have no security that the President will not decide upon the sex of Messrs. HEWITT, WATTERSON, and WILLIAMS. Let us make our stand now, before it is too late, and resolve that henceforth the sex of an American citizen shall not be arbitrarily decided by the decree of a military dictator.

OBITUARY.

HON. ETHER SHEPLEY.

Hon. Ether Shepley died at Portland, Me., yesterday morning, aged 87 years. The deceased was born in Groton, Mass., Nov. 2, 1789. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1811, studied law, and commenced practice in Saco, but subsequently settled in Portland. He was a member of the Massachusetts Legislature in 1819; a member of the convention that formed the first Constitution of Maine, and was subsequently United States Attorney, for that State for 13 years. In 1833 he was elected United States Senator from Maine, serving in Congress until 1836. He was then chosen a Justice of the Supreme Court of that State, and subsequently Chief Justice, which latter position he held until 1855. While on the bench he furnished the materials for 26 volumes of reports, and, as sole Commissioner, was appointed to revise the Statutes of Maine. He was a Trustee of Bowdoin College, from which institution he received the degree of LL. D. He was the father of Gen. Shepley, Military Governor of Louisiana during the war.

OBITUARY NOTES.

Mr. V. E. Bearner, a well-known theatrical manager, died of consumption at Jacksonville, Fla., Sunday.

Kent Jarvis, a prominent and widely-known citizen, died at his home in Massillon, Ohio, yesterday morning, very suddenly, of paralysis of the heart.

The death, by suicide, at Riverside, Cal., of Capt. E. W. Cook, formerly of Lockport, N. Y., is announced. He was a Captain in the Twenty-eighth Regiment of this State during the war.

M. G. Lyle, one of the passengers injured by the accident last Thursday at Kettle Run bridge, on the Virginia Midland Railroad, died Sunday afternoon at Providence Hospital. His son left Washington Sunday night for Allegheny City with the remains.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

MATAMOROS, Jan. 15.—Advices just received state that Gen. Julian Queroga, a prominent military officer of the late Lerdo Government, who had retired to his ranche in Nuevo Leon after the flight of Lerdo from the capital, was shot at Monterey on the 11th inst., by order of Gen. Trevino, a partisan of Diaz. Gen. Labarret, Collector of this Port; Col. Seal, formerly second in command under Revueltas, and several other officers, who would not declare in favor of Diaz, will leave here to-day by a schooner for Vera Cruz. The officers of Revueltas continue to enforce the 3 per cent. tax by breaking into and plundering stores. To-day they carried off the furniture of a prominent citizen, leaving his family in an empty house.

STAGE COACHING REVIVED.

MIDDLETOWN, Jan. 15.—By order of Receiver Stephens, Superintendent Purdy, of the New-York Midland Railroad Company, has withdrawn all trains from the Ellenville branch. With a gang of men, the Superintendent, during Saturday night, visited Ellenville and brought away all the rolling stock and whatever of the company's property that was liable to seizure. The managers of the road regard the assessment of the town of Wawarsing as being too high; they had trouble there last year in regard to taxes. Connection is now made by stage to Phillipsport, Sullivan County, the nearest station to the Ulster County line.

THE ICE STRIKE AT AN END.

ROXBOUT, Jan. 15.—The strike of the icemen is believed to be at an end. This morning the companies resumed work at the houses hereabouts with full force, and thousands of men and boys are now engaged in cutting and storing ice, which is of the best possible quality. Up to noon there had not been the slightest disturbance. So eager were the laborers for work that about 500 came from the surrounding country, many traveling as far as 10 and 12 miles, and leaving home last evening to be on hand in time for work this morning. It is believed now that the vigorous action of the authorities prevented violence, and that the strike is at an end for this season.

ALBANY.

LAST NIGHT'S SESSIONS—SPINOLA AS AN OBSTRUCTOR OF BUSINESS—A SAVINGS BANK'S GUARANTEE FUND FOR DEPOSITORS—CANAL BOATS AT NEW-YORK PIERS—THE CITY OFFICERS' SALARY BILL.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 15.—The proceedings of the Assembly this evening were constantly interrupted by Mr. Spinola, who, seeing that there was barely a quorum present, omitted no opportunity to prevent the carrying on of such business as might be done, by calling for a count, and making other dilatory motions. He eventually succeeded in causing the adjournment of the House, everybody being thoroughly disgusted. The sitting lasted about an hour. Several bills were introduced, among them being Mr. Hollahan's, in relation to savings banks, to provide a guarantee fund for the protection of depositors. It requires the Superintendent of the Banking Department to collect from the assets of the savings banks one-seventh of 1 per cent. of the value of their assets, and deposit the money so collected with the Treasurer of the State, to be held by him in trust as a guarantee fund for depositors; and provision is made for the distribution of the money in cases of insolvency.

Mr. Gallagher presented a bill to amend section 3 of the act of 1875, to regulate piers, wharves, and slips in the City of New-York. It makes it unlawful to interfere with canal-boats at wharves, slips, &c. Mr. Gallagher desired its reference to the Canal Committee, of which he is a member, but it was sent to the Committee on Commerce and Navigation. It is an old stager here.

The salary bill, which failed last year, was introduced this evening by Mr. Langbein. It presents no material change in the scale of reductions in the salaries of city officials from the original bill. It was referred to the Committee on Cities.

Mr. Spinola called up his resolution limiting the debt of New-York, and wanted it considered in Committee of the Whole, at once. After a protracted discussion, in which Mr. Spinola displayed, in a marked degree, his peculiar talent for being disagreeable, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Cities. It is understood that Mr. Cowdin will speak on his resolution on the same subject, to-morrow, in the Senate.

Mr. Wellman introduced the bill relating to the Superintendent of State Prisons. The salary is fixed at $10,000, and the sureties at $25,000. It is more than probable that the salary of the Superintendent of Public Works will be fixed at this figure instead of the absurdly small amount of $6,000, at which it now stands. A similar bill was introduced in the Senate.

A NEW USE FOR CARRIER PIGEONS.

A VALUABLE SUGGESTION TO STEAM-SHIP COMPANIES—A RAPID AND SURE MEANS OF COMMUNICATION BETWEEN A SHIP AT SEA AND THE SHORE—THE POWERS OF CARRIER PIGEONS.

The uncertainty and delay attending the arrival of ocean steam-ships from foreign seaports, and the difficulty of establishing communication with them while at sea, has suggested the query, why do not the steam-ship companies utilize the carrier pigeon as a means of communication between their vessels and either the port of departure or the port of destination? A number of ocean steam-ships are now from a week to a month overdue, among them the Colombo, of the Wilson Line, plying between this City and Hull, which is now overdue 31 days. The Anglia, of the Anchor Line to Glasgow, was overdue 31 days before she was heard from, and other steamers of more or less importance in maritime circles are now anxiously looked for. Had these vessels been provided with carrier pigeons, their fate and the cause of their delay might have been known long before this time by their owners and friends of passengers on board.

The use of carrier pigeons passed into disuetude to a certain extent with the advent of the magnetic telegraph, although they are still used with success in some parts of Europe by minor journals. In France and Belgium the proprietors of many newspapers raise carrier pigeons in their offices, and when a correspondent or reporter is dispatched for news to some place not readily accessible or off the line of the telegraph, he takes with him from three to six of these faithful carriers, and dispatches them with news at intervals. Upon their arrival at their destination the news thus received, where unusually important, is published in "extras." Mr. August Brunin, editor of the Journal L'Epervier, of Brussels, has been most successful in raising carrier pigeons. His birds are of the Antwerp breed. This gentleman has supplied many parties in this country with these birds, realizing handsome profits on some of them. Mr. T. Ogden Weatherly, of Philadelphia, possesses a flock of over 50 birds, of which the original stock was received from Mr. Brunin. Some of them cost Mr. Weatherly as high as 380 francs a pair, having won prizes in races of 400 miles from the south of France to Brussels. The Antwerp birds are large and strong, and are capable of carrying all the manuscript a correspondent could write in half an hour, and when well-trained have been known to make a mile a minute, although their average rate of speed is about 30 miles an hour. The carrier-pigeon is larger than the ordinary pigeon, being usually about 15 inches in length, and weighing from one pound to a pound and a half. Their plumage is generally either dun color or black. As to the instinct which leads them to make such wondrous flights, naturalists seem to be pretty well agreed that it is made up of two elements—love of home and keenness of sight. Rennie, the ornithologist, speaking of the pigeon's power of vision, says: "We have not a doubt that it is by the eye alone that the carrier pigeon performs those extraordinary aerial journeys which have from the earliest ages excited astonishment. We have frequently witnessed the experiment made with other pigeons, of taking them from the dove-cot expressly to observe their manner of finding the way back, and we feel satisfied that their proceedings are uniformly the same. On being let go from the bag in which they have been carried in order to conceal the objects on the road, they dart off on an irregular excursion. When they find themselves at full liberty, they direct their flight in circles round the spot whence they have been liberated, not only increasing the diameter of the circle at every round, but rising at the same time gradually higher." It is therefore concluded that the birds make a constantly increasing circle until they ascertain some known object which enables them to shape a direct course. Whatever may be said about the instinct that is at work, a good deal of training is necessary to make the pigeons trustworthy in their flight. The Turks have paid much attention to this matter. When a young pigeon arrives at full strength of wing it is hoodwinked, or else put in a basket, and taken to a distance of a mile or so from home. It is then tried an additional mile or two, and the distance is gradually increased, until the bird will finally traverse the whole length or breadth of a kingdom. These Turkish pigeons are still used a great deal by merchants at Aleppo, as a means of communication with ports on the Mediterranean. The best pigeons are those which have a brood at home, to which they are, true to maternal instincts, anxious to return. Narratives are plentiful concerning particular flights of pigeons. In the last century a gentleman of London, England, sent a pigeon by stage-coach to a friend at Bury St. Edmunds, with a note directing the friend to let the pigeon loose at 9 in the morning on the second day afterward. This was done, and the pigeon arrived at Bishopsgate street at 11:30 A. M., having traversed the distance of 72 miles in two hours and a half. On one occasion a gentleman of Cologne, having business to transact at Paris, made a bet that he would let his friends know of his arrival within three days after he reached Paris. The bet was eagerly taken, the gentleman proceeded to Paris, carrying with him two pigeons which had a young brood at Cologne. He arrived at Paris at 10 o'clock one morning, released his birds at 11 o'clock, and they arrived at Cologne at 1:10 P. M. the same day. Audibon says that wild pigeons have appeared in this State with their crops full of rice, which they could only have gathered in Georgia or South Carolina, and he calculated from the time in which pigeons digest food that the speed of flight must have been a mile a minute.

COLLISION ON THE HUDSON RIVER ROAD

POUGHKEEPSIE, Jan. 15.—A special to the Eagle from Peekskill says: "This morning the engine of a northward-bound pay car on the Hudson River Railroad dashed into the rear of an extra freight train at Highland Station and was partly wrecked. The caboose of the freight train took fire from the upsetting of a stove and was destroyed, together with one stock car. Engineer Farrell jumped from the engine, and, striking a telegraph pole, broke two of his ribs and sustained other injuries. The fireman stuck to the engine and escaped unhurt."

WASHINGTON.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

BAFFLING FOR A SUPREME COURT JUDGE TO ASSIST IN THE COUNT PROPOSED—A SLIGHT CHANGE IN THE SCHEME—A SENSIBLE REPORT EXPECTED FROM MR. BURCHARD AND OTHERS—WHAT JOHN ADAMS CERTIFIED TO IN COUNTING THE VOTE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The joint committee was in session this afternoon for four hours, but it may be stated that up to this time there has been no agreement between the two committees on a method of counting the Electoral vote. The only change that has become known from the scheme as first stated is that the lots shall be cast to determine the members of the Supreme Court to serve on the commission of arbitration, instead of applying them to the members of the House and Senate. It is said the Justices of the Supreme Court entertain some aversion to being raffled for like Thanksgiving turkeys. There is a hope that the committee will come to a result of some kind to-morrow.

Mr. Burchard, of the Committee on the Privileges of the House, is preparing, and will shortly present, a minority report on the manner of counting the Electoral vote. In it he will claim that the President of the Senate has a constitutional right to make the canvass, and in support of this claim he will quote the certificate signed by John Adams, which reads as follows: "The underwritten, Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate, did, in the presence of the said Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and count all the votes of the Electors for a President and for a Vice President," which was used in all elections till the term of Jackson. The report will also refer to the paper relating to the proceedings in the Constitutional Convention which shows that the original language of the constitutional provision on the subject distinctly in terms gives the President of the Senate the right to open and count the vote. This report will be signed by names which will give it great weight.

The House, to-morrow, will begin to debate the report of the Committee on the Privileges of the House. This will open the entire Presidential question, and it is announced that a long debate is intended by the Democrats.

THE PRIVILEGES OF BOTH HOUSES.

THE LOUISIANA RETURNING BOARD CONTEMPT CASE IN THE HOUSE—A DIFFICULTY FOR THE HOUSE TO GRAPPLE WITH—PUTTING A JUDICIAL BODY IN CUSTODY OF THE SERGEANT AT ARMS—MR. ORTON SUMMONED BY THE SENATE—HIS CONTEST WITH THE HOUSE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The Judiciary Committee of the House held an extended session to-day, considering the charge of contempt on the part of the Louisiana Returning Board, in refusing to answer certain questions propounded by the committee, of which Mr. Morrison is Chairman. All the facts in connection with the refusal to answer were discussed, and all the reasons given by the Returning Board for their refusal to answer were duly considered, but the committee will hold that the reasons given by the board are not sufficient, and that they are in contempt of the authority of the House. It is probable, however, that the report will declare the board in contempt, and leave for the further action of the House the question as to whether the board shall be taken into custody and brought before the bar of the House or not. There will doubtless be a minority report upon this question, for it is known that some of the members hold that a body vested with judicial powers cannot be forced to answer as to the grounds of its action on a matter where the exercise of its judicial functions form the basis of the inquiry. Judge Lynde will make the report of the committee to-morrow, and ask its immediate consideration.

Mr. William Orton has been served with a subpœna, as a member of the Executive Committee of the Western Union Telegraph Company, to produce before the committee, of which Senator Morton is Chairman, all the messages in the possession of the company at Washington, New-York, and all points north of Washington, relating to the late Presidential election, and to the canvass of votes in South Carolina, Florida, Louisiana, and Oregon. It is understood all the members of the Western Union Executive Committee will be called before the committee on a similar summons. It is also reported, but the fact is not known, that the Morrison Committee will subpœna the same gentlemen. Proctor Knott has also sent for Mr. Brenner, the manager of the Augusta, Ga., office, to bring all the dispatches in his possession pertaining to the election in Florida.

Mr. Orton will, no doubt, be reported to the House as in contempt, and it is probable he will refuse to answer, and will be imprisoned. Barnes, of New-Orleans, is confined in a mean and unhealthy room, which will be likely to soon put an end to him. On the whole, the telegraph war promises to become lively.

CONGRESSIONAL TOPICS.

THE KIND OF LEGISLATION THE COUNTRY MIGHT EXPECT UNDER DEMOCRATIC SWAY—IDIOTIC MEASURES PROPOSED YESTERDAY — BARNEY CAULFIELD'S DREAD OF SOLDIERS STILL HAUNTING HIM.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The House held a most foolish and useless session to-day, chiefly devoted to the presentation of resolutions by lunatic Democrats, containing the most absurd and fantastic notions concerning the political situation. The Committee on Privileges, investigating under the provisions of a smuggled resolution, which was not understood when it was passed, have begun to investigate the management of the campaign by the two national committees. This inquiry, if pursued, will probably lead to the production of Mr. Tilden's bank accounts, for it has been fully determined, if the Democrats challenge the comparison, it shall be full and complete. All the proceedings of the Democrats to-day have been of that kind which can only be characterized as ridiculous and useless.

Barney Caulfield, of Illinois, who has had a dread of Federal troops since 1861, to-day introduced a bill in the House, which, for pure idiocy, has never been surpassed as a legislative proposition. The object of the bill was to practically depose the President as the constitutional Commander in Chief of the Army, by declaring it a high misdemeanor to move troops within the limits of the District of Columbia. The bill provides that it shall be unlawful for more than one battalion of infantry of not more than 500 men, one company of cavalry, and one six-gun battery of artillery to be within the limits of the District at one time; that none of these troops shall approach within one half mile of the Capitol building during the session of Congress; that not more than one company shall be paraded or drilled on the same day, and that any officer, civil or military, who shall bring or cause to be brought, troops in excess of the number described in Barney Caulfield's bill, or shall furnish for the use of such troops so unlawfully brought to Washington hard-tack, salt horse, round beans, or other subsistence and ordnance supplies, shall be guilty of a high misdemeanor and subjected to pains and penalties prescribed by Barney Caulfield, who is laboring under so heavy a nightmare because of the presence of several hundred United States troops, now quartered here for prudential reasons, that he would not even permit a battalion drill, or any evening parade, without the formal sanction of Congress. The introduction of this silly measure, in the interest of Tilden and "Reform," caused much surprise on both sides of the House. Most of the Democrats would gladly have voted it down with a shout, but the Republicans insisted upon the yeas and nays. Ninety-seven Democrats, mostly from Southern States, recorded themselves for suspending the Constitution, and there were 90 votes against it. In justice to the members of the Committee on the Judiciary, of whom Barney Caulfield is one, it should be stated that Barney has not made the Constitution of the United States a special study, and was not aware of the fact that that instrument makes the President of the United States Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and that the Constitution cannot be suspended by the House of Representatives.

A bill was introduced in the House to-day, and an effort was made to pass it under suspension of the rules, providing that the growers and producers of tobacco shall have the right to sell, in the leaf, free from all tax or restriction. When the bill was read there was considerable confusion in the House, few members seeming to notice the character of the measure proposed. The Speaker was about declaring the rules suspended to pass the bill, when a demand was made for another reading. The character of the proposition thus becoming known, it was defeated on a yea and nay vote.

Another resolution was introduced, preceded by a preamble reciting that, whereas, the officers of the Western Union Telegraph Company had treated the authority of the House with contempt in not producing telegrams in obedience to its demands, the Committee on the Judiciary are instructed to inquire whether that company had any special privileges conferred upon it by its act of incorporation which could be repealed by Congress, and, if such privileges are enjoyed, to report a bill withdrawing them. The resolution was, of course, defeated.

CONFEDERATE BONDS IN EUROPE.

WERE THEY REALLY SOLD ON THE SUPPOSITION THAT TILDEN WAS ELECTED?—THE QUESTION ANSWERED IN THE AFFIRMATIVE—HOW SUCH BONDS WERE DISPOSED OF ON THE LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The following is an extract from a letter from an entirely trustworthy correspondent in London, and received by a high official in this city. There has been some discussion as to whether Confederate bonds were really sold in Europe on the supposition that Tilden had been elected, and while the information has been sufficient to satisfy all persons except those who do not wish to believe, no statement so clear and direct has yet been published as that which follows:

"On Wednesday, Nov. 8, the day after our election, all dispatches in the London morning and evening newspapers, and many dispatches to private parties, said Mr. Tilden was elected President of the United States by a very large majority. On the 9th Confederate bonds began to be quoted, and continued to be until the 11th ult. Your cable to me, received on the 11th ult., saying "Hayes is probably elected," was the first information received of a change in the status. This dispatch I at once communicated to the most important bankers and brokers, and also to the United States Ministers at London and Paris. In the newspapers of Sunday, the 12th ult., there was a short article saying that a dispatch had been received at the United States Legation stating that Mr. Hayes was probably elected, and on the 13th dispatches appeared in all the morning papers expressing doubts as to which candidate was elected, but favoring Mr. Hayes. After this announcement no further quotation of Confederate bonds appeared. The Stock Exchange would not allow any official quotation, but the fact of sales being made appeared in the morning articles of the different papers. Sales were made both in London and Liverpool, and to show that it was generally known throughout Europe, Messrs. Rothschild informed me that a party in Germany sent them $5,000 to sell. I consulted several of the leading bankers and brokers, and they informed me that it would be difficult to tell the exact figure; but all agreed that the highest price was 4½ to 5, or thereabouts. Most of the parties could not give the date in any other way than by saying it was two or three days after the election. Others said Nov. 9, 10, or 11."

FURTHER TESTIMONY TAKEN BY THE SENATE COMMITTEE—GOV. GROVER OUT OF HUMOR.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The investigation of the Oregon Electoral case was continued before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to-day. Judge Denny, of Oregon, testified that he saw Secretary of State Chadwick pass an envelope containing the certificates of the Electors to Mr. Cronin. He saw Mr. Bush, of the firm of Ladd & Bush, at the Capitol on the day of the meeting of the Electoral College, and saw him go into the office of the State Treasurer with Mr. Bellinger, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee of Oregon.

J. M. Johns testified that he was at the canvass of the vote of Oregon for Presidential Electors. The canvass was made by the Secretary of State in the presence of the Governor. Witness noticed that Gov. Grover was out of humor that day, and Secretary of State Chadwick told witness that the Governor was mad because he (Chadwick) did not count the votes as he (Grover) desired. Witness understood that Gov. Grover wanted Chadwick to count Wells out and Cronin in. Chadwick told witness that the Governor wanted to slight the responsibility, and get him (Chadwick) to refuse to give Watts a certificate; witness saw Chadwick hand the Electoral certificates to Cronin, but he did not hear Chadwick mention Cronin's name as he did so.

William M. Turner, the contumacious witness, (telegraph operator,) was called, and in answer to questions from Senator Morton testified that the parties telegraphing the $8,000 from New-York to Oregon had told the committee all and more than he (witness) knew in relation to that transaction. He stated, further, that he knew nothing in relation to $17,000 being sent from New-York to Oregon.

Senator Morton stated to the committee that Mr. Dimon had left a transcript of his books and papers with the committee, with the understanding that nothing in relation to his (Dimon's) business transactions was to be made public, save such parts as were connected with this Oregon case. The Senator stated that since Dimon's departure he [Mr. Morton] had examined the transcript, and he finds an item dated Dec. 15, showing that Dimon had paid Kountze & Brothers, of New-York, $1,039 on account of J. M. N. Patrick.

Gov. Grover, at his own request, was allowed to make a statement. He disclaimed having had any conversation with Secretary of State Chadwick in relation to counting out Watts and counting in Cronin.

ROBBING THE MAILS.

MONTREAL, Jan. 15.—A United States mail-bag was discovered in the express office here by the agent and sent back to New-York. It had been stolen while in transit from Philadelphia to Boston, and contained drafts and checks to the amount of $44,301.

AMUSEMENTS.

DRAMATIC.

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.

A new three-act comédie vaudeville was represented for the first time in the vernacular at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, last evening. It is an adaptation of a German play called "Citronen," and the same title—"Lemons"—is bestowed upon the work in its English garb. The impression of the piece and of its performance was cheerful, and well-nigh unbroken merriment accompanied the action, which progressed for three hours. A record of these facts is really the only reference "Lemons" demands. Quite two columns would be needed for a rehearsal of the principal incidents, and, even could these be recounted with much detail, their perusal would supply but an incomplete idea of the farcical personages and the bustling transactions which occupy attention and afford amusement. One or two points, however, may be touched upon by way of throwing some light upon the comedy. The title is derived from the axiom, promulgated at an early stage of affairs, that mankind is divided into two classes, consisting, respectively, of lemons and lemon-squeezers. Those who would not be squeezed must take upon themselves to squeeze, and Mrs. Stark, a venerable dame possessed with a mania for "management," determines upon regulating all things so as not to be reduced to the passive condition of the fruit. From Mrs. Stark's ambition, conceit, and meddlesome disposition flows an endless series of droll mishaps, her discomfiture, however, being mainly planned and brought about by one Jack Perryn. The aged match-maker arranges to her own satisfaction half a dozen alliances, and, although her interference occasionally clouds the skies of all the lovers in the story, matters invariably come right at last. But the overthrow of the elaborate plans which Mrs. Stark has laid for securing the hand of either Lord Loftus, an elderly British nobleman on a visit to the United States, or Major Gooseberry, an ex-military man not without some resemblance to De Boots, is the most notable and also the most laughable event in the play. Jack Perryn tells her that Major Gooseberry is in love with her, and, in a spell of intoxication, the Major goes so far that he afterward believes himself bound to wed her without delay. Then Lord Loftus appears, and Mrs. Stark, imagining that his allusions to her daughter are intended for her, decides that she shall marry the foreigner. Subsequent proceedings show that Lord Loftus is not aware of the interpretation put upon his conduct, so Mrs. Stark commands her son Bennie to compel her suitor to fulfill what she considers his promise. By an ingenious quiproquo the ultimatum in the case is delivered to the Major, who dares not refuse to accept the mature charmer for his bride. To the intense delight of the Major, his suit is rejected, while Mrs. Stark is horror-stricken, a few minutes later, by discovering the mistake and by ascertaining, simultaneously, that Lord Loftus never was enamored of her. Several misunderstandings of the same sort occur in respect of the destinies of the younger personages, and, in brief, the whole piece is a cleverly-conducted imbroglio, of which brisk action and mirth-provoking episodes constitute the chief claim—and a very strong one—to attention. "Lemons" is capitally performed at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, and superbly set. Mrs. Gilbert's Mrs. Stark is a personation of admirable earnestness, and consequently, in this connection, one of exceptional comic vim, and Mr. Lewis' Major Gooseberry, while it approaches more closely to caricature, is provocative of at least as much hilarity. Mr. Coghlan depicts with welcome ease and naturalness Jack Perryn, the deus ex machina of the concern, and Mr. John Brougham lends to Lord Loftus a sympathetic dignity the illustration of which is all the rôle calls for. A capital portrayal of Drummer, a drunken soldier, is offered by Mr. Hardenberg; an unaffected representation of Bennie Stark is contributed by Mr. Crisp, and the remaining characters—female only—are sustained by Miss Davenport, Miss Rigl, and Miss Cowell, with a talent, a wealth of personal charms, and an array of toilettes fully equal to the author's requirements. The applause, last night, was liberal, and, as mentioned already, the laughter loud and frequent.

PARK THEATRE.

The production of the well-known romantic drama of "The Marble Heart" at the Park Theatre last evening, was made chiefly remarkable by the acting of Mr. Charles R. Thorne, Jr., and of Miss Katherine Rogers, and not by any manifestation of merit on the part of the other members of the troupe or by the setting of the play. It cannot be said, however, that the piece lacked variety. A sufficient force of Greek worthies was introduced into the prologue to satisfy the demands of a Schliemann, as far as numbers went, but it is to be feared that even that courageous explorer would have been disheartened at the task of identifying the object of his search. The young ladies who, in long night-robes and with chalked faces, personated the statues of Lais, Phryne, and Aspasia and thereby calumniated Greek art in the minds of three-fourths of the audience, may not have intended to be ridiculous, but were so for all that. Fortunately the drama proper contained fewer absurdities, and these were in a measure redeemed by the real force infused into it by the two leading characters. Mr. Thorne, who personated Raphael, the hero of the piece, did full justice to that rather exacting rôle, and, although somewhat more mature in years than the hero of the story ought to be, depicted his high aspirations and passionate but unrequited love with commendable warmth. The passage in which he declares his passion for Marco (Miss Rogers) was full of genuine fire and pathos, and called forth repeated bursts of spontaneous and hearty applause. His portrayal of the rejected lover, stunned by overwhelming misfortune, swayed to and fro by anxiety and hatred, and driven at last, by the taunts of his haughty mistress into semi-delirious ravings, was a masterly delineation, and at its close the artist was complimented by a well-deserved recall. Miss Rogers sustained the rôle of the coquettish and hard-hearted heroine with a success second only to that of Mr. Thorne, and at the conclusion of the third act both Raphael and Marco were summoned before the curtain. The piece will be performed nightly until further notice.

NEW BROADWAY THEATRE.

The play of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was represented at the New Broadway Theatre, last evening, with an exceptionally good cast. Mrs. G. C. Howard assumed the rôle of Topsy, while the character of Uncle Tom was sustained by Mr. George Kunkel, and little Gracie Wade personated Eva in a way indicating that she had been subjected to thorough and careful training. The rôles of St. Clair and Emmeline were assigned respectively to Mr. G. C. Howard and Miss Georgie Allen. Miss Allen is gifted with a well-trained voice, and she sang several popular melodies in a pleasing manner. The "Original Georgia Jubilee Singers" rendered a series of familiar airs, including "The Old Folks at Home;" "Massa's in de cold, cold ground," and "Tell me where my Eva's gone." The scenery used in the performance of the drama was entirely new; the scene illustrative of a river filled with floating ice, upon which the slave girl Eliza ventures to escape the pursuing slave-drivers, was particularly effective. The piece terminated with an allegorical tableau representing "Eva in heaven."

BOOTH'S THEATRE.

The truth of the report now current as to a possible change or management at Booth's Theatre, and indicating that the partnership of Messrs. Jarrett & Palmer is about to be dissolved, is denied by Mr. Joseph Tooker, the business manager of the house. The rumor, Mr. Tooker claims, probably arose from the fact that Mr. H. D. Palmer has been sick for some time, and is still unable to assist in the management of the theatre.

FAILURES IN SAN FRANCISCO.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 15.—The depression in the stock market occasions the usual rumors of failures among the brokers and operators, but as yet only two cases are authenticated. Hughes & Co., put and call brokers, have suspended. They claim that their assets exceed their liabilities, and that their suspension will be only temporary. W. H. Duncan, of the Pacific Board, has also failed.

FUNERAL OF AN ACTRESS.

BURIAL OF LUCILLE WESTERN IN MOUNT AUBURN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 15.—The remains of the dead actress, Pauline Lucille Western, were to-day deposited in their final resting-place in Mount Auburn Cemetery. The remains of her little niece, a daughter of the late Helen Western, were also interred with her, and the family had thus a double cause of grief. The funeral services took place at Bullfinch Place Chapel, where Rev. Wilbour A. Allen so long preached, which was crowded with a large gathering of professional and private friends of the deceased. Among the more conspicuous ones present were Mrs. J. R. Vincent, Mrs. Rachel Carter, Miss Jane Parker, Mrs. Bates, William E. Buckley, Harry Josephs, F. Chippendale, C. Villers, N. C. Goodwin, Jr., L. F. Tilton, Julia Coventry, T. M. Harter, C. H. Pattee, Wyzeman Marshall, N. Lothian, and others. Nearly all the members of the Howard Athenæum Company, Arthur Cambridge, agent of the deceased, and Capt. W. P. Samuels, of New-York, who escorted the body to Boston. The remains were conveyed from Malden, where they had been kept since the arrival of the party from New-York, and where the friends of her mother, Mrs. English, and others, were afforded an opportunity to take a final look at the familiar face. Yesterday large throngs of people called, and many beautiful gifts of flowers were presented. Conspicuous was a large cross from Tiffany & Co., of New-York, and a dove, composed of pure white flowers, sent by professional friends in Boston.

The services at the chapel were very simple and fitting. Rev. Samuel H. Winkley conducted the exercises; prayers were offered. The hymn "O! Paradise" was sung, and a brief invocation was made by Rev. Mr. Wilson. Brief remarks were made by Mr. Winkley, who pointed out the worth of a true life, and urged upon those of his hearers who followed the dramatic art to remember that purity, goodness and simplicity of soul are worth far more than all this world's fame. An opportunity was then given to the throng of friends to take a last look at the face of the deceased. The caskets of both bodies were heavily laden with flowers in all shapes and designs. One very beautiful device was a handsome and chaste floral pillar of camations, ferns, and smilax, in which was wrought the last words of the dying woman, "Rest at Last." The tribute was from Mr. James H. Mead, the lady's former husband. Mr. C. H. Pattee sent a wreath bearing the inscription "Requiescat in pace," Mrs. Bates a basket of exquisite flowers, Mrs. Vincent a bouquet, Miss Amy Tiffany, of the Brooklyn Theatre, a beautiful cross; Mr. Frederick Williams and others also sent beautiful flowers. A large concourse followed the remains to the cemetery, where the final rites were performed, and the curtain dropped over the last scene in the drama of her life.

THE CAPITAL POLICE BOARD.

A DETECTIVE UNDER EXAMINATION—HOW INFORMATION WAS SENT TO THE PHILADELPHIA CHIEF OF POLICE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The House Committee of Investigation into the acts of the Police Commissioners of the District of Columbia examined G. W. McElfresh, another detective, to-day. He testified to having sent two telegrams signed by J. A. Clarvoe, Chief of Detectives, and addressed to the Chief of Police of Philadelphia, giving information of the whereabouts of Mr. Charles A. Dana. This was about the time of the investigation into the charges against Secretary Robeson in 1872. One of the telegrams conveyed the information that Mr. Dana had just left Washington for New-York in a sleeping car. McElfresh testified that he had no knowledge as to the purpose of these telegrams, except that he knew from a letter that the Philadelphia Chief of Police had made some inquiry as to Mr. Dana's whereabouts; Mr. Dana at the time was summoned before a Congressional investigating committee; the detectives did not discuss among themselves how to get even with Murtagh; witness had nothing to get even for; he was not sore; the Dana telegrams witness mentioned to Detective McDevitt; they both thought that Mr. Murtagh was not sore, as he ought to be; witness told McDevitt that if he (witness) was summoned before a committee he would tell all he knew about the Dana matter.

Q.—Did you and Major Richards and McDevitt talk about the Dana matter at Police Head-quarters? A.—No, Sir; nor no place else; I talked it over casually with McDevitt, as he spoke to Murtagh about the Dana matter; I only know that Murtagh was connected with the Dana matter from what I was told by my superior officer; never talked with any one about the Whitthorne matter until the present investigation was ordered; was in Col. Cook's office when a copy of the former's letter to Murtagh was read; McDevitt told me a copy of the letter would be read, but did not say a word as to what it was about. Witness denied that there was any conversation, so far as he was concerned, with anybody to get up a Congressional investigation, so that the Whitthorne and Dana matter might be brought out.

EFFECTS OF THE SNOW STORM.

TRAINS DELAYED ALMOST EVERYWHERE—NUMEROUS PERSONS SNOW BOUND.

LOCKPORT, Jan. 15.—It is reported that six westward bound railroad trains are on the Central Railroad, east of this place, blockaded by the snow. No trains have arrived here from the east since early Saturday morning. The first train from Buffalo since Saturday arrived here this afternoon. No trains from the West have arrived here since Saturday. The Post Office here is not receiving or sending out any mail. It is hoped matters will be in better condition by to-morrow. Early this morning a heavy snow-storm accompanied by violent north-east winds set in, and has continued up to this hour (midnight,) without abatement. The street cars have managed to keep their tracks clear enough for occasional trips, and railroad trains have not been completely stopped, but all of them have been delayed greatly, and it is probable that some freight trains will be laid off for to-night. Advices from several States in the West show that the storm is very general, and that from one to three feet of snow is on the ground. The weather is moderately cold. No dispatches from any other direction have been reported so far.

OMAHA, Jan. 15.—A driving snow-storm set in last night and continues without abatement up to this hour, (4 P. M.) A strong wind is piling the snow up in large drifts, and, although no serious detention to trains is reported as yet, such result is apprehended. Street-car travel in this city is suspended. Thermometer 15° above.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16—1 A. M.—For the lower lake region and Middle States, falling and low barometer, increasing easterly or southerly winds, warmer, rainy, and stormy weather, partly turning into snow in the northern portion, succeeded by rapidly rising barometer, brisk and high north-west or westerly winds, colder and clearing weather, except continued light snows in the former.

In New-England, falling and low barometer, increasing easterly to southerly winds, warmer and stormy weather, with snow partly turning into rain, followed by rising barometer, north-westerly winds, and clearing weather.

The rivers in the Middle States and Southern New-England will commence rising.

Cautionary signals continue along the Atlantic coast.

A SUIT FOR $75,000 DAMAGES.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 15.—Orville L. Grant filed suit in the Circuit Court to-day against P. W. Schneider, claiming damages in the sum of $75,000 for alleged breach of contract. The petition alleges that in March, 1873, he entered into an agreement with defendant that as soon as certain contracts submitted by defendant to the Government containing proposals to furnish grants for the Custom-house in St. Louis should be signed, that the plaintiff was to go to St. Louis and take charge of the outside work and manage the financial affairs pertaining to said contracts with the Government, for which he was to receive $5,000 per annum as salary, and 10 per cent. of the profits on the said other contracts plaintiff might be instrumental in procuring; that plaintiff did proceed to St. Louis, and took charge of the business as agreed upon, but a few days afterward defendant denied the contract with plaintiff, and has since refused to pay him any part of the amount agreed upon, therefore he prays the court for judgment in the above sum.

SUICIDE OF A FARMER IN JAIL.

SCHENECTADY, Jan. 15.—Peter Polock, a farmer, residing in Glenville, this county, who had just been tried for an assault on his son and sentenced to Clinton Prison, committed suicide in that jail on Sunday morning by taking poison. He had told his family that he would kill himself if sentenced.

LATEST NEWS BY CABLE.

TURKEY AND THE GREAT POWERS.

THE CONSTANTINOPLE CONFERENCE—THE COMMISSIONERS' LAST PROPOSALS TO THE PORTE—AN ULTIMATUM PRESENTED—THE GREAT DIGNITARIES OF STATE TO DECIDE UPON AN ANSWER.

LONDON, Jan. 15.—A dispatch from Constantinople says at to-day's sitting of the Conference the Marquis of Salisbury, in the name of his European colleagues, communicated to the representatives of the Porte the last proposals of the powers, whose demands were reduced and softened, as it was anticipated they would be in the telegram of last night. The gendarmerie, the division of Bulgaria into two provinces, the restriction of Turkish troops to certain places, are not mentioned in the propositions submitted to-day. The previous propositions for an International Commission, and making the appointment of Governors of Provinces subject to the consent of the powers, are considerably modified. In addition to the concessions the cession of Zwornik to Servia is left in suspense. The proposals for the aggrandizement of Montenegro are reduced to limits which the Porte has signified its willingness to accept. Thus all contested points are relinquished by the powers, except the commission of Supervisors, and the appointment of Governors, and even these points are much altered. The powers now propose that the appointment of Governors of Provinces be subjected to their approval only during the next five years, and that instead of an international commission a mixed body, composed of Europeans and Turks, be established.

After making his communication Lord Salisbury announced that if the Porte did not agree to the proposals now made, he had instructions to quit Constantinople. Sir Henry Elliott said he also had been instructed in that event to withdraw and leave the British Embassy in care of a Chargé d' Affaires. All the other Plenipotentiaries in succession made similar declarations, some of them laying stress on the fact that it was the Porte's interest to accept the proposals.

Safvet Pasha replied. He expressed regret that the decision of the powers should require him to refer the matter to the Porte before giving a final answer; but he would say he did not think it possible for Turkey to yield upon the questions relative to the Commission of Supervision and the appointment of Governors, these proposals which affect the independence of the Porte having already been rejected. The Porte, however, would examine the communication, and reply definitely thereto at the next sitting. The conference will reassemble on Thursday if the Turkish answer is then ready; but it is more than probable that the meeting will not take place until Saturday. In the meantime the Grand Council of 180, composed of all the great dignitaries of State, will meet to decide upon the answer.

A special dispatch from Vienna to the Daily News asserts that the archives of the Russian Embassy at Constantinople have arrived at Odessa.

THE RUSSIAN ARMY.

LONDON, Jan. 16.—The Berlin correspondent of the Times says the reason each Plenipotentiary made a separate declaration to the Porte at yesterday's sitting of the conference was to prevent Russia's future acts from being represented as undertaken in behalf of all Europe. A Belgrade telegram to the same paper states that all the Russian wounded are to be sent home immediately. It is evident that there is a breach in the alliance between Russia and Servia. The Anti-Russian Party, which favors immediate peace with Turkey, is daily gaining ground. A change of Servian policy, if not of Ministry, is not improbable.

The Vienna dispatch in the Times contains a long review of the condition of the Russian mobilized Army derived from the letters of an impartial foreign officer who traversed the Russian lines from the Pruth to Odessa, and had ample opportunities of observation. The correspondent says the letters give a decided impression that the Russian Army, thanks to the two months' armistice, is in a far better condition than was generally supposed, and is certainly incomparably fitter to take the field than in any former campaign against Turkey. The principal defect seems to be in vehicles, as those which have been impressed for the service of the Army are unsuitable for the formation of a military train. It has therefore been decided to form a regular train of from 8,000 to 9,000 vehicles, which will require 60,000 draft animals. Not 30,000 animals have yet been secured. Thus another month or six weeks must pass before the mobilization of the Army can be considered really assured. The Roumanian railways would only aid the Russian advance to the Danube very slightly. In consequence of differences of gauge and paucity of rolling stock it would take them 40 days to carry the whole Russian Army and stores to the Danube. The letters show that although the six Army corps, when first mobilized, were considerably below their nominal strength, they are now little, if anything, short of their full number, viz., 240,000 men. It was first intended that only four corps should operate on the Danube, and two others defend the Black Sea coast. Now, however, in consequence of the diminution of apprehensions of a Turkish attack on the coast, and the unexpected magnitude of Turkish preparations on the Danube, two coast corps have been added as a reserve to the Army operating on the Danube, and other forces have moved from the interior for the defense of the coast. Advantage has been taken of the armistice to arm all the regiments in the same infantry division with the same kind of gun. Most of the batteries of artillery have also been supplied with new breech-loading cannon. All the stores of clothing and accoutrements are now complete, but the ambulance and hospital service is still deficient.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

BERNE, Jan. 15.—Brazil, the Dutch and the Spanish colonies, Ceylon, and some other British colonies have joined the Postal Union. The Portuguese colonies, Hong Kong, Japan, and the Argentine Republic have signified their desire to enter the Union.

ROME, Jan. 15.—The Pope yesterday received a deputation of ex-Pontifical functionaries, one of whom read an extremely violent address against the Italian Government. The Pope, in reply, censured the measure contemplated by the Italian Cabinet regarding the Church.

MARINE DISASTERS.

DAMAGE TO SHIPPING REPORTED AT HAMILTON, BERMUDA ISLANDS.

HAMILTON, Bermuda, Jan. 9.—The schooner Ellie, of and from Halifax, Capt. O'Brien, bound to Porto Rico, with a cargo of fish, got among the reefs to the north-west of these islands, on the afternoon of the 4th inst., during thick and stormy weather. Capt. O'Brien reports that he left Halifax on the 26th of December; had moderate and fair weather until the 30th, when a heavy gale sprang up from the south-south-east; then, in latitude 35° 30′, longitude 64° 30′, the vessel was struck by a heavy sea, when the foremast and jibboom and everything attached were carried away, the boat crushed, cabin and companion windows broken, and the cabin filled with water; vessel labored much and made water. On the 1st of January the weather moderated; got down the maintopmast and rigged a jury-foremast. On the 2d and 3d it blew heavy from the westward, and he shaped his course for Bermuda. At 2 P. M. of the 4th sighted land, bearing south-south-east; hauled up to south-west, hoping to clear the land. Breakers were soon discovered on the beam and directly ahead; endeavored to stay, but she would not come about, and there not being room to wear, she was run between two breakers into smooth water, inside the reef, where she took bottom at 4 P. M. At 5 P. M. a pilot and several boats' crews came on board; at 9 P. M., then high water, was gotten off and anchored in deep water inside the south-west reef. Her rudder was broken and she made water rapidly. She was towed round into Hamilton by the morning of the 6th.

The American ship David Crockett, Capt. Anderson, 40 days from Kingstown, Ireland, bound to New-York, in want of provisions, anchored in Five Fathom Hole on Friday last. Having had her wants supplied she proceeded on her voyage on the following day.

The schooner Pioneer, Capt Hamilton, from Surinam, bound to Boston, arrived at St. George's on Sunday last, leaking badly, foremast gone, cargo shifted, and much of it above

The bark Eliza Barse, Capt. Vesey, left New-York on the 28th of December for these islands. Had a cyclone on the 29th and 30th from north-east by south to north-west; hove to 24 hours; blowing fearfully, with very heavy sea, from all points; lost deck-load of hay and 25 head of stock; cattle died from extreme cold; barometer fell to 29.20; suffered no damage to vessel. On the 2d inst. had another very heavy gale from south-west to north-west; hove to 20 hours.

Capt. Mayo, of the Excelsior, reports having experienced heavy gales on the 1st and 2d inst. from north-east to south-west; barometer, 28.80. From thence to land, which was sighted on Friday afternoon, heavy north-west gales and a terrific sea running throughout.

The schooner Waldemar, of Bucksport, Me., Capt. Parker, from Turk's Island, bound to New-York with a cargo of salt, out 51 days, arrived at St. George's on the 2d inst. Capt. Parker reports having experienced a succession of heavy north-west gales the entire passage; has been on the coast several times, and as frequently been driven off; having lost nearly all her sails, and being short of provisions, was compelled to bear up for Bermuda.

The brig Fairfield, Capt. Morris, arrived at St. George's, from New-York, on the 6th inst., to take hence to London the cargo of the abandoned brigantine Titus, consisting of slate and oil.

The American brigantine George S. Berry, 256 tons, has been purchased by Messrs. S. S. Ingham & Co., and will be refit

MONDAY, Jan. 15—P. M.

On the Stock Exchange the week opened with a very irregular market, some stocks, notably the coal shares, exhibiting weakness, while, on the contrary, others displayed strength, prominent among the latter being Western Union, which, opening at 74⅜, advanced steadily to 76¼, afterward reacting to 75¾, with a subsequent recovery to the highest point of the day, at which the closing sales were effected. The speculation in this stock is, unless appearances are utterly deceptive, largely artificial in its character, but notwithstanding the lack of support from the outside public, the engineers of the movement, it must be said, seem not to have abated a jot of confidence, and to-day the predictions of higher prices were uttered more freely than ever.

The entire business aggregated 110,568 shares, which embraced 42,100 Western Union; 21,500 Lake Shore; 14,200 Michigan Central; 9,000 Delaware, Lackawanna and Western; 6,800 St. Paul; 6,500 New-Jersey Central; 2,400 New-York Central. Lake Shore opened at 54⅛, declined to 53⅞, with a subsequent recovery to 54⅛. Michigan Central after declining to 48⅝ advanced to 49¼, closing at 49. There was a sharp decline in the coal shares, Delaware, Lackawanna and Western falling off from 76⅛ to 75⅛, New-Jersey Central from 35⅜ to 34, and Delaware and Hudson Canal from 72 to 70⅝. The Granger shares were about firm, but a fraction lower for the preferred stocks. Illinois Central was weak, and fell off to 79¼. Hannibal and St. Jo. declined ⅛ ₱ cent. for the common and 1 ₱ cent. for the preferred from the final quotations of last week. New-York Central declined from 102⅜ to 102, and closed at the lowest point.

Money was in good demand, and the ruling rates throughout the day were 5@6 ₱ cent. Prime mercantile paper was quoted at 5 to 6½ ₱ cent., according to the date of maturity. The national bank notes received at Washington for redemption to-day amounted to $500,000. The following were the rates of exchange on New-York at the undermentioned cities: Savannah, buying, par, selling, 3-16; Charleston, easy, ⅛ discount@par; Cincinnati, firm, buying, 50@par, selling, 50 premium; St. Louis, 75 premium; New-Orleans, commercial, 7-16, bank ¼; Chicago, 60 premium.

The foreign advices were not especially important. The London market was slightly higher for Consols and steady for United States bonds, which were without material change. The former closed at 95 @95⅛ for money and the account, and the latter at 105¼@105⅜ for old 1865s, 108¾ for 1867s, 109@109⅛ for 10-40s, and 107¾ @107⅞ for new 5s. Erie was ⅛ ₱ cent. higher, selling at 9¼. The sum of £169,000 sterling was withdrawn from the Bank of England on balance. At Paris Rentes closed at 106f. 37½c., against 106f. 5c. on Saturday.

The demand for sterling exchange was light, and the market was about steady, with actual business at $4 83@$4 83⅛ for bankers' 60 days, and at $4 84⅜@$4 85 for demand drafts. The nominal rates were $4 83½ and $4 85½ respectively.

The gold speculation was firm and higher, the price advancing from 106⅛ to 106⅜. The latter was the closing quotation. Cash gold loaned at 7 to 4 ₱ cent. for carrying, and in exceptional instances free of interest toward the close.

Government bonds were strong at an advance of ⅛@⅜ ₱ cent., except in the case of 1868s, which were ⅛ ₱ cent. higher, selling at 115¾. There were some large transactions in registered new 5s at 110⅞@111 ex coupon. Sixes of 1881 rose to 114 for registered, and to 114¼ for coupon. There were free purchases for investment by institutions and capitalists, and the brokers had difficulty in securing round amounts, the small supply of bonds making it comparatively easy to advance prices. Railroad bonds were generally steady on a small business. The changes were less important than usual, ranging from ⅛ to ½ ₱ cent. State bonds were firm. Missouri Long 6s advanced to 104½.

FLOUR AND MEAL—The severe storm was against activity in Produce and Merchandise. The movements in Breadstuffs were also impeded by the restricted offerings of Flour and Grain, and the active purchases claimed for supplies. The reported rise in rail freight rates from the West worked in favor of holders of stock actually here. Western and cabe advices were also deemed encouraging, and Southern and Western Flour was in more urgent demand, shipment and home trade purposes at stronger rates, the dealings indicating an improvement of 5c.@ 10c. ₱ bbl., with yet a fair business in prospect for lots suitable to the wants for the present. Minnesota Extras were in very good demand, partly for export. Included in the sales have been 3,100 bbls shipping Extras, of which 1,300 bbls. City Mills, 3,100 bbls. The dealings were mostly in lots as from $7 50@$8 50....On the sales here

Most of the lots sold were at $3 90@ $4 for good to choice Jersey.

GRAIN—A light business was reported in Wheat to-day, both Spring and Winter, the further advance claimed on Spring grades of 1c.@2c. a bushel, and the light offerings of prime to choice lots, operating against an active movement, though a good demand was noted for supplies, mostly from the export interest, on the basis of the best prices of Saturday....Sales were reported to-day of 85,000 bushels, including bbl Western, about 2,400 bushels, on private terms; choice Minnesota Spring, called No. 1, 5,000 bushels, in store, for export, at $1 50; (with strictly prime No. 2 Milwaukee do., quoted at $1 47 bid, and as much as $1 50 asked;) New-York No. 2 Spring, about 3,000 bushels, at $1 39; ungraded Spring, in lots, about 25,000 bushels, within the range of $1 28@$1 48, and a small lot of poor, in store, at $1 14....Corn has been fairly active at firmer prices, the business being almost wholly in new crops, in part for shipment, but mainly for home use at an advance of 1c. ₱ bushel.... INSURANCE SWINDLING.

HOW THE SECURITY LIFE COMPANY DID BUSINESS.

REPORT OF THE DEPUTY SUPERINTENDENT OF THE INSURANCE DEPARTMENT—ACCOUNTS DELIBERATELY FALSIFIED—A NEW SYSTEM OF BOOK-KEEPING ADOPTED—THE OFFICIALS CHARGED WITH PERJURY—HOW THE PREMIUM NOTE AND LOAN POLICY-HOLDERS WERE DUPED.

The examination by Hon. John A. McCall, the Deputy Superintendent of the Insurance Department of this State, of the books and accounts of the Security Life Insurance and Annuity Company, whose failure was exclusively reported in THE TIMES of Dec. 14, has been concluded.

The examination has shown that falsification of the books and accounts was carried on to an almost unlimited extent, and that the statement made to the Insurance Department on Jan. 1, 1876, was false in nearly every particular. In that statement, signed and sworn to by the officers of the company, the total admitted assets of the concern were given as $3,683,186 25, while on Dec. 14 last, according to Mr. McCall's report, the total available assets were only $2,000,959 35. A glance at the character of the assets held by the company is sufficient to show that they could not possibly have deteriorated so much in value during the past year. Again, in the company's statement, the liabilities on policy-holders' account were stated at $3,168,152 25 while they are now shown to be $4,054,783 35. At the beginning of the last year the company claimed a surplus on policy-holders' account of $515,034, but instead of any surplus a deficiency is now discovered amounting to $2,053,824. Following is the report of Mr. McCall, made to Superintendent Smyth at Albany yesterday:

MR. M'CALL'S REPORT.

ALBANY, Jan. 15, 1877.

To the Hon. William Smith, Acting Superintendent of the Insurance Department:

The undersigned begs leave to respectfully report that, under the provisions contained in your appointment, No. 361, dated Nov. 28, 1876, he has been engaged since the date mentioned and up to the present time, in making an examination of the affairs of the Security Life Insurance and Annuity Company, of the City of New-York. I regret the necessity which compels me to relate at length the causes of the company's insolvency, but the last sworn statement of its officials, as of Dec. 31, 1875, showing a surplus of $515,034, in comparison with the present deficiency of $2,053,824, makes it a plain duty to place on the records of the department a statement of the chicanery and fraud that characterize the previous exhibits of the company. Commencing with the first item in their report of assets in the last statement made by them, I find real estate returned at a cost value, over and above incumbrances, of $460,675. This amount covers two pieces of property in the City of New-York—one being the company's building, Nos. 31 and 33 Pine street; the other, 44 63-100 acres of land at Williams Bridge, and forming a part of the territory recently annexed to New-York County. The first mentioned piece was purchased in 1872, for $180,000, $50,000 being paid in cash, and the balance remaining as a mortgage. The second piece was acquired in 1868 by certain officials of the company out of their private funds, and given by them as a gratuity to their institution, in December, 1874, to enable it to make a showing of acceptable assets, on account of the alleged advance by them in the settlement of "agents' balances" and "commuted commissions" to the extent of $218,000. One hundred and ten thousand dollars of these unadmitted assets was closed out to this item of real estate, making the apparent total cost of the same $190,000, instead of $468,675, as sworn to by the officers. In relation to the last named property, I desire to state that the deed to the company, although properly executed, had never been placed on record in the clerk's office until after my examination had been commenced, and at my suggestion. Of the sum that was paid by these officials in their private capacity on the original purchase of the property, I find that a portion was obtained from the company on certain mortgages, and that said mortgages were released and discharged of record during my investigation without payment to the company of the principal sums. These facts I have made known to the Receiver, Hon. W. H. Wickham—now in possession—who will undoubtedly take proper action as to the legality of the transactions. Regarding the value of these two items of real estate given hereafter, I return the company's building at its cost value in 1875 of $80,000 over the $100,000 incumbrance, and the Williams Bridge property at $31,241, as reported by the department appraisers.

The next principal item is that designated as "stocks and bonds owned by the company," and reported in December, 1875, at $571,000, par value, and now ascertained to be $195,750. I find the discrepancy of $375,250 accounted for as follows: $80,000 of the bonds were sold, and the proceeds invested in mortgages; $156,000 were disposed of, or rather returned, to Francis T. Walker & Co., of New-York, from whom it is alleged they were bought—but, it bought, were never paid for; and the balance, $139,250, was converted into cash to pay the losses and expenses of the year over and above the income; the receipts being $705,603 43, and the disbursements $833,013 23. The bonds held by Walker & Co. (the senior member being a Director in the Security, and Chairman of the Finance Committee,) I find were never in the company's possession; but held by the firm mentioned as collateral for the unpaid purchase money—7 per cent. being charged for the loan, and the company credited with the interest that the securities produced, which was never more than 6 per cent., and, in the case of the District of Columbia bonds, but 3.65 per cent. The bonds "purchased" in this way were reported as being absolutely the property of the company; but no statement was made in the liabilities of the borowed money that contingently placed them as the sworn "assets" in the report of the President and Secretary. The next item, where my examination revealed a discrepancy between the statement as made to the department and the facts as I found them, was the return of "cash in bank and office, $205,708 68." At no time during 1875 did any such balance exist as an asset of the company, nor has it at any time since. By tabulating the receipts up to the 20th of January, 1876, the books were made to show a balance of $55,708 68; but, as a matter of fact, it is doubtful if at any time during the period mentioned there was one-tenth of that sum subject to the check of the officers. To the forced exhibit above described $150,000 was added to "give a good appearance to the statement," although the credit had no foundation in fact, and involved deliberate perjury on the part of the company's officials in swearing to it. As to the item of "uncollected and deferred premiums—$770,120"—I have no doubt that the sum was in excess of the proper amount by at least $200,000. It came to the consideration after ascertaining from the schedules giving these items in detail, and prepared during the examination, that at the present time $138,510 is all that is now outstanding, and that on Dec. 31, 1875, $150,000 would be a generous estimate of cancellation, considering the experience in the matter of cancellation, its annual returns showing a large number of revived policies. In the four items given above are described the fraudulent assets of the company, the exhibit of premium notes and loans being nearer correct than any other of the principal sums comprising the statements heretofore made.

Misstating the assets in a manner detailed necessitated a false statement of the income and expenditures, and accordingly a fictitious credit of premium receipts to the amount of $350,000 was made and sworn to falsely, to cover the incorrect returns of real estate and cash. In disbursements the interest paid on borrowed money was returned as "cash dividends paid policy-holders," to avoid answering the inquiries that a true exhibit would have rendered necessary, and a considerable portion of salaries and advertising expenses was also returned as paid for "surrendered policies," to prevent the criticism that a proper showing of expenses would have provoked. I find also that the mortality of the company was excessive, and to conceal the fact large amounts expended for death losses were carried annually into "expenses as "paid for forfeited policies." The preparation of the premium loan and note schedules and the data for valuations of policies, devolved upon Messrs. Ballard, Holmes, and Cross, whom you detailed to assist me in the examination. On accounting for the fraudulent condition of the Actuary's books, these gentlemen were obliged to check each policy from the agency registers, which required five weeks of careful and arduous labor.

Nine hundred and eighty-one policies, with a reserve of $543,809, were found unrecorded on the valuation books, which had been annually prepared by the Actuary of the company, R. L. Case, Jr., and affirmed by his affidavit to contain "all the policies in force, with the necessary data for the valuation of the same." During the year 1873 a scheme was set on foot by the officers to induce the parties holding policies from the earlier years of the company's existence—and attached to which were large reserves—to relinquish the same, and receive in exchange similar policies having new dates of issue. The latter were returned to the department without any statement of their being continuations of old contracts, several hundred thousand dollars of reserve being thus canceled each year since the date mentioned. This method of reducing the liabilities became so practicable in the minds of the officers, that each December they would cause to be written large numbers of these "substitute" policies, report them on Jan. 1 as actually in force, (marking off the old,) and send them out in the ensuing year to take their chances of acceptance or return. Premium note and loan policy-holders have been duped for several years by the form of receipt given when their premiums were paid as to the amount of their indebtedness upon said notes and loans. To explain: A holding a note policy with liens against it to the extent of $100, the interest being payable in advance, was notified to pay his cash premium with an additional amount of $4 20 for interest on notes. This latter sum would indicate, at 7 per cent. interest, $60 principal outstanding, and he concluded in consequence that $40 of the notes had been canceled by profits. It is now shown that a small dividend was declared on note and loan policies, and applied by the company in reduction of interest to deceive the policy-holders as to the amount of note indebtedness, and to make for the time being a conviction in their minds that what had been promised as to "dividends canceling notes" was being realized.

In conclusion, I report that on the day the Receiver was appointed—Dec. 14, 1876—there were outstanding 9,543 policies, covering $21,060,000 of insurance. Of these policies there were 4,751 on which the premiums were payable entirely in cash, and the remainder were on the half-note system. The actual condition of the company was as follows:

HEATING THE STREET CARS.

THE QUESTION BEFORE A COMMITTEE OF THE COMMON COUNCIL—VIEWS OF RAILROAD PRESIDENTS AND OTHERS.

The question of heating the City railroad cars was again under discussion yesterday before the Aldermanic Committee on Railroads, consisting of Messrs. Guntzer, Reilly, and Cowing, to whom the matter was referred in pursuance of Mr. Cole's resolution. The Presidents of some of the City railroad companies, and about a score of patentees, some of whom had plans for warming the cars, were present. Alderman Cole said he understood that objections had been made by some persons to the action of the committee in hearing those who had plans for heating the cars, but he thought it was their duty to do so in order to show the railroad companies that the proposition was practicable and that the object could be accomplished at a very small expense. He then read a letter from a gentleman residing in Brooklyn, describing a new way of warming the cars for which a patent had been granted.

Alderman Cowing said that in his opinion what the committee had to do was to inquire whether the project of warming the cars was practicable. He and his colleagues would like to hear the views of the representatives of the City railroad companies then present.

Mr. John W. Foshay, President of the Broadway and Seventh Avenue Railroad Company, responded by stating that the proposition was impracticable, and that it was calculated to "kill off" passengers. He had consulted with a large number of persons and they all said they would not ride on cars that were heated. Such a thing would be good for doctors. Persons get into the cars who are hot and muffled up, and they go out in the cold, and they might contract pneumonia and other diseases. He did not think that the Board of Health would sanction the proposition, and he thought they ought to be consulted. For his part, he did not think that any one would advocate the thing except an imbecile.

Alderman Cowing—I suppose your opposition to heating the cars is on the ground that it would be injurious to the public health.

Mr. Foshay replied in the affirmative, and then said that all whom he had spoken to were opposed to the proposition. When he first heard of it he supposed it was a conspiracy on the part of the electricians and owners of patents. [Laughter.]

Mr. T. R. Butler, the President of the Sixth Avenue Railroad Company, said he would like to hear some practicable plans for heating the cars. A great deal of trouble was caused by passengers—some of whom wanted to have the windows up and others down.

Dr. G. B. Hall next spoke. He said that heated cars would be decidedly dangerous to health. Large numbers of persons went into the cars with damp feet, to which snow and mud were attached, and if they were heated, it would bring up foul effluvia. Many passengers were not very particular about their boots. They could readily understand that foul vapors would come up in heated cars, with passengers constantly entering and leaving them, and how injurious such a thing would be to the public health. He would venture to say that doctors would like to have the cars heated. [Laughter.] The heat of the passengers and that of the apparatus, combined with the vapors constantly arising, would affect the health of the passengers.

At this point, a friend or agent of a patentee came forward, and explained his plan for heating the cars, and a discussion arose between him and Dr. Hall. In reply to the latter, he repeated several times that his plan of heating would not produce any vapor—a remark that led the Doctor to exclaim in apparent astonishment—"Well, that is the cheekiest thing I ever heard of."

Mr. Phillips, the President of the Third Avenue Railroad Company, suggested that the committee get the views on the Board of Health on the subject, as they were competent to pass upon it.

Several patentees claimed that their apparatus would not and could not injure the health of any passenger.

Mr. Anson Atwood, an old gentleman, said he had seen no improvements on the cars since he first traveled on them, and he believed they could be conveniently and easily warmed. He did not think, however, that the railroad companies would do it unless they were compelled to.

Dr. Hall thought the only question was whether heating the cars would be prejudicial to health. He had traveled in one of the cars recently. His seat was next to that of an old lady who had nothing on who wanted the windows down, while his back was almost freezing. [Laughter.] Passengers were constantly entering and leaving the cars, bringing in damp and snow with them. Some wanted the windows down, others up. If the cars were heated he would rather ride on the platform than inside.

Several patentees hoped their plans would be tried, and each asked Dr. Hall a number of questions, apparently designed to obtain an opinion from him that they were perfectly harmless, and would be conducive to the comfort of every traveler, but the Doctor steadily adhered to the views he had expressed to a friend of the writer, and declared that the Doctor could decide the matter without testing his apparatus, but the Doctor replied, "We can tell what the effect of a rope around a man's neck would be without hanging him."

Alderman Cole (the author of a resolution to heat the cars) said he was not a conspiracy with the doctors; he had introduced the measure in the interest of the public, which had suffered very much from travel in the cars this Winter. No man who knew him or the object he desired to accomplish would question his motives.

Dr. Hall said he had no such intentions when he made his remarks.

Alderman Cowing, speaking in behalf of the committee, said the proposition to heat the cars appeared to be practicable, and the only question to be considered was, whether heated cars would be prejudicial to health. The committee would consult the Health Board and other medical gentlemen on the subject.

The board then adjourned until Tuesday next.

EXCESSIVE TAXATION OF BANKS.

A meeting was held yesterday, at the Chamber of Commerce, of the committee appointed at the special meeting on Jan. 11. There were present Mr. George T. Hope, the Chairman, and Mr. James M. Constable, Mr. William B. Kendall, Mr. A. S. Barnes, Mr. James Hasiehurst, and Mr. Martin Bates. There was a general discussion of the subjects considered at the special meeting, and it was decided to correspond with members of the State Legislature in reference to the bill introduced by Mr. Elliot C. Cowdin, and with members of the United States Congress upon the bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. Benjamin A. Willis. The Secretary was requested to call in as soon as practicable the canvassers who are circulating the petitions to Congress and the Legislature, adopted at the special meeting, but not sooner than the City can be thoroughly canvassed. The committee adjourned to meet at the call of the Chairman. The petitions are receiving large numbers of signatures, the propositions made in them meeting with general favor among merchants and manufacturers. Correspondence has been opened with the Boards of Trade of Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, and other cities, requesting them to initiate similar movements to that begun in the New-York Chamber of Commerce.

IS IT A HOAX?

The following communication, which explains itself, was sent to the Brooklyn Board of Aldermen yesterday afternoon, and by that body referred to the Committee on Education, when appointed:

To the Right Honorable Board of Aldermen of Brooklyn:

GENTLEMEN: As I am about making arrangements for an early departure from this country, and am desirous of publicly expressing my appreciation of the hospitable manner in which I have everywhere been received, I would, were it agreeable to your right honorable body, be pleased to deliver, by reading before you, my poem on "Proverbial Philosophy," or my drama of "Washington," on any evening you may select. The expenses of light, &c., to be borne by you. Trusting my offer may meet with your cordial appreciation, I remain yours, &c.,

M. F. TUPPER.

Address care of Dr. Talmage.

Dr. Talmage, when questioned about the matter, said that Mr. Tupper was not in town, and that he thought the communication was a hoax.

THE RELEASE OF DR. PHELPS

HE TELLS NOTHING ABOUT THE DUEL.

JUDGE DONOHUE'S OPINION IN SUPREME COURT, CHAMBERS—THE PRISONER ENTITLED TO PROTECTION—HE IS REMANDED BACK TO GENERAL SESSIONS AND RELEASED ON HIS OWN RECOGNIZANCE.

Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, rendered a decision in the case of Dr. Charles Phelps, whose release was asked for on a writ of habeas corpus. It was announced early in the morning that the decision would be given in the afternoon. One o'clock was the hour appointed, and the court-room at the time was well filled. A. Oakey Hall and John A. Foley were there in behalf of the prisoner, and District Attorney Phelps appeared for the people. Judge Donohue's opinion was delivered verbally, and is as follows:

In this matter of Phelps, the prisoner was brought before me on habeas corpus, seeking his discharge on the ground that he was illegally detained by a commitment of the Court of General Sessions. The return of the officer in whose custody he is shows that he is held under a commitment of the Court of General Sessions for this witness' refusal to answer certain questions set out in the commitment. The witness' claim is that by virtue of the law he is protected from answering these questions; that without that immunity his answers might subject him to punishment in another State, and that the law therefore does not compel him to answer. The first point the District Attorney takes is, that I, sitting here, cannot go behind a commitment of the Court of General Sessions. Without going at length into that question, I will simply say that in the case of Hackley, in which the same point was raised, the court did go into the question whether the privilege could properly be claimed, and did discuss the matter at length, and though the Court remanded the prisoner, it was not on the ground that it could not go behind the commitment, but on the ground that he was not entitled to the privilege on the facts stated. And in the case of the people on the relation of Tweed against Liscomb, I understand the same principle was held; and I understand that in the matter of Lange, in 18 Wallace, the Supreme Court of the United States, on precisely the same point, adjudicated that the court, before whom the prisoner was brought, had the right to consider whether on the papers, a case was made out for inquiry into the process of the court. I shall, therefore, hold that I have a right to go behind the commitment to examine whether there was reason for the action of the Court of General Sessions.

The question arises whether the prisoner claimed a right and was protected by the privilege now set up. It is of no importance to the court sitting here what may be the effect of compelling or not compelling answers to these questions. It is simply the duty of the court, as was forcibly held by Judge Rascllo in the Court of Appeals, to ascertain what the law is, and administer it without regard to consequences. We have simply to administer the law. The respondent claims here that this prisoner is bound to answer because he is precluded from the use of his answer in any criminal proceeding against him. How far, if this were a new question, I would be disposed to go into it there is no need to say, because the law as to it has been thoroughly settled in the Hackley case. I am here bold that in case the witness is protected he is bound to answer, although the answer may enable the prosecution to obtain evidence to convict him on another charge. I don't think it necessary to go into that. The prisoner is not charged with, nor are the questions put to him, nor do I understand that it is in any way alleged that he is connected with, an offense committed within this State. The questions put to the witness and the whole course of the interrogation shows that it is in regard to something out of the State.

When this State undertook to punish dueling they not only had several offenses to deal with. First, offenses as to acts committed within this State; then as to acts committed out of this State. In the succession of the law under which this alleged immunity is given by the first section, the offense in regard to fighting a duel is declared punishable; by the second section, matters relative to carrying a challenge, all matters relating to doing certain things within this State. Then, in the third place, the act provides for a distinct and positive offense. It is provided that as to matters relating to the first and second sections, a witness answering when compelled to testify, shall not be liable to be used against him. Subsequently, when the statutes were rearranged, another offense was added by the fifth section, the only relation of which to the first and second sections is, that it provided the same penalty. It is not an amendment of the other sections, but takes up a different class of cases to which it affixes the same punishment. It seems to me clear that under that section there is no protection for this witness in answering the questions, and that he is entitled to protection under the law. There was a very good reason for the differences in regard to that section. Under the first and second sections the offenses were in this State, while under the fifth and sixth sections the offenses were in relation to acts out of the State, and it would be an empty power to give immunity or protect witnesses in answering in that class of cases, because such evidence could still be used against him in the other State, no matter what his immunity here, and this State could not protect him there.

The last point taken by the District Attorney was that when this witness was before the Grand Jury and the Court of General Sessions he failed to claim protection under this privilege. I think in that the District Attorney is correct. When called before the court to testify he is the party to judge whether his answers will criminate himself. It is in his mind what the evidence would be, and whether it will criminate him. It is for him and no other person to claim that immunity. It may have been really his intention in this case to have claimed it on that ground, but that was not made known to the court, nor was the court made to understand why he refused to answer. His reply was simply declining to answer the questions. I think, under these circumstances, on the return as it stands, the relator must be returned to the Court of General Sessions.

Immediately after Judge Donohue's decision had been rendered, Dr. Phelps, accompanied by Mr. John A. Foley and Deputy Sheriff McGonigle, went before Judge Gildersleeve, who was sitting in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. Mr. Foley, addressing his Honor, said that Judge Donohue had decided that the witness was privileged under the statute not to answer any questions if there should be any thing in the answer which might tend to commit himself, and that he had the legal right to avail himself of that privilege. Judge Donohue had also decided that the commitment of his Honor was proper, the witness not having taken advantage of his statutory right, he having merely declined to answer the questions put to him. As the witness had been committed by his Honor for contempt, and had now come there to go before the Grand Jury, who, however, were absent, counsel thought it only proper that he should be released and kept in custody of counsel for the defense, or discharged on his own recognizance, until he should appear before the Grand Jury at 11 o'clock this morning. Assistant District Attorney Rollins said that he had no doubt Dr. Phelps would be in attendance to go before the Grand Jury, and would, therefore, offer no opposition to the motion of counsel. Dr. Phelps having assured Judge Gildersleeve that he would be in attendance before the Grand Jury at 11 o'clock to-day, his Honor ordered him to be released on his own recognizance. Dr. Phelps bowed courteously to his Honor and the District Attorney, and withdrew with his friends, by whom he was cordially congratulated on his release from durance. Although the Grand Jury expected the attendance yesterday of some of the witnesses whom they had subpœnaed in connection with the Bennett-May duel, none put in an appearance, and the session was, therefore, devoid of interest in that respect. It is expected that some of the non-appearing witnesses will be recalled during the week.

GOSSIP REGARDING THE DUEL.

Several absurd reports relative to the Bennett-May affair were current yesterday. One rumor declared that Mr. Frederick W. May had died of a wound received in the recent duel. No authoritative denial of the story could be procured, either from members of Mr. May's family or of the Union Club; but it is certain that the report has no foundation in fact. THE TIMES of Friday last contained the true account of the duel. Mr. May is in a condition to "laugh at scars," for in the duel with Mr. Bennett he "never felt a wound."

THE MAIL ROBBERIES.

The examination into the mail robbery case was continued yesterday afternoon before Commissioner Shields. Counsel for Mary Ann Collins, charged with receiving the stolen mail matter, moved for the discharge of the prisoner on the ground that the evidence against her was insufficient to warrant her further detention. The motion was denied, however, and the prisoner was remanded to await the action of the Grand Jury. John De Frees, one of the defendants, testified that on the morning of Dec. 29 he was driving the mail wagon conveying the mail from the Cortlandt Street Ferry to the Post Office, and that when at the corner of Fulton and Church streets, Crawford, another defendant in the case, jumped on the wagon and took one of the mail bags, and then went up Church street with it in company with John Kelly. This closed the case for the Government against Kelly, and the defense will put in their evidence this afternoon.

THE STEAM-SHIP ANGLIA.

A lady passenger on board the steam-ship Anglia, of the Anchor Line, which left London on the 10th of December, writes to explain the cause of the delay in reaching this port. From the time of leaving the Channel, she says, they encountered strong head winds, together with furious gales and squalls during the whole voyage. On the 21st, after battling with the winds and waves for many hours, one of her cylinders exploded, scalding two of the engineers. In consequence of these drawbacks, it was nearly four days before the ship was able to resume her journey. Her progress, however, was very slow the head winds still continuing. On the 8th of January the Captain concluded to steam north for Halifax, where he could communicate with the company, and where the necessary repairs could be made to enable the ship to proceed with safety. This plan was adopted, and the lady says that every comfort was extended to the passengers by the Captain and his subalterns.

YESTERDAY'S SNOW-STORM.

DETENTION OF RAILWAY, FERRY, AND STREET TRAVEL—THE MAILS DELAYED—INTENSE COLD PREVAILING IN THE WEST.

The snow-fall of yesterday, while not as extensive as that of New Year's, has proved more or less of an obstruction to locomotion, especially on the railways leading into this City. In Jersey City yesterday morning the drifts were found to be very high along the lines of the various roads, and in many cases snow-plows were required to clear the track for passenger trains. Two Western trains on the Pennsylvania Railroad were delayed in the vicinity of Plainboro', and several trains on other railways also suffered considerable delays. The ferry-boats on the North River were greatly delayed by the outflow of ice, and were forced to make frequent détours to avoid the heavy ice-floes from the northward. At 9 A. M. the Plainfield, of the Communipaw Line, got stuck in the centre of a large floe, from which she was only extricated with much difficulty. The New-Jersey, of the Cortlandt Street Line, lost a portion of her copper sheathing in encounters with the ice, but beyond this, few of the boats suffered any appreciable damage. At one time yesterday morning the snow was so thick that the boats on both rivers were compelled to proceed very slowly in order to avoid collision.

The ice-gorge at the mouth of Newark Bay was broken open on Saturday, and steamers from Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Norfolk made their way through with little difficulty. The ice in the locality above mentioned is very thick—that on the Hackensack and Passaic Rivers being fully a foot, and in some places 15 inches in thickness. A large portion of this ice, in the event of a thaw, will be thrown against the long bridge of the New-Jersey Central, and fears have been expressed for its safety. As the structure was greatly strengthened last year, however, and the railroad people are confident of its security, no general apprehension need as yet be felt by the traveling public.

In the City the snow interfered greatly with the street-cleaning, which was recently begun on Broadway and other thoroughfares. Something has already been accomplished, however, and unless the Commissioners relax their efforts, there is every prospect that the whole of Broadway and the side streets leading to the ferries may be cleared during the week. Reports received at the Signal Office show that the storm covered an immense extent of country, ranging from Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory, on the west to the Atlantic, and from Canada to the border States. An extreme degree of cold has succeeded the snow-fall in the extreme North-west—the thermometer at Fort Garry indicating 36° below zero, and at Breckinridge, Minn., 22° below. A telegram from Pembina, Dakota, stated that the mercury at that point had fallen to the terrible temperature of 53° below zero, but this was generally considered to have been a blunder on the part of the operator. There is no doubt, however, that an unusual degree of cold prevails throughout the North-west, and may be soon looked for on the Atlantic coast.

At the Post Office the storm was an unwelcome visitor, the mails being delayed on several of the trunk lines for hours beyond their usual time of delivery. The Erie mail from the City at 7:25 Sunday morning, was detained on the Buffalo division and did not arrive until midnight on Sunday. This, however, was not due to the snow but to a wrecked coal train at Castle Station. At 2:30 P. M. yesterday, the clerk on the Erie postal train due here at 8 P. M. got the same day telegraphed that the train was detained by snow and would not arrive until a late hour. One train due on the New-York Central yesterday morning was so delayed by the storm that it did not reach the Grand Central Depot until 7 o'clock last evening.

SLIPPERY STREETS LAST NIGHT.

A drizzling rain set in early last evening, accompanied by a slight frost, which soon reduced the rugged surface of the snow-covered streets and sidewalks to a slippery plane, and made pedestrianism almost an impossibility. The sidewalks were almost impassable; they were one sheet of ice, and belated wayfarers were compelled in self-defense to take the middle of the streets and walk on the sharp crust of the congealed snow, in preference to running the risk of falling. Several accidents occurred, but none of them of a very serious nature. At every block some hapless pedestrian could be seen sprawling on the sidewalk, working his way home by a succession of falls. A policeman found a man lying at Church and Chambers streets, and attempted to lift him to his feet, when he begged to be left where he was, as it was better to accept the inevitable than to have his bones broken at every attempt to rise. The ladies seemed to suffer to even a greater extent than the men. Those who were unfortunate enough to be out without a masculine escort had a hard time of it.

THE EAST RIVER BRIDGE.

DECISION OF THE TRUSTEES IN FAVOR OF THE USE OF CRUCIBLE CAST-STEEL CABLES—AWARD OF THE CONTRACT TO MR. J. LLOYD HAIGH.

A special meeting of the New-York and Brooklyn Bridge Trustees was held yesterday afternoon. Hon. H. C. Murphy presided, and the following members of the board were present: J. S. T. Stranahan, Thomas Kinsella, Thomas Carroll, William Marshall, Gen. Slocum, W. B. Leonard, John Reilly, C. J. Canda, J. M. McLean, Lloyd Aspinwall, M. Motley, Mayors Schroeder and Ely, and Controllers Kelly and Barrell. The President stated that the board had been convened at the request of the Executive Committee to consider the report of that body on the resolution submitted to it at the last meeting instructing it to invite new bids from manufacturers of Bessemer steel, and report the result to the board. He then read the report as follows:

The Executive Committee beg leave to report that, in consequence of the strong vote of the board on the question of awarding the contract for the wire for the large cables to the lowest bidder for crucible cast steel for that purpose, after the reference to the committee to receive further proposals for Bessemer, they have not deemed it advisable to advertise for such proposals without further communication with the board. They regard that vote, although wanting one of a majority, still as decisive against the use of Bessemer steel, for in so important a matter as the main cables it would, in their opinion, be unwise to adopt a material which is distrusted by any considerable portion of the Trustees. The question of cost is an important one, but is subordinate to that of safety, and the difference of expense between the two is comparatively too small to permit such difference to prevent unanimity and entire confidence. They therefore offer a substitute for the resolution heretofore submitted by them, and recommend that the contract be awarded to the lowest bidder for crucible cast-steel wire, upon the condition therein stated, and that the resolution adopted at the last meeting, instructing this committee to receive further proposals for Bessemer steel, be rescinded, as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution adopted at the last meeting of the board instructing the Executive Committee to receive proposals from manufacturers who may choose to bid for Bessemer steel, be and the same is hereby rescinded.

Resolved, That the contract for the steel wire for the large cables, as provided in the specifications issued for that purpose, be awarded to J. Lloyd Haigh, at eight and seven-tenth cents (gold) per pound, he being the lowest bidder for crucible cast-steel wire, provided he furnish that kind of wire as stipulated in his communication to this board, dated Jan. 9, 1877.

After reading the communication referred to, and also the bond of Mr. Haigh, guaranteeing to fulfill the contract, the President called the vote upon the resolutions offered by the Executive Committee in succession. The first, rescinding the former resolution recommending the award of the contract to Messrs. Roebling, Sons & Co., was adopted unanimously, the second resolution being also adopted by a vote of 16 to 1, as follows:

Yeas—Trustees Murphy, Stranahan, Kinsella, Carroll, Slocum, Burrell, Leonard, Reilly, Ely, Kelly, Canda, McLean, Schroeder, Aspinwall, Van Schaick, and Motley.

Nay—Trustee William Marshall.

Mr. Haigh, the successful bidder, has an office in this City and a factory in Brooklyn.

After the adoption of the resolutions and the declaration of the award, the board adjourned.

REV. SAMUEL HARP.

Rev. Samuel Earp, of St. Mark's Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., has formally accepted the call of St. Andrew's Church, Harlem, and will enter upon the duties of his new Rectorship on the first Sunday after Easter. Mr. Earp is a native of Pennsylvania. He was graduated at St. James College, Maryland, when it was under the Presidency of Right Rev. John B. Kerfoot, Bishop of the Diocese of Pittsburg. After graduating he taught for a time in the college at Burlington, N. J. He entered the General Theological Seminary in this City in 1863, as a member of the Junior Class, and as a candidate for holy orders from the Diocese of Pennsylvania. As a student he was exemplary in his conduct and ranked much above the average. His first charge was in the Diocese of Pittsburg, and he conducted it with so much ability that he attracted the notice of one of the most important churches in Michigan, namely, the St. Mark's Church, at Grand Rapids. In Grand Rapids he was quite as successful as in Pittsburg. He took a high stand among the clergymen of Michigan, so that when the Diocese of Western Michigan was set off in 1874, he was a prominent candidate for the Bishopric, receiving the second highest number of votes. Mr. Earp is about 35 years old, a little above the medium height, of excellent presence and attractive manner. He has been assiduous and faithful in the conduct of the churches over which he has already presided, and will no doubt bring with him to St. Andrew's the exercise of those same qualities which have won for him his excellent reputation.

USE OF MONEY IN THE CAMPAIGN.

THE NEPHEW OF HIS UNCLE UNDER EXAMINATION—THE TESTIMONY OF THE SECRETARY OF THE DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE—EIGHT THOUSAND DOLLARS SENT TO OREGON—EX-GOV. M'CORMICK'S TESTIMONY BEFORE THE HOUSE COMMITTEE—SECRETARY CHANDLER'S PRIVATE DISPATCHES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—Senator Morton's sub-committee to investigate certain questions in regard to the Electoral votes of a number of States met this morning and examined Mr. William T. Pelton, Secretary of the Democratic National Committee, and nephew of Gov. Tilden. As a witness the nephew of his uncle was principly noticeable for not knowing, or pretending not to know, anything about the manner in which the Democratic campaign was conducted, or the purposes for which money was collected or disbursed by the Democratic Committee. He knew nothing, he said, about the bank accounts of the committee of which he was the Secretary, and had no knowledge of any considerable sum of money having been sent by the Democrats to the Southern States. He did know, however, that $8,000 had been sent to Oregon in the early part of December. He testfied further that he knew Burton Harrison, and that he had told Jordan, Cashier of the Third National Bank in New-York, that it would be well to send the sum named to Oregon. Mr. Pelton will be examined again to-morrow.

Secretary Chandler will appear before the Committee on the Privileges of the House to-morrow, and answer all questions that may be asked, unless they involve the disclosure of Cabinet consultations or official communications with the President as a Cabinet officer. He will not attempt to conceal anything pertaining to the use of money in the campaign which was within his knowledge. Mr. McCormick was before the committee to-day, and answered all the questions of the committee. He did not happen to know much about the amount of money contributed by office-holders, and the committee will have to call the Treasurer of the Congressional committee, who received and disbursed that money. It will probably appear from the testimony that the contributions of Federal officers just about paid for the distribution of documents, and that the amount was much smaller than that expended by the Liberty Street Bureau, the expenses of which Mr. Tilden is privately acknowledged to have personally assumed. The dispatches of the National Committee, relative to preserving the results in Florida and other States, were produced.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—Ex-Gov. McCormick again appeared before the Select Committee on the the Powers, Privileges, and Duties of the House in Counting the Electoral Vote. The Governor wished to contradict the truth of a telegram to a New-York paper; it was therein stated that the question was yesterday put to him whether the National Republican Committee raised money for the purpose of purchasing votes, to which he replied that he would have first to consult with members of that committee before answering that question. The Governor said no such question was put, and if it had been it would have been promptly answered in the negative.

The Chairman propounded the question: Do you know of any money paid on behalf of the National Republican Committee in influencing votes? A.—I have some knowledge of money having been raised for the legitimate purposes of the campaign.

Q.—Was any assessment made on office-holders to obtain money for the purpose of being used in the election? A.—There was an assessment on a certain class of office-holders; I cannot name them, but can show the committee the law, which I have been told was strictly complied with. This law provided that all officers appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, were exempt from the operation of the prohibition against assessments on office-holders for political purposes. The witness said there was a joint circular sent forth by the officers of both the National Republican and the Congressional Republican Committees, but the details of assessment were managed by the latter committee; he did not know whether the money was raised by a percentage on salaries or not, nor did he know how much money was raised; not a dollar came into the hands of the National Republican Committee; he did not know of any circular having been issued requiring office-holders to contribute money.

M. A. Clancey, late stenographer of the National Republican Committee, was recalled, he having testified on Saturday. He, in reply to questions, referred to his short-hand notes, and read from them the original drafts of telegrams sent to Florida, as follows:

NEW-YORK, Nov. 8, 1876.

Gov. Stearns, Tallahassee, Florida:

Grave importance attaches to the Electoral vote of your State, and we invite your most careful supervision of all the official receiving, counting, returning, and canvassing the votes of every locality. This dispatch was signed by either Z. Chandler or W. E. Chandler.

NEW-YORK, Nov. 8, 1876.

To Gen. Martin, Tallahassee:

We are absolutely certain of 185 votes for Hayes if your State is safe—and Tilden is sure of the rest. Can you certainly defeat all Democratic attempts by fraud, intimidation, counting, or bribery, to capture it? Answer when sure. Z. CHANDLER.

A copy of the above dispatch was sent to S. B. Packard, Gov. D. H. Chamberlain, Columbia, S. C.; Senator John H. Mitchell, Portland, Oregon; and George C. Gorham, San Francisco.

To Gen. Martin:

If your State has gone for Hayes the Democrats will leave nothing undone to take it from us; all may depend on your vigilance. Be on guard everywhere. You must watch, and get in and announce the true returns from every locality without delay. Spare no pains or expense to carry these points; keep me advised, and telegraph me your exact majority as soon as possible.

This was signed either by Z. Chandler or W. E. Chandler, having been dictated by the latter.

On the 8th of November the following dispatch was addressed to both Senator Conover, and Representative Furman:

"See my dispatch to Martin; use the utmost diligence and vigilance."

The following dispatch was sent to Thomas B. Keogh, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, of North Carolina, signed "C." and dictated by William E. Chandler:

NEW-YORK, Nov. 8, 1876.

Two friends of yours leave here at 3 o'clock this afternoon; meet them at the depot at Raleigh.

Another telegram was sent to the same party, as follows:

Don't give up your State until the remotest returns come in. Hayes is elected by one majority if we have carried Florida, Oregon, and Louisiana. Meet your friends at the depot. C.

On the same day, the 8th of November, a letter was written by William E. Chandler to Thomas B. Keogh, Raleigh, N. C., as follows:

"At this hour of writing, it looks as if 185 votes have been given to Hayes, counting Louisiana, Florida, and Oregon, but not North Carolina; and we trust the latter will turn out, when the returns are all in, to have gone for Hayes. If, however, it has not, and the State is close, and there has been intimidation or fraud on the part of the Democrats, we trust that your Republican Governor will not give any certificate to the Electors. The Governor of either Oregon is a Democrat, while North Carolina is the only close State necessary to the Democrats where we have a Republican Governor. They must not be allowed fairer play in North Carolina than we get in Oregon. This is important and confidential.

W. E. CHANDLER.

The following telegram was addressed to George C. Gorham, San Francisco, Nov. 8:

"If Oregon is Republican, use the utmost diligence to watch and get in, and have announced the vote from every locality. The Democrats will press Grover, hence the importance of no delay in establishing the result. You had better go to Oregon."

This dispatch was dictated by W. E. Chandler, and probably signed by him, though it may have been signed by Z. Chandler.

The following telegram was sent to Gorham on the same day:

"Democrats are getting desperate. They will stop at nothing to wrest victory from us. It is important that you go at once to Oregon."

The following telegram was addressed to ex-Attorney General Williams:

"Oregon is reported Republican, and will elect Hayes. Telegraph several citizens of integrity in Oregon to watch and get in and have announced the vote from every locality. We have telegraphed Mitchell. The Democrats will press Grover, hence the importance of no delay in establishing the result."

The witness could not say whether this telegram was signed by William E. or Z. Chandler; the witness was at Tallahassee on the 12th of November, and addressed to Z. Chandler the following telegram:

Gov. Stearns and Congressman Purman telegraph from a point in Georgia that the operator at Tallahassee, Fla., maliciously withholds and discloses all dispatches from them, and ask his removal. I sent a special message to Orton, who acted promptly. Will you advise Stearns? M. A. CLANCEY.

From an inspection of copies of all the telegrams, it appears that the only one signed by Z. Chandler, was that to Gen. Martin, given together with duplicates of the same to Packard, Chamberlain, Gorham, and Mitchell. All the others were signed by William E. Chandler. Mr. Clancey stated that the telegrams and the letter which he read from his stenographic notes, were the only ones in his book sent by the committee to any person after the election.

The committee then adjourned till to-morrow morning.

The Senate Committee on Privileges and Election continued the investigation in the Oregon Electoral case to-day. Col. W. S. Pelton, Secretary of the Democratic National Committee, testified that he knowns William L. Scott; he does not know Martin & Runyon, of Wall street; was never in their office; was at the Everett House, New-York, almost every evening in December last; the head-quarters of the National Democratic Committee were at the Everett House; witness does not know Enos Runyon, and never had any conversation with him; knows Burton Harrison, a New-York lawyer; was in Harrison's office on the 6th of last December and talked with him in regard to a certain matter which has been brought out by this investigation; witness suggested to Mr. Jordan, Cashier of the Third National Bank of New-York, that he call on Harrison; witness did not procure Mr. Jordan to transfer any money from New-York to Oregon; he did tell Mr. Jordan that it was desired that certain gentlemen in Oregon should have credit for $8,000; he does not know exactly why he fixed upon this particular sum; it seemed that litigation would arise from the ineligibility of Watts, in Oregon, and it was proper that the gentlemen in Oregon should be sustained in their actions before the courts, Mr. Billinger, Chairman of the Oregon Democratic Committee, suggested the necessity of having money to defray these legal expenses; witness met W. L. Scott, (a member of the Democratic National Committee,) on the evening of Dec. 5, when witness spoke to him about the $8,000; nothing was said about security; never knew of money being sent to Oregon previous to Dec. 6 last, and witness knows of no effort having been made to send money to that State since the 6th of December last; Mr. Patrick went to Oregon in November or in December last; Mr. Patrick had large mining interests in Salt Lake, and went West to look after them; Mr. Patrick talked with Dr. Miller, a member of the Democratic National Committee, in reference to going to Oregon. Witness does not know that any money was ever sent to, or paid, Mr. Patrick; he does not know that Dimon paid Cronin $2,000 and Patrick $1,039. Witness supposes that Jordan understood that he (witness) did not want the $8,000 transaction made public; Mr. Scott paid out some money during the campaign, and so did witness; has his account at the Hanover Bank; does not know of any money being sent to South Carolina since Nov. 7, except a little draft of $100 to defray the traveling expenses of a man named Connolly; don't know of money being sent to Louisiana since Nov. 7, except a draft of $100 or $200 to a man down there; does not know of any money being sent to Florida, except small amounts to defray the expenses of persons visiting the State at the request of the Democratic Committee; not a dollar was sent to any State except for strictly legitimate purposes; the Democratic National Committee defrayed the expenses of a part of the gentlemen who visited some of the Southern States after the election. In answer to Mr. Mitchell, witness testified that he did not know that $8,000 was actually used in Oregon on a check drawn payable to Charles Dimon, in favor of Ladd & Bush; does not remember receiving an unsigned dispatch from Oregon in December last, saying that it was necessary that $8,000 be sent to that State; does not know that any money was deposited in a bank in San Francisco for use in Oregon; the Democratic Committee had correspondence with ex-Senator Casserly, who was requested to go to Oregon, but he could not go and sent a brief; does not know of any money paid W. C. Griswold; does not remember a man of that name. Before the examination of Col. Pelton was concluded, Senator Morton stated that he [Mr. Morton] was obliged to leave, and he desired Col. Pelton to be present to-morrow, when he will be examined further.

THE POWERS OF THE HOUSE.

THE LOUISIANA RETURNING BOARD TO BE ARRESTED—THEY ARE CHARGED WITH CONTEMPT BY DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSMEN—THE RESOLUTION OPPOSED BY GEN. GARFIELD AND OTHERS—THE LIMITATIONS OF THE HOUSE POINTED OUT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—The House Committee on the Judiciary to-day reported resolutions directing the arrest of the members of the Louisiana Returning Board, and their arraignment before the bar of the House, to answer for contempt in refusing to produce before Mr. Morrison's committee the original papers and returns on which they canvassed and declared the result of the Presidential vote in Louisiana. A two hours debate followed, the time being equally divided between both sides. Messrs. Frye, Kasson, Garfield, and Lawrence, Republicans, spoke against, and Messrs. Cox, Hooker, and Wood, Democrats, in favor of the resolutions. The Republicans argued that if the doctrine advocated by the report of the Committee prevailed, no papers or archives would be free from the demands of the House, and any State officer might be dragged before its bar to answer for contempt. The committee deny the sufficiency of certified copies, and demand that original papers, which are a part of the public records of a State, shall be produced. The Returning Board was legally constituted according to the laws of the State, all their proceedings and conclusions were in accordance with law, and no tribunal has any legal right to go behind those proceedings to review or revise them. To admit the right of Congress to bring the archives and officers of a sovereign State before either house would be giving one branch of Congress the power to extinguish a State by inanition.

Mr. Garfield quoted the sections of the Federal Constitution giving the States the right to appoint the Presidential Electors. The Constitution also prescribes the time when Electors shall meet, the qualifications of Electors, and the manner in which the vote shall be canvassed and declared. He argued from this that Congress may, under five limitations, inquire into the Electoral vote of a State. These limitations are:

First—The vote must be cast by a State. Congress alone has power to inquire whether a State is legally organized under the Constitution.

Second—No State can have more Electors than it has Senators and Representatives.

Third—Certain qualifications are prescribed, and Congress may inquire into these.

Fourth—Congress has power to fix the day on which the Electoral vote shall be cast.

Fifth—Congress may inquire whether the Electoral vote was cast upon the day fixed for that purpose.

Beyond these limitations the House has no more right to inquire than they would have to inquire into the conduct of an election in England. He quoted from various authorities to show that such power over a Presidential election as is now claimed was never contemplated by the founders of the Government. The fixing of a time when the Electoral vote shall be cast by the Electors so soon after the election indicates that no such investigation by Congress was contemplated, because there would be no time for making such an examination. It is plain there is no time provided for making a contest, and if there was time there is no authority.

The Democrats argued that it was proper to inquire as to the legality of the actions of the Returning Board in canvassing and declaring the vote. Upon the action of this board depended an issue in which all sections were deeply interested, and in a matter determining the Presidency it was proper to ascertain whether the board had discharged its duties so as to make known the declared wish of the people of the State.

During the debate, the general character of the Louisiana Returning Boards was incidentally discussed. Mr. Frye stated he was convinced that there was no fraud on the part of the Returning Boards of Florida, South Carolina, and Louisiana, and unless the votes of those States were stolen they would be counted for Hayes. Mr. Luttrell replied it was not becoming for a party to talk of theft which had robbed poor employes in the departments in order to raise means to carry on a political campaign. This remark was applauded from the Democratic side with great vehemence, one man in the rear of the Democratic seats uttering a yell with the same emphasis he would have done at a Sixth Ward mass-meeting. As usual, the responsibility for this disgraceful interruption was charged upon the galleries, and their accupants notified that if that Democratic yell was again uttered from the floor they would be turned out.

The previous question was ordered upon the resolutions, and after an hour's debate to-morrow a vote will be taken. Of course, the resolution will be passed. Gen. Garfield's speech was a model of condensation of material, and clear and powerful statement, and is regarded as one of the ablest speeches of late years in the House.

COUNTING OF THE ELECTORAL VOTE

NO AGREEMENT, AND SLIGHT PROSPECT OF IT, BY THE COMMITTEES OF CONGRESS—THE DUTY OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE TO COUNT THE VOTE CONCURRED IN BY INCREASING NUMBERS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—The committee of the two houses on counting the Electoral votes were in session several hours again to-day, but reached no agreement nor result. They are to meet to-morrow and will again try to end their labors during the day. There still remains in the scheme the element of chance, and the more it is considered the less it is liked. The impression is common that there will be no agreement in the Joint Committee and that each committee will report to its own house. The almost universal belief is that all efforts to make any arrangement in advance of the time for making the count will be fruitless, and that at last the President of the Senate must himself count and announce the vote. The opinion is gaining converts rapidly that he has the right under the Constitution, in the absence of legislation, to perform that function, and not only this, but that it is his imperative duty to make the count. There are believed to be many Democrats who hold to this view, and who admit that there must be legislative provisions to the contrary to permit of a question being raised as to the legality and constitutionality of the exercise of this duty by the President of the Senate. When the discussion has proceeded far enough to define the position of politicians, lawyers, and jurists, the country will find that the array of names in support of the constitutionality of a count of the Electoral vote by the President of the Senate will be too great to resist.

CONGRESSIONAL TOPICS.

THE FATE OF THE SILVER BILL SEALED IN THE SENATE—THE INTEREST ON THE DISTRICT BONDS—PASSAGE OF THE BILL IN THE SENATE—SENATOR FERRY AND THE PRESIDENTIAL CONTROVERSY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—The silver bill has undoubtedly met its final defeat for this Winter. The committee of the Senate on finance met to-day and promptly decided to report the Bland bill without recommendation. It goes upon the calendar of the Senate, but has no committee to insist upon action. The reason assigned for this action is that the report of the Silver Commission has been postponed a month by consent of the Senate; but the real reason is that the political situation absorbs so much attention that there cannot be obtained any consideration of the Silver bill, even in committee. The time has passed when it was possible for the most ardent friends of the measure to press it before the Senate, even so far as to secure a debate on it. Perhaps they will not even try. Senator Sherman comes out as a silver man by offering a bill making silver dollars a full legal tender, to be issued by the Treasury in exchange for greenbacks.

A bill was reported in the House to-day, from the Committee on Ways and Means, providing permanently for the payment of the interest on the bonds of the District of Columbia. It is settled that the General Government is bound to insure the payment of that interest, but it has been done for each occasion by itself, heretofore, and there always has arisen a condition favorable to speculation in the bonds. The District Commissioners desire to have these bonds placed upon such a footing as to be absorbed for investments, and the Senate adopted the same policy by twice passing a bill making permanent provision for meeting the interest promptly. Holman and Randall have hitherto prevented this in the House, and doubtless will try to defeat it again.

The reports concerning the prospect of the resignation of Senator Ferry as President of the Senate are wholly unfounded, so far as they refer to a resignation prior to the counting of the Electoral vote. He has no intention of resigning, and there is no feeling in the Senate in favor of his resignation. If there should be a contingency, as the end of the session draws near, which would require a presiding officer who would hold over and prevent an interregnum of the office, he would undoubtedly aid in the necessary change of officers. As for ability, courage, and honesty in meeting any duties that the session may bring upon a presiding officer, no one doubts that they are qualities possessed by Mr. Ferry in an eminent degree.

THE RUSSIAN FLEET.

NORFOLK, Jan. 16.—The Grand Duke Alexis remains very quietly on board his ship. To-day he and the Grand Duke Constantine came ashore and walked up Main street, but no one knew who they were until the distinguished visitors had left the city. No festivities have been indulged in, and no demonstrations were made looking to a celebration of the 27th birthday of the Grand Duke Alexis. Nothing is known of his intended future movements. It is generally understood the Russian fleet will spend the remainder of the Winter here, but it is extremely improbable that Alexis will stay on board ship until the opening of Spring. It is said that he contemplates a hunting expedition after wild fowl on the coast of Virginia and North Carolina. Baron Shiskin, the Russian Minister, left here this morning by rail for Washington.

THE NAVAL STEAMER ENTERPRISE.

PORTSMOUTH, Jan. 16.—Orders have been received at the Navy-yard here to fit for sea immediately the steamer Enterprise, and work will commence on her to-morrow.

MAKING NEW SENATORS.

THE CONTEST IN NEW-JERSEY.

MANŒUVRES OF THE RIVAL DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATES—THE CAUCUS TO BE HELD TO-NIGHT—SLY GOV. BEDLE—THE REPUBLICAN NOMINATION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TRENTON, Jan. 16.—The Democratic caucus of the House members this afternoon appointed a committee consisting of Messrs. Harris, Rue, and Bergen to confer with a similar committee consisting of Senators Bergen, Ridgway, and Pidcock, for the purpose of settling a day for the holding of a joint Senatorial canvas. The committee met, and the friends of Judge Green demanded that the caucus be held next Monday evening. On behalf of Mr. McPherson, who desires that the vote be taken before his strength shall have been withdrawn by the manipulations of the State-house Ring, it was asked that the caucus be held to-morrow evening. A majority of the committee voted to call the caucus for to-morrow evening, and the first victory of the struggle was consequently won by Mr. McPherson. Differences of opinion seem to exist as to whether the action of the committee is final or not. Major Harris, Chairman of the House Committee, claims that it is. Green's friends assert, on the other hand, that the committees are to report to their respective caucuses, whose indorsement of their action is required. These gentlemen finally carried their point, and the Democracy will hold a caucus to-morrow morning to receive the committee's report. McPherson is as confident this evening as he was last evening. His adherents claim 25 votes for him, but when they are asked where the votes are located they beg to be excused from stating. "The other side," they say, with a knowing wink, "would give thousands of dollars to see our check list." Hudson County, it is said, is for McPherson, provided Leon Abbett is not in the field—a matter in regard to which there seems to be considerable doubt. The rest of McPherson's strength lies mainly in the northern section of the State, though he has, it is said, a vote here and there from other sections. Green's friends claim that McPherson has not more than 15 sure votes in caucus; that Green has as many, and that the necessions to his strength from the friends of Parker, Vanatta, and others, will give him the 21 votes he needs for a nomination. Should neither McPherson nor Green secure the prize, the candidates most prominently talked of are Leon Abbett, President of the Senate; Chancellor Williamson, and Vanatta. It has been an open secret for some time that the President of the Senate is ambitious of the promotion, and it is said to-night on good authority that his combinations have been so arranged that he will reap the reward of McPherson's labor, and Green's as well, and that the ripened fruit will drop into his hands. He is certainly the most capable candidate so far named in connection with the nomination, and if he chooses to hold the Hudson delegation from McPherson's support, he can certainly do it.

Gov. Bedle's candidacy is still phenomenal in its development. In conversation with THE TIMES correspondent this evening he referred with an evident chuckle of satisfaction to the rumors which had coupled his name with the place, and declared that he does not seek the position. He would doubtless accept a nomination if it was offered to him, which will not be done, of course, without active co-operation on his part. Attorney General Vanatta said to-night that notwithstanding the proscriptive clause of the State Constitution, the Governor is undoubtedly eligible. His line of reasoning is that the qualifications of the Senators are fixed by the United States Constitution, and that no State law can make other restrictions. Then it is said by others if Gov. Bedle becomes a candidate he must ask the Legislature to break one of the laws they have sworn to obey to elect him.

The ardor of the Republican campaign has been much dampened by the defection of last week, which lost them the control of the House. Senator Sewell, who might have been a candidate if there were any chance of success, said to-night that he had no doubt a Democrat would get the nomination. The impression that Mr. Frelinghuysen will be accorded the compliment of the Republican caucus nomination is gaining ground. The Republican caucus will not be held till next week.

THE MASSACHUSETTS SITUATION.

RESULT OF THE FIRST DAY'S BALLOTING—THE HOAR MEN ELATED—TWO BALLOTS TAKEN—LAST EVENING'S CAUCUSES—BULLOCK AND RICE AS COMPROMISE CANDIDATES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 16.—The result of the first day's balloting for United States Senator is to discourage the Boutwell men and to elate the Hoar men. Two ballots were taken in each branch, and Boutwell in both ballots fell short of 100 votes, some of the "pledged" men neglecting to keep their words and Hoar polled a steady vote, larger than had been claimed for him in any of the estimates made public. The vote of the Senate was quite unexpected, but that in the House was a general surprise. In a Boutwell caucus at noon, before the balloting, the Canvassing Committee reported that they were sure of over 100 votes for their candidate, and were confident that after the first ballot it would be found that several Boutwell votes were given to Hoar for that ballot alone out of compliment. This prediction did not prove correct, and hence the consternation and a secret consultation immediately following adjournment. The result of the balloting of the day is shown in the following table:

	Senate—		House.—
	First Ballot.	second Ballot.	First Ballot.	second Ballot.
Boutwell	17	17	78	79
Hoar	12	12	76	77
Abbott	7	7	55	55
Rice	4	4	15	15
Bullock	0	0	4	4
Seelye	0	0	4	4

The second ballot in the House was called on motion of one of the prominent Hoar leaders. A large crowd of people witnessed the balloting, and those who could not squeeze into the galleries contented themselves with crowding the lobbies and corridors, and taking the report second-hand. A caucus of Hoar men was held at their head-quarters immediately after adjournment. Speeches were made by several of the leaders, including Speaker Long, and it was confidently asserted that several of those members who voted for Boutwell were disposed to throw their votes for Hoar if convinced that their candidate could not be elected. It was decided that the members who voted for Rice, Seelye, and Bullock, should be personally seen and labored with, and it was voted to stick to Hoar. The Democrats also held an open caucus, and discussed whether they should stick to Abbott longer or move in a body at once for Bullock. It was after a long discussion voted to stick to Abbott one more day, and to transfer their vote in a lump when the time should come and the order be given. An attempt was made to discipline one member who did not vote for Abbott, but it was decided that, in view of his youth as a member of the party, and the fact that he did not vote for Boutwell, he might be let alone. The cry of the Democrats to-night is, "Anything to beat Boutwell," and the cry of the Boutwell men is, "Anything to beat Hoar."

The order has been given out to the Boutwell men to stick to-morrow, but the leaders are not so sure of their ability to hold them as they were. Several avowed Boutwell men attended the Hoar caucus, and it is asserted to-night that a goodly number of converts have been booked. The most conservative of the Hoar men claim, on to-morrow's first ballot in joint convention, 108 votes, while others assert that the gain will be more decided than that. Collector Simmons is credited with the remark that a new candidate may appear after the first ballot to-morrow, and that his name is B. F. Butler. Gov. Rice's strength as a compromise candidate remains unchanged, except that a number of Hoar men declare that they will not give him their support, but transfer their votes, in the event of the impossibility of the election of their first choice, to ex-Gov. Bullock. The situation to-night then is; Hoar decidedly ahead, Boutwell about to be deserted, and Bullock and Rice leading as compromise candidates.

THE CONTEST IN ILLINOIS.

AN INFORMAL BALLOT IN BOTH HOUSES OF THE STATE LEGISLATURE—NO CHOICE MADE—THE INDEPENDENTS HOLDING THE BALANCE OF POWER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 16.—The ballot taken to-day showed that Gen. Logan lacked six of the 103 votes necessary to elect. There was one absentee who will be present to-morrow, giving him 98 votes. One Republican scattered, but, if necessary to elect Logan, he will vote for him. Logan will get three independents, and then he will be two short. If his force can be kept solid he will get the two, but he must get them early in the fight or his men won't stick, and once they begin to break, he is gone.

A caucus of Democrats was held on the floor of the House of Representatives at Washington yesterday, the result of which was that Hewitt telegraphed orders to unload Palmer and take somebody on whom the opposition can unite to defeat Logan. Palmer was short 14 votes. The Democrats are trying to agree on a new candidate, but they will probably vote for Palmer to-morrow, and unless Logan should happen to be elected, which is not probable, they will try to adjourn and settle on a new candidate. Logan is now ahead, the chances being in his favor. The opposition is disunited and demoralized, but they may unite on Davis, who got 7 votes. Logan got 97; Palmer, 89; Anderson, 7; Washburn, 1; Lathrop, 1; absent, 1; not voting, 1. Davis is the favorite against Logan to-night, though some Democrats say they will never vote for him. There is a possibility that the opposition may unite on Anderson, and there may be a new man, not yet mentioned.

MICHIGAN.

HON. THOMAS W. FERRY RE-ELECTED ON THE FIRST BALLOT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

DETROIT, Jan. 16.—The Senatorial election in this State took place at noon to-day, as required by the United States statute. In the Senate, Thomas W. Ferry received 23 votes to 9 for Charles S. May, a party division. In the House, roll-call footed up 71 for Ferry and 23 for May, also a party division, with six absent. To-morrow a joint convention will be held, and the result formally declared.

NEW-HAMPSHIRE POLITICS.

A REPUBLICAN CONGRESSIONAL CONVENTION TO BE HELD TO-DAY—SEVERAL CANDIDATES IN THE FIELD—THE DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION ALSO TO BE HELD TO-DAY—MR. MARCY'S CHANCES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CONCORD, N. H., Jan. 16.—The Republican Congressional Convention for District No. 2 of New-Hampshire will be held in this city to-morrow forenoon. The prospects of the different candidates is the absorbing topic of interest this evening. The gentlemen whose names are the most prominently mentioned in this connection are Major James F. Briggs, of Manchester; O. C. Moore, of the Nashua Telegraph; Hon. Austin F. Pike, of Franklin; Hon. N. G. Ordway, of Warner, formerly Sergeant at Arms of the United States House of Representatives, and Hon. Charles H. Burns, of Wilton. The indications now are that Major Briggs will be nominated either on the first or second ballot. He served with credit in the Army, and stands high at the Bar, and would be triumphantly elected if nominated. He would make a worthy member of Congress. Mr. Moore is a gentleman of decided ability, having many warm admirers among the delegates. He is liberal in his opinions, and, if nominated, would be elected. Being an exceedingly effective stump speaker, he would make a very thorough canvass. Mr. Pike has run twice and been elected once, having been beaten the second time by irregularities at the ballot box of Ward Five, in Manchester. He has publicly withdrawn his name as a candidate before to-morrow's convention, but many of his friends are earnest in their requests that he should again make the effort for the position to which they claim he is entitled. He is an able lawyer, and would make a creditable nominee. Mr. Ordway has a national reputation, having held official position in Congress for many years. He has great local strength in consequence of his energy of character and success in overturning the Democracy in their stronghold in his native town of Warner. Mr. Burns is the present Solicitor of Hillsborough County, and a very accomplished lawyer and eloquent speaker. He has eminent qualifications for this office. The Republicans feel the great responsibility of electing a member to the next House of Representatives, and the choice of either one of the above-named gentlemen would reflect credit on the State and be a subject for honest pride.

The Democratic State Convention for the nomination of candidates for Governor and Railroad Commissioner will assemble here to-morrow. Many of the delegates have already arrived, and the convention promises to be largely attended. The candidates most prominently mentioned are Hon. Daniel Marcy, of Portsmouth, the nominee of last year; Hon. Warren A. Daniels, of Franklin; Hon. Frank A. McKean, of Nashua; Horatio Colony, of Keene; Edward D. Sanborn, of Dartmouth College. The party are all at sea regarding the nomination. It was publicly stated that Mr. Marcy had written an open letter declining to again be a candidate for Gubernatorial honors, and most of the delegates came here thinking that such was the case. Mr. Marcy's friends to-night deny any such letter, and say that the statement was put forth for the purpose of disposing of Mr. Marcy before the convention in the interest of some younger member of the party. They state that if he is not nominated there is no chance for the party to achieve a victory in the approaching struggle, and that his defeat in the convention will insure the return of a Republican to Congress in the Third District, in place of Hon. Frank Jones, the present Democratic inumbent. The younger members of the party are clamoring for a candidate not so advanced in years as the Portsmouth ship-builder, who, they claim, has made such a bad Congressional record that he cannot poll the full strength of his party, much less draw strength from the Republicans, which is necessary in order for them to elect. If Mr. Marcy desires the nomination, as it is understood he does, he will no doubt be the choice of the convention to-morrow.

THE FIRST CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT REPUBLICAN CONVENTION TO-DAY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

DOVER, Jan. 16.—The Republican Convention for the First Congressional District meets here to-morrow, and great interest is manifested by the delegates now here as to the nominee. All are actuated by one desire, that of selecting the strongest man for the position. Gen. Gilman Marston is pressed by his friends as having already been tried on the battle-field and in Congress. He is supported by a nearly solid delegation from Rockingham County, with most of Strafford County, and appearances to-night indicate his nomination on the first ballot. John J. Morrill, of Laconia, is the candidate of the whole delegation from Belknap and Carroll Counties, who have not had a Republican Congressman for 20 years, and demand it on account of location and the popularity of their candidate. Hon. Alonzo Nute, of Farmington, is pressed as the coming man in case neither of the others can be agreed upon. He was a delegate to the National Convention, and would make an excellent candidate. The district is close.

AFFAIRS IN LOUISIANA.

NO CHANGE IN THE SITUATION—JUDGE SHAW'S HABEAS CORPUS DISREGARDED BY THE WHITE LEAGUE CUSTODIAN OF THE SERGEANTS AT ARMS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 16.—There is no change in the political situation since last evening.

Mr. Nicholls' "Sheriff," Handy, refuses to recognize the writ of habeas corpus issued by Judge Shaw for the Assistant Sergeants at Arms of the Senate who are in prison here.

The Democratic members of the Legislature to-day unanimously adopted a joint resolution to the effect that the policy of kindness, fair, and equitable treatment toward the people of the State, as announced by Nicholls in his Baton Rouge speech, and in a letter to Pinchback on the 12th inst., is indorsed and will be strictly adhered to by them.

The following explains itself, and was sent to Gen. Augur at 11 o'clock last night:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 16.

To Brig. Gen. C. C. Augur, Commanding Department:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a communication from Brevet Major Russell, Aide de Camp, of this city, as follows:

Hon. S. B. Packard, New-Orleans:

SIR: Upon delivering to you a copy of a dispatch of the honorable Secretary of War of this date, I informed you that Gen. Augur, commanding the department, requested that you give assurances that the President's wishes concerning the preservation of the present status would be respected. You requested me to put the request in writing, so that you might make a written reply. I have done so, and remain, &c.

In reply, I beg to say that when this morning I received a verbal request through Major Russell to convent to let matters remain in statu quo, and to make no effort to reinstate the lawful authorities in possession of the court-room and records of the Supreme Court, and other positions of which they had been forcibly dispossessed by the violent and revolutionary act of the White League, I felt that the request would have been more appropriate if made immediately after my installation as Governor, and before many of the leading members of the Government had been forcibly taken possession of by the opposition. A majority of the lawfully-returned members of the General Assembly, in strict conformity with the laws and Constitution of the State, has declared me elected Governor, and on the 8th of January I duly took oath to observe the Constitution and maintain the laws of the State. My predecessor's feeling, I presume, that there was a difference of opinion in the nation with regard to the election in this State, as was made manifest by the presence of investigating committees of both houses of Congress, permitted, with my full assent, my contestant to go through the form of an inauguration without attempting in any manner to interpose. I had scarcely taken the oath of office when the White League were called to arms, and the court-room and records of the Supreme Court of the State—a court whose title no well-informed jurist ventures to dispute—were forcibly taken possession of. The various Precinct Police Stations were captured in like manner by the display of an overwhelming force. Orders had been issued early on this day, the 9th inst., by the honorable the Secretary of War, directing that all unauthorized armed bodies should be required to desist. A dispatch of the same date from myself to the Secretary of War conveyed assurance that Nicholls had promised the disbandment of his armed forces. I construed this order of the Secretary of War as virtually commanding the maintenance of statu quo, consequently the State forces in charge of the different portions outside of the Capitol were directed to make such resistance as would compel the manifestation of force and a breach of the peace on the part of their opponents. It was my understanding that neither side should be permitted to interfere with the status of the other side, yet it is a matter of public notoriety that, one day after this order was received and the pledge was given, a force of several hundred armed members of the White League, on the 10th inst., repaired to the State arsenal and took therefrom into their own keeping five pieces of artillery, including two Gatling guns; that a garrison of armed men was placed in and around the Supreme Court buildings; that on the following day, the 11th inst., an army of the White League broke into and took possession of the office of Recorder of Mortgages in this city.

The dispatch of the President of the date of Jan. 14, a copy of which was communicated by you to me, distinctly affirmed the illegality of the pretended court placed by the White League in possession usage their wrath. The present Mayor, in his recent Message, alludes to them as "illegal exactions made by subordinate officials from persons whose business and property bring them into communication with some bureau of the City Government." But if we take only the $10,400,000 which is lawfully distributed among the 8,700 officers and employes, we find their average annual salary is about $1,200. But this includes all who are in the Police, Fire, and Educational Departments, in the great majority of whom can in no strict sense be called office-holders, though receiving their appointment from the City authorities. Deducting these, and the average of the salaries paid to the other officers and employes of the City is $1,665 each.

Can the number and compensation of these officers and employes be reduced without detriment to the interests of the city? That is one of the main questions to be considered in our efforts at retrenchment and reform.

The population of New-York increased from 1860 to 1876 about 30 per cent., and yet in those 16 years the number of officers and employes increased 100 per cent, and their total pay increased 150 per cent. Or, according to the recent estimate of Senator Gerard, the annual expenditures of the City Government, as a whole, are "about 350 per cent. higher than was the case in 1860." Is it not high time that this multiplication of offices and increase of salaries, far in advance of the growth of the City, be checked? Can not our great and beautiful Metropolis be gradually converted into a house of refuge for the support of a steadily swelling throng of political adventurers at the expense of the capital and labor of the citizens?

But we may feel assured that whenever it is proposed to apply the knife of retrenchment and reform to any part of the body politic of the City, that particular part will cry out that it is all sound and that the instrument should be applied elsewhere. There is no easy road to economical reform, either in private business, or in the cost of government. Real reform always hurts somebody, always cuts into private interests, always arouses bitter opposition, always develops new political enemies. If this Legislature goes one step toward actual reduction of the expenses of the Government of New-York City, the lobby will be filled with the interested friends or retainers of those who profit by the invaded abuse. But, for myself, I will say that I know of no more effectual method of improving the condition of a debt-burdened corporation than by cutting down its expenses.

When Mr. Cowdin sat down, Spinola was on his feet finding fault with something or other in the speech, no one knew what, nor perhaps did the gifted speaker himself. Mr. Purdy moved to postpone the consideration of the resolution. Mr. Mitchell moved that it be made a special order for next Tuesday evening. Mr. Cozzens opposed this, for, he said, it was wasting the time of the House to debate at such length a simple resolution. Such discussion should be upon a bill. Mr. Grady moved as a substitute that the Committee on Cities be instructed to report in respect to all the cities of the State. On all these motions the ball was kept flying backward and forward among the members of the minority, until at last the previous question was ordered. Mr. Grady's substitute was voted down, and Mr. Cowdin's adopted.

Among the bills introduced this morning (14 in all) was one by Nachtmann, amending the law relating to Sunday processions, so as to allow civic societies to use music at the public funerals of members. This privilege is now only accorded to military organizations.

Dr. Hayes introduced a bill, which was in the House last year and failed, to create a State Board of Railroad Commissioners. It is a copy of the Massachusetts statute. Dr. Hayes is not committed to the bill, but brought it in by request of the Cheap Transportation Association. It is scarcely likely to pass. There is a distrust about finding in this State such men as were appointed in Massachusetts as Commissioners.

The report of the Commission to Investigate the State Prisons was presented. It is a bulky volume of over 800 pages. The general conclusions of the commission are embodied in a few pages at the beginning of the book. The remainder is devoted to the testimony taken.

THE SENATE.

The Senate adopted a resolution offered by Mr. Gerard, calling upon the Controller of the City of New-York to report a statement of the real estate held by that City, other than wharves, piers, water lots, and such property as is now used for public purposes, and to state the reasons, if there are any, why this property should not be sold at public auction, or by sealed bids, and the proceeds put in the treasury or sinking fund. In support of his resolution, Mr. Gerard said there was $10,000,000 worth of property owned by the City of New-York that might far better be sold than to be managed as it now is by a useless set of officials, involving waste and political corruption.

Senator Bixby made a drive at the life insurance companies, in the shape of a resolution directing the Insurance Superintendent to obtain from each life insurance company in the State, a detailed statement of its expenses in the way of salaries, counsel fees, medical examinations, donations, &c., and report the same to the Senate. Mr. Bixby said there were four principal causes of the failure of life insurance companies. First—Imprudent insurance of lives. Second—Unwise investments. Third—extravagant expenditures; and fourth, fraud. His resolution aimed at getting accurate information regarding one, and not the least important of these causes. The annual reports made by these companies to the Superintendent gave no details, and were comparatively worthless. Yet, even according to these reports, he found that one company in the City of New-York put the annual expenses of its management at over $900,000, while the expenses of a company in Hartford, Conn., doing an equal amount of business, were little more than $400,000. Mr. Selkreg supported the resolution, and said that he had occasion last Summer to investigate the affairs of a certain company in which he was a policyholder, and he became satisfied that the system under which the life insurance companies of this State did business would not bear examination. He had documents in his possession the publication of which would throw a cloud upon the integrity of the management of one of the largest companies in the State. Life insurance had come to be one of the largest interests in the State, directly affecting the welfare of a large portion of its citizens, and it was due to them that measures should be adopted by the Legislature to protect them against the imprudent or fraudulent management of these companies. Mr. Starbuck also supported the resolution, and cited a case, without giving the name, where a late clerk in a life insurance company in this State had suddenly become a millionnaire, and kept up an establishment and style of living that Commodore Vanderbilt would never have thought of maintaining. The resolution was adopted nem con.

The Commissioners appointed last session to inquire into the expediency of disposing of the lateral canals will probably make their report to-morrow. They are in session to-night, and the sitting promises to last until the morning. There seems to be quite a gathering of canal men here from various parts of the State, but it is evidently not the lateral canals or the commission in which they are interested.

The Senate committee, to whom was referred the nomination of Gen. Wiley, held a meeting this afternoon. It is understood that they will report to the Senate in the morning, and that the report will be in favor of Gen. Wiley's confirmation.

ATTACHMENT AGAINST AN ATTORNEY.

A litigation which has been in progress for some time past in regard to the ownership of the Park Hotel, in this City, was brought up before Judge Donohue in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday. The title of the suit is Hubbard W. Mitchell against George A. Crofutt. The plaintiff recently obtained an injunction restraining the defendant from collecting funds from the guests at the hotel. The object of this injunction seems not to have been attained. The plaintiff made affidavit to Judge Donohue, yesterday, that Chet Chester Williams, Crofutt's attorney, had advised the defendant to collect all the money he could, and that Williams himself had collected money from the guests, some of it, indeed, not actually due until after the injunction had been served. For this action the plaintiff sought an attachment against the attorney. In answer to the charges, Williams said yesterday that before the injunction had been served he had placed for collection in the hands of a City Marshal a number of claims against guests at the hotel, and the payments referred to were made to the Marshal in this way. In regard to giving advice to Crofutt, Williams said he had merely advised the latter that the injunction was strictly personal, and that he [Crofutt] might act as agent for the person who had already come into possession of the hotel. Judge Donohue granted an attachment against Williams, fixing the latter's bail at $1,000.

THE SALE OF A PATENT PLATFORM.

Before Judge Barrett and a jury, in Part III. of the Supreme Court, yesterday, the case of Charles C. Miller against Ezra Miller was tried. The plaintiff sued to recover contract commissions on a sale of a patent platform for $5,000 to the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company. He claimed that he was entitled to $1,000 on the sale, and had only received $900. He sued for $300 and interest. In answer, the defendant said the plaintiff had told him that he had influence with certain Southern Railroad Companies and could bring about the adoption by the latter of the patent platform. Relying on these misrepresentations the defendant said he entered into a contract whereby he agreed to give the plaintiff 20 per cent commission on sales. Discovering afterward that the plaintiff's representations were untrue, the defendant said he had revoked the contract before the sale to the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company. The jury gave the plaintiff a verdict for $244 65.

STATE PRISON AFFAIRS.

AS THE COMMISSION FINDS THEM.

CONDITION OF THE PRISONS AND STATE REFORMATORY — IMPROVEMENTS AT SING SING—THE PRISONS OVERCROWDED AND INSECURE—A LACK OF DISCIPLINE —SWINDLING CONTRACTS—A NEW PRISON CODE RECOMMENDED.

ALBANY, Jan. 16.—The report of the commission "to investigate the affairs of the State Prisons of this State and the State Reformatory at Elmira," together with the testimony on which it is based, was presented to the Legislature to-day. It makes a volume of 818 pages, most of which is taken up with the testimony. The following are the important parts of the report:

RECENT IMPROVEMENTS AT SING SING.

On the first visit of the commission to Sing Sing Prison in June, we found it in a very unsatisfactory condition. The grounds occupied by the State for prison purposes comprise several acres in close proximity to the village; public highways by the side of and over the prison grounds; a railroad with scores of trains running daily through the premises, on which convicts have captured locomotives and escaped; a broad river flowing past the prison, and not a fence, except an insufficient one along the railroad, to keep the public out or convicts in; the prison wharfs used by village people for their own purposes. Dealers were publicly supplying prisoners with almost anything they would pay for; convicts sitting and lying about under the trees, or congregated in groups in cool places, without keepers, playing all sorts of games, trading, scheming, trafficking, giving no signs of recognition should an official chance to pass them; numerous shanties scattered about the grounds, affording lounging places for convicts. A large per centum of guards and keepers, (without uniform or badges to distinguish them from other citizens,) entirely inexperienced in, and totally unfit for, their duties, with whom the experienced convict could do as he pleased; seldom instructed in duty; having scarcely any discipline among themselves, they enforced but little among the convicts; guards on duty, with convicts to wait on them, both having comfortable seats on which they spent most of their time, with the utmost familiarity, the guard's firearms, in the meantime, standing as conveniently to the convict waiter as to the guard. The buildings were generally in decent repair, though some were quite deficient on that score, while others needed rebuilding. On our last visit, in October, we found many of these evils discontinued, and the place appeared more like a prison; the private use of the State wharfs prohibited; dealers no longer publicly supplied convicts with delicacies; better discipline was observed among the prisoners; officials had learned something of their duties; most of them in uniforms; many shanties had been destroyed; the walls by the railroad had been made higher; the grounds had been somewhat improved, and much better order prevailed.

CLINTON AND AUBURN PRISONS AND ELMIRA REFORMATORY.

Clinton Prison was found less unsatisfactory than the one at Sing Sing, though a great lack of discipline was very apparent, and many of the Sing Sing evils prevailed in somewhat less degree. Here, too, the keepers and guards were without uniforms, or anything to designate their official character; most of them inexperienced, seldom drilled or instructed as to their duties, and many entirely unfit for the work they were paid to perform. The Physician and Chaplain are not included among those delinquents. Their departments were in a satisfactory condition. Most of the buildings were in fair condition, while others greatly needed repairs. Its wooden fence about the prison grounds is of a perishable character, and unfit for its intended purpose.

The condition of Auburn Prison was found much better than either of the others. The officials were of a better class, well uniformed and officerlike in appearance, the convicts under better discipline, and the whole establishment had more the appearance of a prison and less that of a comfortable place of retreat; yet much needs to be done there to make the prison as it should be. The buildings need some repairs, yet nearly all are in fair condition. There has in the past been much to complain of at the Asylum for Insane Criminals at Auburn. Its present condition is better. The prisons and asylum all lack proper means for extinguishing fires, and should be provided therewith without delay.

The State Reformatory at Elmira, in May last, the date of our first visit, was unfit for the reception of prisoners. On our last visit, in November, important changes were observed. There were in confinement 197 prisoners (transferred from the State Prisons) employed upon the buildings, inclosure, and grounds; 19 of the whole number received had been released. The cost of the above changes, we were assured, was and would remain within the appropriations made therefor. The number of prisoners that can be properly provided for at the Reformatory when completed is 504. The expense over and above present appropriations for preparing the Reformatory for its full work is now estimated to be not more than $150,000. That the State Prisons are so crowded as to require relief is beyond question, but we are not sure that the relief should be had by transferring prisoners to the Reformatory. If done at all, it should certainly be upon the principle of selection, lest an element and a sentiment to be found in the prisons should by its introduction into the Reformatory, impair and retard its usefulness. It seems quite as likely that relief may be had by sending to the Reformatory directly by the counties, instead of through the State Prisons, the class of offenders intended; hoping that the facilities and influences here supplied may return more of them to society useful citizens, thus reducing the per centum of recommitments, and disseminating, through these reformed young men, slowly but surely, it is hoped, a good and refining influence among the criminally inclined of their acquaintances.

INSECURE AND OVERCROWDED PRISONS.

The prisons at Sing Sing and Dannemora are far from being as secure against escapes as they should be. The wooden fence at Dannemora is of but little use, and as many of the doors of the cells and window gratings are of cast iron, the prisoners find but little difficulty in getting away, which they often do, subjecting the State to great expense in the matter of recapturing them, an item that has aggregated several thousands of dollars within a few years. The three State prisons are all overcrowded, and notwithstanding the cells are too small and insufficiently ventilated for the use of one prisoner, many of them are occupied by more—a practice that should never be permitted in any prison, as it interferes with discipline by affording opportunities for plotting mischief; for indulging in degrading practices; injuring health; and, more than all, subjecting the comparatively well-intentioned convict to the danger of moral contamination by the more hardened offender, a danger against which the State should guard all its criminals. A large number of prisoners are also huddled together in rooms, requiring the constant presence of more keepers than would be needed if each convict had a cell to himself. In the preliminary report of the commission, made to the Governor on Sept. 29 last past, we used this language:

"Men are appointed to positions in the prisons without any regard to fitness, but solely as rewards for political party services; and with every change of party in power, new men take the places of those, whose party was defeated at the last previous election, scarcely one of whom had been in office long enough to learn its duties. * * * Under these constant changes, there can be no discipline among the subordinate officials, without which there can be none among the convicts. If a Warden, or other officer of a high grade, attempts to discipline a subordinate, he, in turn, will threaten the superior with removal, a threat easily carried into effect by means of political influence. The dullest observer readily sees that there can be no discipline under such a system. No wonder it is not why our prisons fail financially and so many prisoners escape, but, rather, why more money is not lost, and more convicts do not escape."

THE IMPORTANCE OF PROPER DISCIPLINE.

Of more importance than all else in prison management is proper discipline. With this prisons may be comparatively successful; without it, never, either financially or as reformatories. Discipline should have neither friend nor foe, permit no caprice, allow no passion, no idleness, require no work beyond ability; duties should be perfectly understood and thoroughly performed; should exact cleanliness of persons and places; its rules should be enforced throughout the prison with an impartiality that all would recognize, and as rigidly as could be commanded by the earnest principles of military law. Its vigilance should be as sleepless as Time, never neglecting the well, ever caring for the sick, and never failing to decently bury the dead. Some have attributed the failure of our prison management to one cause, some to others. Some have said that well-intentioned but misdirected philanthropy was at fault; others that too much legislation has caused all our prison troubles. These may have had an injurious effect on the prisons, but the real cause was political partisanship. This cast its evil influences everywhere about the prisons, reaching the pulpit, the hospital, and the asylum for the insane. All political parties obeyed its imperious commands. For it the State was forgotten, or remembered only to be plundered and convicts wronged. Chief among the evils of this partisan influence were the differences and quarrels among the inspectors and other officials, sometimes leading almost to blows. The party in the majority would frequently ignore the minority, nullify orders issued by such minority, forbid any record thereof, and prohibit the Wardens from obeying them. An Inspector in charge would give an order on Monday; the board would countermand it on Tuesday and adjourn, and on Wednesday it would again be promulgated, thus creating confusion in all departments of the prisons, affect the next grade of officials, reach the keepers and guards, influence the conduct of the prisoners, and result in entire absence of discipline, destroy the value of convict labor, increase the deficiencies of the prisons, and injure the convicts.

THE PUNISHMENT OF CONVICTS.

As a rule, convicts have not for some years been severely punished, though there are instances where punishments have been unjustly administered. Formerly punishments were more severe than at present. The following are sometimes administered, viz.: Iron cap or cage worn on the shoulders by an iron band about the neck, the cage part extending upward some 15 inches or more, within which the head is inclosed by small rods or bands of iron, weighing from six and a half to eight pounds. This is for slight offences, and is taken off whenever the offender expresses regret for his offense, and promises better conduct in future. Confinement in common cells, with reduced rations, is also used for certain minor offenses. For more serious offenses the paddle is used. Raising the convict by the thumbs has been practiced within a recent period. This is a very severe punishment. Men have been known raised so long as to cause bleeding from the mouth, before the doctor would order the prisoner taken down. (This particular case does not appear in evidence, but is known to a member of the commission.) The chain and ball are often used, especially at Sing Sing and Clinton, as punishment for attempts to escape. Punishment by dark cell or dungeon, with short rations, is more in use for the most serious offenses, sometimes accompanied by shackling to the floor or wall. In the female prison at Sing Sing the following punishments have been or are used, viz.: The cage, gag, strait-jacket, confinement in common cells on reduced rations, and in dark cells, on reduced rations, and in dungeons, sometimes with shackles; the shower bath; tying the hands to a post, and shortening the hair—considered the severest of all, and one that meets with the greatest opposition.

There have been but few complaints made to the Commission by the inmates of the prisons, numerous as they are, notwithstanding it was understood in all the prisons that all convicts would be listened to who desired to be heard. There were not more than 40 who voluntarily presented themselves before the commission, and the greater part of those sought influence in regard to getting pardoned. Most of the cases of abuse to convicts, referred to in the evidence, were brought before the commission by civilians.

The commission had several convict witnesses testify in relation to prison matters, but have not included such testimony in this report to the Legislature unless corroborated by civilians, or otherwise having good reasons for so doing.

HUMAN MENAGERIES.

Among other great evils that have existed about the prisons is the practice of admitting visitors from mere curiosity—people who look on the prison as a sort of human menagerie, for the confinement and display of peculiar sorts of partially-tamed wild men, whose feelings in regard to being "shown up" are not a consideration to the keeper. The more notorious any prisoners have become the more anxious are the visiters to see them, and the first request of one of these sightseers, on entering a prison, is to have A. B. or C. D. pointed out. This system is injurious to discipline, interferes with work, offers opportunities for clandestine correspondence between visitor and convict, wastes the time of officials, and, as in the case of a young man at Sing Sing, leads to criminal contamination, ending in ruin. A great feature of this "show" is to see the prisoners march to the mess-room, on which occasion the visitor has been permitted to stand so near the prisoners as to be able to lay hands on them, as people do with animals that they partially fear, yet hope to conciliate. This visiting has become so prevalent that excursion parties, such as the late Centennial called forth, have been made op. One such from an adjoining county, numbering nearly 200 persons, visited this prison. Persons of the commission were there—enough in numbers and so rabid in their curiosity as to almost override everything about the prison. Of course, the convicts should, under proper regulations, be permitted to see their friends; public officials should also be allowed to visit the prisons, and some few others whose services in public matters might entitle them to that privilege, but making "curiosity shops" of our prisons is wrong, and exhibiting our convicts for pay is a practice entirely unbecoming our people, and from its injury to discipline, and injustice to the prisoner, ought to be prohibited.

ABUSING AND DEFRAUDING CONVICTS AND LUNATICS.

The inmates of the prisons have not usually been very much abused, favors (reasons apparent in evidence) having been quite as frequent as maltreatment. Still there has been too much abuse and neglect of the sick and feeble. The commission do not believe that convicts should have all the privileges and comforts of a home; the deprivation of these is a part of the penalty justly exacted for their offenses against society. On the other hand, we believe that they should have sufficient wholesome prison food, not be worked beyond their strength, have comfortable clothing, proper medical care when sick, and not be left to die alone in their cells; and, above all, the commission do not believe in punishing irresponsible lunatic criminals for offenses committed while in the prison asylum. The evidence on these points is very full.

Reference is given to pages of the testimony as to insufficient clothing, bad food, and detention of convicts beyond their time from carelessness of prison clerks; as to working, neglecting and punishing sick convicts; as to prisoners dying in their cells; as to a keeper extorting money; as to money paid to a keeper by convicts; as to money paid to a Deputy Sheriff; as to fees demanded by the deputy sheriff as he required to do by chain to a convict on his discharge. Within a short time of this man's discharge, he was again arrested for breaking into the house of District Attorney Phelps and sent back to prison. How much the loss of his property had to do with his new crime cannot be decided. After his return to prison his watch was found. Another convict, on his discharge, demanded more money than appeared to his credit on the "Convict Deposit Book." On looking at his commitment paper, the sum was found credited on the back thereof in pencil, a former clerk failing to make the proper entry. Hoopfner, a man confined in Sing Sing, was defrauded by a convict clerk in the Chaplain's Department. Hoepfner wrote to his brother for money. The brother's letter in reply was read and answered by the convict clerk, telling him, the brother, to send the money, $150, for the convict, to one "Horton," at Sing Sing, and not to the prison, as the prison officials might get the money and never give it to the convict. In due time, this convict clerk received a draft payable to the order of Philip K. Horton, indorsed that name on it, and obtained the money, while the convict, for whom it was intended, was anxiously waiting and wondering why his brother did not send it. Papers were produced before the commission verifying their statements.

DISCRIMINATING FAVORS TO CONVICTS.

One of the most prolific sources of dissatisfaction among the prisoners, and one which has done much to interfere with proper discipline, has been favors shown to some of the convicts, a practice that should never be permitted in any prison. Convicts have complained, and justly, more about that than anything else in their prison experience. Discipline, impartially administered, seldom causes complaint among convicts; partiality and favoritism always do. Convicts have been willing to comply with the rules by giving them special privileges, allowed to buy luxuries, conduct unchecked correspondence, to read all sorts of newspapers, and to do pretty much as they pleased, except, perhaps, to leave the prison—to occupy places of trust, as clerks, weighers and measurers, &c. Probably there has no more objectionable practice prevailed in the prisons than this of allowing convicts to fill places of trust. By it the State has been defrauded and prisoners wronged. The evidence on this subject is very full and entirely conclusive as to its injurious effects. As clerks they have had access to many of the prison books and records, even to transcribing the official minutes of the Inspectors, thus acquiring information which they could use to their own advantage; have had charge of important accounts between the State and parties furnishing supplies; have been employed to weigh and measure articles purchased and sold by the State, and make such returns thereof as suited them. This practice opened a wide door for profit to the convict, especially at Sing Sing and Clinton, in weighing iron ore and measuring wood. The evidence shows that they did not fail to use their opportunities to the injury of the State and wrong to other convicts. Convict clerkships were frequently used to the benefit of other convicts, by the alteration of commitment papers by which convicts were discharged before their time was out. Convicts have been permitted to draw uncooked rations and cook same to suit themselves, instead of feeding in the mess room; have had the hospital room and have hospital fare when not under medical treatment; have been hired to do their work in a proper manner; to buy delicacies; to eat in the Warden's kitchen when not employed there; to make pies from materials belonging to the State and sell same to other convicts; to move about the prison grounds as pleasure; to reciprocate (see Stokes) with contractors; to work for themselves and take the avails therefor; to rehearse for and take part in theatrical performances; to have access to prison supplies; the female life prisoners permitted to have better food than others; male convicts permitted to have their clothing made to please them, &c.

LAXITY IN THE BUSINESS MANAGEMENT OF PRISONS.

References to testimony on extravagance, waste, dishonesty, and carelessness show that in purchasing supplies and fixtures, erecting buildings, &c., but little economy was practiced; that no care of same followed purchase; that productive mines belonging to the State were abandoned, and a royalty paid private parties for ore from other mines; that dishonest practices prevailed among officials and others, by which the State was defrauded and prisoners injured. That officials not only failed to make the State's debtors pay, but also to become debtors themselves. If the evidence given is not sufficient to account for the failure of our prisons, more than enough will be found in the following statements in regard to the management of business affairs to account for all. The questions of discipline and finance seem to be so interwoven that it is very difficult to separate them in our report; for it is satisfactorily shown in evidence that the discipline has been so lax that convict labor could not be made profitable. The prisons should be self-sustaining, or nearly so. Perhaps we ought not to anticipate such a condition of things until the present disastrous system and its results are overcome. As a matter of course, in times of great pecuniary pressure, when all the business interests of the State connected with the prisons must suffer; but if the prison affairs are managed wisely and economically, as a prudent man manages his own business, the loss, it any, cannot be so heavy as heretofore. The business carried on at the prisons is of a varied character. The Sing Sing Prison is or was a large establishment, nearly engaged in the lime and marble-dust business, involving the opening and working of quarries on the prison grounds, together with several mechanical branches. The Clinton Prison is almost wholly employed in the working of iron mines, in the extracting of ore, and putting it into a marketable condition; while the Auburn Prison is engaged in mechanical branches of business exclusively. It will be seen by a reference to the evidence that the largest deficit is at the prisons where the heavy articles are taken from the quarries and mines. This results from the multifarious branches of labor and expenditure growing out of the same general business, necessitating other than convict labor, and putting it in the power of dishonest employes to defraud the State with facility, cover up the fraud with ease, and do it so cleverly as to avoid detection. To illustrate this: If a dishonest official, having charge of the lime works, enters upon the books as sold and delivered and received payment for 1,200, the books do not show the fraud; and the value of the 200 barrels in excess of the 1,000 barrels charged upon the books may be pocketed by the dishonest official, or divided with a dishonest purchaser, if it is a case of fraudulent connivance. Take another illustration: as connected with the purchase of wood or coal, of which large quantities are consumed, or in the purchase of material necessary for packing and transporting articles manufactured; this same fraudulent practice may be carried on extensively, and the tracks of the fraudulent operator will be ingeniously covered up as to defy detection. Should the prison books be examined very critically, and the suspected official examined upon oath as to any suspicious transactions, mutilation of books, erasures, or the like, he can evade giving an explanation as to apparent errors, frauds, or irregularities, by a general answer: "I can't explain it;" "it has gone out of my mind;" "I am no book-keeper;" "I don't know how it is," &c. In furnishing supplies for the prisons, such as flour, beef, vegetables, clothing, medicines, &c., including everything necessary for the subsistence of the convicts, prices may be paid, and doubtless have been paid, in excess of the market rate than these articles could and should have been purchased at. Even if the official who made these purchases derived no direct pecuniary benefit to himself, he could carry on a palpable favoritism decidedly detrimental to the interests of the State. That such has been the case admits of no doubt. To call upon officials to give evidence against whom there is not only proof of fraud, but which proof is greatly strengthened by surrounding circumstances, is not sound policy; and yet the commission was compelled to do so, believing, nevertheless, that any public officer acting under his official oath, and refusing to testify, defrauding the State knowingly, would not hesitate to swear falsely to cover up and conceal it. It is but an aggregation of perjury. That the pecuniary interests of the State have suffered in as great a variety of methods as the dishonesty of the officials could invent is manifest. Perhaps, in some cases it was the result of financial stupidity; but probably it was otherwise. One or two instances will suffice on this head.

FRAUDULENT CONTRACTS.

An agent at the Sing Sing Prison made a contract for the delivery at the prison of 3,500 cords of wood at $8 per cord. When but about 350 cords were delivered, a successor to the official who made this contract was appointed, who annulled the contract and made a new one with another party on substantially the same terms. The party whose contract was thus abrogated applied to the Legislature for relief, and a law was procured to be passed awarding $2,800 to him, which sum was drawn from the Treasury of the State, although the party realized but $3,500, having paid $1,000 to obtain the passage of the law. The commission make no comment, but merely refer to the evidence as to the transaction. Another instance is this: Alfred Walker had been connected with the Sing Sing Prison for several years as contractor, Superintendent of the marble and lime works, and as Warden. One Sands had a contract made with the Inspectors, by the provision of which he had erected kilns for the manufacture of lime, Walker being a copartner with him. In the year 1868 Walker purchased the interest of his copartner, Sands, in these kilns and fixtures, paying him $11,500, the valuation being $23,000. As the lease was about to expire, he made application to the Legislature for the passage of a law authorizing a renewal of his lease for five years. Then commenced a series of manœuvres in which more persons than Walker were evidently concerned.

The marble and lime business was represented as very profitable, for which reason Walker wanted his lease extended. Prison officials favored a purchase of the kilns and fixtures, in order that the State might engage in a business which was represented to be so vastly profitable. Walker fixed his price at $125,000, alleging that a fair inventory and appraisal would show this to be its fair value. The release was made by the State at $125,000. Among the papers which the commission found at the prison was an inventory of this property. The appraisal was enormous, and yet it amounted to but $49,000. That the State was egregiously swindled by reason of the dishonesty or imbecility of the officials in charge of this prison there cannot be a reasonable doubt. And then, to crap the climax, the Inspectors appointed Walker Superintendent, and when, thereafter, they made him agent and Warden of the prison, he was continued in office as such Superintendent (employing his son as clerk and foreman,) and his salary as Superintendent, in addition to his salary as agent and Warden, was charged and paid at $3,000 for 10 months. In addition to this we find that he charged the State $1,500 at one time for "traveling expenses," without any detailed statement as to when, where, how, or for what purpose this traveling was done. It is very certain that it was not in going from Sing Sing to Albany to procure the passage of the law giving him $125,000 for his interest in the marble and lime works, for he specifies very graphically the modus operandi by which he succeeded. That other officials besides Walker had a share in this transaction is more than probable, for, although he swears he owed Messrs. Cobb & Larkin for advances nearly $70,000, we find among the papers a receipt, signed by these gentlemen, stating that they had received of Walker the draft of Barnum, Hammond & Sohen, (then Inspectors,) on the Treasurer for $125,000, which draft Messrs. Cobb & Larkin held as collateral security for $15,000 and interest.

The commission found the Auburn Prison in fair condition under the present administration. In pursuing their investigations as to the management in former years, they found evidence of the same design on the part of the officials to manage prison affairs with an eye to personal pecuniary benefit. As an illustration:—one is one of a firm of contractors, and is at the same time agent and Warden of the prison. An extension of the prison made it necessary to procure 563 iron doors, casings, and locks. As agent and Warden he could not properly make a contract with the firm of which he was a member, and therefore he withdrew as a partner, and his son, a young man just emerging from boyhood, took his place; and then a contract was made with this firm to furnish the required articles—wrought-iron at 15 cents per pound, cast-iron at eight cents per pound, &c. The iron was purchased by these contractors at five cents per pound for wrought-iron, Yet, all the labor connected with this job could have been done by convicts, and thus thousands of dollars saved to the State, beside the indirect benefit resulting from keeping the convicts employed. The sum agreed to be paid for materials and labor was exorbitant.

SPECIFICATIONS REGARDING MISMANAGEMENT.

Should we particularize wherein the State has suffered pecuniary loss the following specifications may suffice:

First—In the great lack of discipline among the convicts, which puts it in their power to do much or little of the labor required of them within a given time.

Second—This state of things prevented the agent and Warden, or other authorized officials, making contracts for convict labor on terms as favorable to the State as if the convicts were under proper discipline.

Third—Contractors of doubtful pecuniary responsibility were thus enabled to contract for convict labor, because lack of discipline lessened competition for such labor.

Fourth—Contractors were not required to pay promptly for convict labor, nor was ample security in many cases required of them.

Fifth—Property belonging to the State has been sold to irresponsible persons on credit without security.

Sixth—Purchases for the prisons have been made at large and even exorbitant prices.

Seventh—Extravagant prices have been paid for work done at the prisons and materials furnished in and about the manufactore of lime, iron, &c.

Eighth—Too many employes have been receiving pay for services which were unnecessary and could have been dispensed with.

Ninth—A general want of economy in almost everything connected with the prison.

Tenth—Prison officials have received and appropriated State property to their own use without making compensation.

Eleventh—Extra services, traveling expenses, unauthorized by law and unnecessary, swell the indebtedness.

The report closes with several general recommendations, and says: Under the new system laws must be enacted to regulate the prisons, and it is respectfully recommended that a code, simple and definite in its provisions, be carefully matured, and of practical application, should be passed at an early day; and that all existing laws now spread over our statute books as to these prisons should be repealed. Respectfully submitted,

A CLERK ACCUSED OF EMBEZZLEMENT.

Elijah J. Houghton, a young man of pleasing address and gentlemanly bearing, who gave his address as No. 47 East Forty-eighth street, was arraigned at the Washington Place Police Court yesterday morning, on a charge of having embezzled $10,000 from the firm of Messrs. Hamilton, Gordon & Sons, piano manufacturers, of No. 13 East Fourteenth street. The prisoner had been connected with the house over six years, and had been employed in the capacity of confidential clerk. The senior member of the firm, Mr. Hamilton Gordon, testified that Houghton was discharged last September, on account of the discovery of irregularities in the books which had been under his exclusive charge. An investigation that was subsequently made revealed the fact that the embezzlement was more extensive than at first supposed, the amounts aggregating more than $10,000. It was further discovered that Houghton, instead of depositing the checks received from customers at various times in payment of debts, had been in the habit of appropriating them to his own use. In cases where checks had been made payable to the order of the firm, he had forged his employers' indorsement and signed for his own benefit. A number of checks were returned to the firm protested, at various times, and as investigation being made, it was discovered that Houghton, instead of crediting receipts in the cash book, had entered them in the discharge book merely. Three complaints were made against the prisoner yesterday, two charging him with forgery and one with larceny. He was committed for trial in default of $2,000 bail.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION....Jan. 16.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

In the Senate a petition from Gov. Chamberlain and other State officers of South Carolina was presented, replying to the statements in the petition of Wade Hampton, and declaring that violence and intimidation had been used toward Republican voters in the recent election. The bill to amend the Pacific Railroad acts was postponed till Tuesday next. The bill authorizing the coining of the standard silver dollar, and restoring its legal tender character, was reported from the Finance Committee. It proposes redemption of legal tender notes with silver. Mr. Sherman said he would submit a substitute when the bill came up. A resolution declaring the State Government of South Carolina represented by Gov. Chamberlain the lawful Government of that State was referred to the Committee on Elections. The message of the President regarding the sending of troops to Petersburg, Va., during the election, was called up and a resolution was offered instructing the Judiciary Committee to report whether the construction of the election laws put on them by the Attorney General in general orders No. 96 is correct. A debate ensued, mainly on one side, in which Messrs. Johnston and Withers, of Virginia, and Whyte, of Maryland, took part. The resolution was adopted. The amendments to the rules proposed by the Committee on Rules were agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

In the House the bill authorizing the appointment of Commissioners to an international convention on the relative value of gold and silver was, after brief debate, laid on the table by 125 to 104. The Committee on the Powers of the House in Counting the Electoral Vote were authorized to send for persons and papers. The Judiciary Committee reported, in relation to the refusal of the members of the Louisiana Returning Board to produce papers demanded by the Morrison Investigating Committee, that they do not recognize the right of any person, or State, or Federal officer, to defeat an investigation of either house which might involve the existence of the Government, by refusing to testify before such committee, and they direct the arrest of the members of the Returning Board. A long debate ensued, and a motion for the previous question was carried, when the subject went over till to-morrow. A communication from E. W. Barnes, of the Telegraph Company, in further answer to the House, was submitted and referred to the Judiciary Committee. Mr. William Orton was permitted to go to New-York under charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms, to consult his physician.

SENATE.

SOUTH CAROLINA AFFAIRS.

Mr. PATTERSON, of South Carolina, presented a petition of D. H. Chamberlain, R. H. Greaves, F. L. Cardoza, R. B. Elliott, John R. Talbott, and others, of South Carolina, and said he would not ask to have it read, but moved that it be printed in the Record.

Mr. ALCORN, of Mississippi, objected to anything being printed in the Record without being read in the Senate.

The reading of the petition was then commenced. The petitioners refer to the petition of Wade Hampton and others, and say many of the statements in it are untrue in fact, others are calculated to mislead the Senate, and various important facts are omitted.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, interrupting the reading, said he would suggest that the paper be printed in the Record without taking up time to have it read.

Mr. ALCORN again objected, and said he had no idea there was anything improper in the memorial, but it should be first read in the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN said when a Senator produced a petition he became the mouthpiece of that. It was proper, and for that reason it need not be read.

Mr. ALCORN, having declined to withdraw his objection, the reading was resumed. The petitioners ask Congress to accept from them a full and free statement of affairs in South Carolina, and declare that they stand ready to make good their statements if they be required to do so; they charge violence and intimidation of Republican voters at the late election; review at great length the action of the Returning Board and Supreme Court, and claim that they were lawfully elected to their respective offices. The reading of the petition was continued till 5:45 P. M., when Mr. Alcorn withdrew his objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, said unless the Senator presenting the petition would state that he had read it, and that it was a proper document, he would renew the objection.

Mr. PATTERSON, of South Carolina, said to be frank, he did not read it, as he only received it this morning, but he knew Gov. Chamberlain to be an honorable man, and that he would not put anything in the petition which was not true. He had no doubt it was a proper and respectful document.

No further objection to having it printed without being read was made, and it was ordered that the petition be printed in the Record.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD ACTS.

Mr. THURMAN, of Ohio, said the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee at the last session to amend the Pacific Railroad acts of July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864, had been made the special order for 1 o'clock to-day. He had a telegram from Senator Hitchcock, of Nebraska, whose constituents were deeply interested in the bill, requesting that it be postponed for one week. He, therefore, moved that the bill be made the special order for next Tuesday at 1 o'clock P. M. Agreed to.

ENLARGEMENT OF THE CAPITOL GROUNDS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, presented a petition of citizens of Washington, asking that the United States purchase certain squares bordering on the Capitol grounds, for the purpose of enlarging and ornamenting the grounds according to the original plan, and to accommodate new buildings for the National Library, Supreme Court, National Museum; and, further, that the $1,500,000 to be refunded by the Centennial Commission be appropriated for the purchase of such ground and the erection of such buildings. Referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SILVER COIN LEGAL TENDER.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, from the Committee on Finance, reported back the House bill authorizing the coining of the standard silver dollar and restoring its legal tender character. Placed on the calendar. In reporting the bill, Mr. SHERMAN said the committee directed him to report it without recommendation either for or against the measure. The Senate having yesterday extended the time for the LAW REPORTS.

A PECULIAR SUIT.

AN INJUNCTION SOUGHT AGAINST A LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—A BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION WHICH ACTS AS THE COMPANY'S AGENT.

The case of Regina Mausbach against the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company was brought before Judge Donohue in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, on a motion for an injunction against the defendants. The action is a rather peculiar one and is perhaps worthy of note, because of the light it throws on one of the methods employed by thrifty Germans to save themselves and their families from destitution arising from sickness or other unforeseen accident. The plaintiff in the present case sues as the beneficiary under a $3,000 policy of life insurance taken out by her husband in the defendant company, through the agency of the Hildise Bund. This Bund is an association of Germans forming an aid society. The members pay in weekly dues to the Bund, and the Bund in turn assists the family of a sick member by weekly stipends. Besides this, each member of the Bund is entitled to a life policy in the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. Before becoming a member of the Bund each candidate is obliged to submit to a physical examination by the Medical Board of the insurance company. The company receives weekly a portion of the dues paid in by each member to the Bund. This generally satisfactory arrangement seems, however, to have its defects, if the allegations in the present action are well founded. The plaintiff in her complaint says her husband fell sick some months ago. His allowance was paid weekly for some time by the Hildise Bund. Recently, however, he received notice from the insurance company that they proposed to cancel his policy of insurance, on the ground that he had made false representations to the Examiners in making his application for insurance. The plaintiff denies this allegation, however, and seeks by the present action to restrain the company from doing anything of the kind, looking toward the canceling of the policy; to compel the company to keep the policy on its books, and to have the company make an exhibition of its books so that she can see whether the proper share of dividends have been allotted to the policy of insurance which she holds. An examination of the last mentioned relief it may be said that the policies for the members of the Hilsise Bund are under what is known as the "reserve endowment plan," and form a special class in which each policy is credited with a certain dividend every year. Charles Strauss appears for the plaintiff, and Abraham Kirchhoffer and Woodard represent the defendants. The latter will answer the charges made to-day.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—The following decisions have been rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States:

No. 151.—Utley et al. vs. Donaldson, &c.—Error to the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Missouri.—In this case it is held, that where a written instrument exists, and one of the parties sets up an arrangement of a different nature, alleging conduct on the other side amounting to a substitution of this arrangement for the written agreement, he must clearly show, not merely his own understanding as to the new terms of the arrangement, but that the other party had the same understanding. This decision was in the case of the sale of spurious Central Pacific bonds, in which the seller unsuccessfully, after the character of the bonds became known, claimed that it was without recourse. Reversed. Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion; dissenting, Mr. Justice Strong.

No. 121.—Bond et al. vs. Moore.—Error to the Supreme Court of Tennessee.—The question in this case is as to the effect of the President's proclamation of June 13, 1865, upon the rights and duties of parties to commercial paper residing respectively during the late war in Confederate and New-Orleans when the paper matured, after the occupation of New-Orleans by the national forces, and before the date of the proclamation. Case disposed of by the decision in Martuson vs. Howard, (18 Wall,) and Matthews vs. McStea. The decision is that business intercourse was allowable after the announcement of the President's proclamation, and the time of the occupation of New-Orleans, and while war existed as a political fact; until the proclamation, business intercourse was not affected after that order. The Chief Justice delivered the opinion.

No. 130.—Hertley et al. vs. Steamer Idaho.—Appeal from the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of New-York.—In this case it is decided that the law permits a common carrier to show as an excuse for non-delivery pursuant to his bill of lading, that he has delivered the goods upon demand of the true owner. It is a matter of no importance how the bailor acquired the possession he has delivered to his bailee, if the bailee has delivered his property to one who has a better right to it than the owner he may defend himself against any claim of his principal. Affirmed. Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion.

No. 885—Wiggans vs. The People of the United States in Utah Territory.—Error to the Supreme Court of Utah Territory.—In this case the writ of error from this court to the Supreme Court of the Territory is allowed by section 3 of the act of June 23, 1870, in convictions for bigamy, polygamy, or sentences of death for any crime; that in a trial for homicide, when the question whether the prisoner or deceased commenced the encounter which resulted in the death of the latter is in doubt, it is competent to prove threats of violence against the prisoner, made by the deceased, though not brought to the notice of the prisoner. Reversed. Mr. Justice Miller declared the opinion; dissenting, Mr. Justice Clifford.

No. 135.—Russell et al. vs. Dodge et al.—Appeal from the Circuit Court for the Northern District of New-York.—This was the affirmance of a decree holding that Russell's patent for a process of preparing leather with hot-tat liquor is not valid by reason of the previous knowledge of the process. Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion.

No. 146.—Scruggs et Scruggs et al.—Appeal from the District Court for the Northern District of Alabama.—In this case the court find that there was an intent to evade the provisions of the Bankrupt law in a conveyance of property made by the insolvent to his wife, and to reverse the decree. Mr. Justice Hunt delivered the opinion.

No. 131.—The United States, plaintiffs in error, vs. John H. Thompson et al.—In error to the Court of Appeals of the State of Maryland.—Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court dismissing the writ of error in this cause for want of jurisdiction.

No. 1.—Ex parte Robert L. Cutting.—Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court denying the petition for mandamus in this cause.

MADE POORER BY A JUDGMENT.

The case of Niekerson against Streeter was tried in the Marine Court before Chief Justice Shea yesterday. The plaintiff it appears, sued to recover the value of services rendered in June, 1874, as an accountant in balancing, clearing and closing up two sets of books of two firms, of which the defendant was a member. The defense was that the plaintiff was bound to do this and to make no charge therefor by reason of his agreement so to do, made in March, 1874, on the settlement and payment of a disputed bill then due to him by defendant for somewhat similar services. The defendant also claimed that the plaintiff did not do his work properly and did not furnish a balance sheet as is customary, and made erroneous entries in the books. The evidence showed there were erroneous entries made by the plaintiff, but he claimed that they were made as the defendant's direction. The evidence as to the agreement to render the services in consideration of the defendant's paying him a disputed bill was conflicting and contradictory. After a trial in Marine Court, Part I., occupying portions of two days, Chief Justice Shea charged the jury, who after an absence of half an hour rendered a verdict for the plaintiff for 50 per cent of the claim or $37 50. It is provided by section 304 of the Code that unless the plaintiff recover $50 or over he must pay the defendant's costs. As the costs the plaintiff is required to pay in the present instance will be between $70 and $80, this judgment will not furnish him with half the money required, so that he is really poorer for having judgment in his favor. Hudson & Strauss appeared for the plaintiff, and M. M. Budlong represented the defendant.

A MOTHER'S PETITION.

A WIDOW SUING TO HAVE HER TWO DEAF MUTE CHILDREN BROUGHT TOGETHER —THE HISTORY OF A MUCH-MARRIED MAN.

A very singular case of mixed social relations was presented to Judge Donohue in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, on a petition of Constance B. Price, through her attorney, Gen. Roger A. Pryor. Mrs. Price seeks to obtain the custody of her child, a little girl named Lillie M. Price. According to the petition the child's father was Walter W. Price, who died on June 5, 1876. Price, it appears, had quite a matrimonial history. He was first married in England in 1839, to Susannah Butler, by whom he had one child. Both mother and child are still living. On marriage, however, seems to have been of little consequence to Mr. Price, and so in 1843 he contracted another. His second wife's maiden name was Caroline J. Barton. Five children were born of this union, and then a decree was made by one of the courts in this State adjudging this second marriage to have been null and void from the beginning, because Price's first wife was still living. In July, 1865, Price again felt himself to be a free and unmarried man, and married the petitioner. They lived together as man and wife until April 10, 1874, when their marriage was decreed to be null and void, also, because of Price's first marriage. Two children were born of the third marriage. Price died, as before stated, on June 5, 1876, leaving a large amount of property. A will was then brought forward, in which Stephen Brown, Daniel C. Holman, Walter J. Price, and Caroline Asamead were appointed respectively Executors and Executrix. In the will a legacy of $50,000 was set to Lillie M. Price, the petitioner's daughter. In case of her death the money was to go to Caroline Ashmead and Walter J. Price, who are children of the testator by his second wife. These two were appointed as guardians for the petitioner's child. They have, however, neglected in the trust imposed, but have left the child to the care and custody of Mercy Evarson, who is a widow and the sister of the testator. The petitioner says that Mercy Evarson is not entitled to the custody of the child. In her petition, after stating the above facts, she says that Lillie M. Price was born on Feb. 21, 1863, and that her other child, Nellie Price, was born on Aug. 21, 1870. Both, she says, are of tender years and their circumstances are such as specially to require that they should be brought together as far as is practicable, because both are deaf mutes and they are nearly of the same age. With the training she proposes to give them, the petitioner says, they will be not only a comfort to each other as sisters, but they may be of service to each other in their mutual infirmity. Mrs. Price says they are not allowed to see each other, exceeting at rare intervals, and then under circumstances not greatly provocative of sisterly love. She sought a habeas corpus to bring the child into court, and also an order for the appointment of a guardian for the little girl. Judge Donohue granted the writ of habeas corpus.

INJUNCTION AGAINST A STEAM-WHISTLE.

Judge Sanford, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday rendered a decision in the case of Butterfield and others against Kisber and others. The action was brought by the owners of the "apartment house," known as the "Albany," situated on Broadway, between Fifty-first and Fifty-second streets, to enjoin the use, in a factory situated upon adjacent premises on the northerly side of Fifty-first street, of a steam-engine and machinery adapted to and employed in the business of cutting and polishing marble. The complaint alleged that by the working and operation of the steam-engine and machinery a continuous, loud, discordant jarring and offensive noise was produced whereby most of the apartments in the plaintiffs' building were rendered unfit for hacitation. In consequence of this the plaintiffs claimed their apartments could not be let and the tenents were threatening to throw up their leases and abandon the premises. They also claimed they had lost $10,000 and demanded judgment for that sum, as well as an injunction to restrain the working of the steam-engine. The answer controverted the allegations of the complaint as to the extent and effect of the noise produced by the defendant's engine and machinery, and as to any damages claimed to have resulted therefrom. Judge Sanford, in his opinion, after commenting on the evidence, holds that the blowing of the steam-whistle in the marble works is all that need be enjoined and restricted.

A DIVORCED HUSBAND'S PETITION.

Catherine Vath brought suit against her husband, Charles L. Vath, for a divorce. Fearing, however, that the latter would leave the State, she had him arrested on a writ of ne exeat, as it is called, which was to prevent his departure. The defendant, however, gave a bond in $1,000, and was released. In due course of time the divorce suit was prosecuted to judgment, and a decree was given in favor of the wife in July last. By this decree the defendant was directed to pay the plaintiff $1,200 as alimony for her support and that of her two children. The defendant set forth these facts in a petition to Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, and also stated that he had paid the amount ordered by the decree to be paid. He asked for the discharge of the writ of ne exeat, and for the canceling of the bond given on the same. Judge Donohue granted the prayer of the petitioner.

SELLING ONE HUNDRED LOCOMOTIVES.

The suit of Thomas M. Tyng against Matthew Baird and others was brought before Judge Donohue in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, on a motion to have a Referee appointed in the place of the former Referee, Theron R. Strong, who died recently. Judge Donohue granted the motion, and appointed William G. Choate as such Referee. The suit is brought for the recovery of about $250,000 on an alleged contract for the sale of 100 locomotives. After the former Referee had decided in favor of the defendants in the action a motion to open the report, so as to let in additional testimony was granted. According to the order of appointment of Mr. Choate as Referee he is directed to use the testimony taken on the former reference.

COURT NOTES.

John Muller, a vagrant, who broke into the premises of Robert J. Slater, No. 14 Perry street, and stole a coat, pleaded guilty yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions, and was sentenced by Judge Gildersleeve to five years in State Prison.

Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, set aside the service of the summons in the case of Martha Atkinson against John Pendo. The Plaintiff brought the action to recover $10,000 for an alleged forcible outrage of her person by the defendant.

Henry Kelly, of No. 332 West Twenty-seventh street, one of two burglars who broke into the shoe-store of Michael Larey, No. 415 Ninth avenue, pleaded guilty yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. Judge Gildersleeve sent him to State Prison for 14 months.

In the case of John Kirkland against Sarah Barney Sturgis, in the Court of Arbitration, being a claim for commissions for procuring a loan of $25,000 on a mortgage of the building No. 84 Broadway, Judge Donohue has rendered a decision for the plaintiff for his services, but denies his application for $125 additional for further services.

James Smith and John Tierney, two youthful pickpockets, who stole a silk handkerchief from Miss Laura Ball, of Brooklyn, while that lady was walking on Broadway, pleaded guilty yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. Judge Gildersleeve sentenced Smith to three years in State Prison, and Tierney to two years in the same institution.

Augustus Meyer, alias Hildebrandt, alias Muller, alias Reinhardt, an incorrigible sneak thief, who has spent some six or seven terms on Blackwell's Island, was convicted of petit larceny by Assistant District Attorney Rollins yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. Judge Gildersleeve sent the thief back to his old quarters for six months.

The jury, before Judge Sedgwick, in Part I. of the Superior Court yesterday, gave a verdict of $1,000 in favor of the plaintiff in the suit of Rachel Van Dorn against the Central Park, East and North River Railroad Company. The plaintiff sued to recover $5,000 damages for a broken leg caused by being thrown to the ground in endeavoring to get off one of the defendants' cars.

On the 14th of January, 1876, a boatman named Joseph O'Donnell, living at No. 303 Front street, forged the name of Thomas J. Madge, No. 169 Front street, to a check for $2,000 on the Market National Bank. In Part I. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday, Assistant District Attorney Rollins accepted a plea of guilty from O'Donnell, and the prisoners was sentenced by Judge Gildersleeve to 18 months in State Prison.

The trial of the case of Cecilia Clarke against Cockerill & Spaulding was concluded by the dismissal of the complaint by Judge Van Brunt, in Part II. of the Supreme Court, yesterday. The suit was brought to recover damages occasioned by the falling of the wall of the house adjoining the plaintiff's residence. The wall in question was being taken down by the defendants, who were sub-contractors on the work. The dismissal of the complaint was for the reason that the defendants had no duty imposed on them to shore up the wall.

Judge Van Brunt, in Part II. of the Supreme Court, yesterday dismissed the complaint in the case of James McClelland against Theodore A. Havemeyer. The plaintiff is a machinist, and sued to recover damages for personal injuries received in repairing a pump machine in the defendant's sugar refinery. While engaged in the work it appears some one started the engine, and this caused the plaintiff's hand to be crushed. In answer the defendant alleged that the machine was started by a man appointed for that purpose by the plaintiff, and the defendant did not know of the man's incompetency.

HE "STOPPED AROUND THE OFFICE."

The suit of Patrick O'Connor against the Mayor, &c., was argued before the Supreme Court, General Term, yesterday, the decision being reserved. The plaintiff, it appeared, was formally employed as a water policeman in June, 1871, by the Commissioner of Public Works. He then reported for duty to the Clerk of the Croton Water Department, and was told there was nothing for him to do. He was, however, directed to "stop around the office," and continue reporting for duty from day to day. He kept on stopping around," and reported for duty doing anything else, until January, 1872. He was paid his salary at the rate of $33 33 per month until Oct. 1, 1871. His suit is to recover salary at the same rate for the months of October, November, and December, 1871. On the trial the plaintiff put in evidence the pay-roll of the department for the period named, on which his name appears with those of 89 other "water policemen." Underneath is the certificate of the Commissioner of Public Works, "that the services charged in the above roll were actually performed, and that the compensations paid are in accordance with law." The court dismissed from the bench on the ground that the head of the department had not certified that the work performed was necessary, as required by section 105 of the charter. The case came up on appeal yesterday, and was argued by W. L. Finley for the plaintiff, and D. J. Dean for the City.

SUIT ON AN ALLEGED WRONGFUL LEVY.

The trial of the case of John J. Betz against William C. Conner, Sheriff, and others, was begun before Judge Van Hoesen and a jury in Part I. of the Court of Common Pleas yesterday. The plaintiff in his complaint sets forth that he is a brewer, and that on March 15, 1876, Patrick F. Maguin issued an execution to the Sheriff against the property of one Michael Groh. The Sheriff, in spite of a notice from the plaintiff, proceeded, under the execution, to seize a lot of property whose ownership the plaintiff claimed. This property consisted of 1,800 barrels of beer, 15 barrels of present use beer, besides 87 hogsheads containing 200 barels of beer. The plaintiff claims the beer was damaged by being kept in the Sheriff's custody, and that his business was stopped for 21 days in consequence of the seizure. He seeks $50,000 damages. The Sheriff in his answer denies the allegations of the complaint. The other defendants, however, set up that the plaintiff is not a brewer, and did not own the beer, but that it was owned by Michael Groh, against whose property the execution was issued. The case is still on. Allison & Shaw appear for the plaintiff, and A. J. Vanderpool for the defendants.

CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD.

The trial of Jacob A. Van Volckenberg and George W. West, employes of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at the Cortlandt Street Ferry, charged with conspiracy to defraud, which has been on trial before Judge Sutherland, in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions, during the past 10 days, was concluded yesterday, as far as the testimony is concerned. Mr. John O. Mott, counsel for the defense, examined a number of witnesses, who testified that it was impossible, owing to the construction of the ticket collector's box, to count the number of persons passing through the ferry-house. The prisoners, Van Volkenberg and West, then took the stand and denied having ever defrauded or conspired to defraud the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. They also denied having seen Platner, the principal witness for the prosecution, on the 1st of August, or of having had any transactions with him in connection with the withholding and resale of ferry tickets. Mr. Charles W. Brooke, counsel for the railroad company, subjected the accused to a protracted and searching cross-examination, and produced testimony in rebuttal of that of the defendants. Mr. Mott then summed up the case for the defense, and will be followed to-day by Mr. Brooke.

SEVEN YEARS IN STATE PRISON.

On the 6th of December, Mrs. Mary Lloyd, of No. 466 Second avenue, left her apartments, and on returning discovered the presence of a burglar, who had packed up and assorted a quantity of valuable wearing apparel, which he was about to carry off. Mrs. Lloyd raised an alarm, whereupon the burglar rushed upon her, and savagely assaulted her. She bravely retained her hold of him, however, and he was finally arrested. On being taken to the station-house, he gave the name of James Madison. The injury and shock sustained by Mrs. Lloyd were so severe as to cause premature confinement, and she was confined to her room for several weeks. Madison was indicted for burglary and assault, and when the case was called for trial by Assistant District Attorney Rollins, in General Sessions, yesterday, the prisoner pleaded guilty. Judge Gildersleeve said that Madison had been guilty of a cowardly and most atrocious outrage, and sentenced him to seven years in State Prison.

A HIGHWAY ROBBER SENTENCED.

On the 14th of October, last James Colgan, a butcher, of Paterson, N. J., visited Washington Market, in this City, on business, and called at several saloons in the vicinity, where he drank pretty freely. In the course of his wanderings he fell in with a sporting character named Andrew Hanlon, who describes himself as a "speculator," living at No. 128 West Nineteenth street, and a man named Patrick Connors, both of whom drank with him, and introduced him to several saloons in the neighborhood of Houston street, Colgate finally becoming partially intoxicated, but perfectly conscious of his actions. After several hours spent in drinking, Hanlon and Connors procured a coach and invited Colgate to accompany them to a ball at the Central Park Garden. Colgate declined, but his "friends" overruled his objections, and forced him into the coach. On the trip up town the party stopped at several saloons, where more liquor was consumed at Colgate's expense. Colgate made several attempts to leave the coach, but was prevented by Hanlon, who forcibly held him back, and after driving for some time, the unwilling butcher found that he had passed the scene of the ball, and was being driven through Central Park. He there upon renewed his efforts to leave the coach, and succeeded in reaching the roadway. Connors, who sat on the box, immediately jumped down and attempted to force Colgate back into the coach, the door of which was then opened by Hanlon. Failing in his efforts to force Colgate to re-enter the coach, Connors seized the finger of the latter, on which was a ring containing three small diamonds, and placing it in his mouth, bit out the stones. Connors then jumped into the coach and drove off with his accomplice Hanlon, leaving Colgate standing in the middle of the park at 2 o'clock in the morning, despoiled of his diamonds. Connors was subsequently arrested, convicted of highway robbery, and sentenced by Recorder Hackett to 20 years in State Prison. Hanlon eluded the vigilance of the Police, for some time, but was finally captured and indicted, and in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday, Assistant District Attorney Rollins called him up for trial. The accused pleaded guilty to the offence, and Judge Gildersleeve sentenced him to 10 years in State Prison.

A LANDLORD AND TENANT CASE.

The case of Frank Schmits against Isaac Foster and others was tried before Judge Van Hoesen and a jury, in Part I. of the Court of Common Pleas yesterday. It appeared that the defendants were landlords of premises in this City, and that the plaintiff, desiring to open a grocery store, rented the store-floor and two bedrooms on the floor above, on May 19, 1876, for $21 50 per month. He paid the rent in advance for the month of June. The two bedrooms being empty, he moved his family and part of his furniture into them, placing the remainder in the yard until June 1, when he expected to get possession of the whole portion he had hired. A woman named Mrs. Miller was, at the time of the renting, in possession of the store and floor, and refused to go out. Of this the defendants had notice before June 1. The plaintiff claimed he had hired for one year while the defendants testified the agreement was that he was not to get possession until they had got Mrs. Miller out of the premises, and that the hiring was for one month only, or at most until the Fall, when the plaintiff said he would give up business and go to Europe. On June 1 Mrs. Miller would not move, and defendants brought three several dispossessing proceedings before they finally succeeded in putting her out. The plaintiff becoming tired of the delay, found another store and rooms, and moved out of the premises of the defendants on June 20. He brought his action for damages for breach of the agreement to give him title and possession on June 1, seeking to recover the rent paid the expenses of moving, and the difference between the rent agreed to be paid for defendants' store and rooms and their rental value. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for the sum of $85 damages, exclusive of costs and disbursements. A. Stern, the counsel for defendants, made a long argument to set aside the verdict, and for a new trial upon exceptions taken during the trial to the evidence and the Judge's charge, claiming that if the jury believed the defendants acted in good faith, and without fraud, the damages were only the money paid, and that the plaintiff could recover nothing for the value of the lease or the bargain he had lost. George F. Langbein, the plaintiff's counsel, answered in an elaborate argument, insisting that the Judge had made no errors in his rulings, nor in his charge to the jury; that the evidence showed perverseness and bad faith in the defendants, as they had refused to give the plaintiff possession, and, through their fault, negligence, and delay, the plaintiff could not get possession, and had to seek and move into other premises. The Judge took the papers, reserving his decision on the motion.

A FUND IN A RECEIVER'S HANDS.

Oakes A. Ames and Oliver Ames recovered a judgment in the Supreme Court, yesterday, against Spencer H. Smith and Joseph A. Seaver. The defendants it appears made an assignment to James T. Smith on Sept. 30, 1875. Prior to the assignment Spencer H. Smith was the owner of a seat in the Stock Exchange, which was sold. After the payment of liens, &c., there remained $2,070 93 from the proceeds of the sale. The Referee appointed a supplementary proceedings against the defendants took possession of the above amount. The plaintiffs sought by motion before Judge Donohue yesterday to compel the Receiver to apply the money in his hands toward the payment of the judgment they have against the defendants. Judge Donohue denied the motion, however, it appearing that there are conflicting claims to the fund.

NOTICE.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We cannot, under any circumstances, return rejected communications, nor can we undertake to preserve manuscripts.

We presume that with the people who have circulated reports about the contemplated resignation of the President of the Senate, the wish is father to the thought. The conscientious discharge of the duties of that office on the 14th of February will demand firmness, courage, and clearness of understanding. Mr. FERRY possesses them all, and people who would like to see a more ductile officer discharging the constitutional functions of the Vice President of the United States will be disappointed. It would be well for the country if all the colleagues of Mr. FERRY were as firmly impressed with the constitutional limitations on their interference with the counting of the Electoral votes as he is with the obligations imposed on him by his oath of office in regard to that highly important transaction.

We are glad to learn of the inaccuracy of the report from Washington which represented the House Committee on Pacific Railroads as unanimous in support of the Texas Pacific job. Whatever the Democratic members may be willing to do in obedience to the orders of Messrs SCOTT and HUNTINGTON, the proposal to fasten upon the national Treasury the payment of interest for fifty years on a hundred millions or more of bonds was steadily opposed in the committee by some of its members, and will be as steadily resisted when the bill comes before the House. So far, this is satisfactory information. If the hostility of the country to all forms of subsidy is to be disregarded, and if the public credit is to be endangered by pledging it for the benefit of railroad schemes, let the responsibility rest wholly upon Democratic shoulders.

In New-Hampshire the Democrats appear to be worried what to do with MARCY. MARCY is a rich shipbuilder of Portsmouth. When he is a candidate for anything on the Democratic ticket, he gives liberally for "the cause," as they say. When he is not a candidate, he is not the generous patriot which he might have been under other circumstances. When he was in Congress—during the war—he was a copperhead of the most cantankerous kind. Last year he was nominated for Governor by his party, and was beaten on his slender but unsavory Congressional record. He is again a candidate for the nomination by the Democratic Convention which meets at Concord to-day. There is some opposition to him on account of his "advanced years." His friends claim there is a conspiracy against him to secure the nomination of some younger man, Prof. SANBORN, of Dartmouth, being one of these. The party do not want MARCY, but they want his money. The solution of this dilemma will be awaited with considerable interest. The Republican candidate is Mr. B. F. PRESCOTT, the present efficient Secretary of State. The Republicans to-day nominate a candidate for Congress from the Second District, and seem to be embarrassed with a richness of material from which to choose.

The report on the condition of the prisons of the State by Messrs. TOUSEY, NIVEN, and PILLSBURY, will be found in our columns this morning. It will not be found dry or unprofitable reading. It shows very clearly how the "spoils system" in this branch of the public service has worked, and how costly it has been. Bad discipline, or no discipline at all, demoralization, the spread of crime instead of its suppression, and a large burden on the Treasury—these are the practical results of the interference of partisan politicians in the management of our prisons. The State has been plundered without mercy, the criminals have been constantly degraded and rendered more dangerous to society. It is evident that a radical reform is necessary, and it is to be hoped that it will be carried out under the provisions of the amended Constitution. The first requisite, and an absolute one, will be that the Superintendent of Prisons shall be perfectly free from political pressure in every department of his work, and particularly in his appointments.

There are indications that Turkey will now yield to the pressure brought upon her, and will accept the latest ultimatum of the powers. If this should be the result of the present debate, Turkey may yet claim that she has got off with far better terms than were sought to be forced upon her. According to yesterday's dispatches, the conference has abandoned nearly all of the objectionable features of what was called the ultimatum. The only contested power left in the final propositions was that which provided for a foreign commission to supervise the reforms in the Christian provinces. Even this was softened and modified. To be sure, Turkey has continually protested against this proposed commission as a violation of the sovereignty of the Government of the Sublime Porte. But if this were given up, the situation would be almost exactly as it was when the conference began its sessions. The new Constitution, which has been proclaimed in the meantime, is not a practical reform, though on paper it may seem a radical and important one. If anything is to be accomplished, it must be under the supervision of the great powers.

As the State Superintendent of Insurance is known to be engaged in an investigation of the various life companies, the resolution adopted by the Assembly yesterday, on the motion of Mr. BIXBY, may at first sight seem superfluous. It is, on the contrary, urgently required, and we trust that the Superintendent will promptly act upon it. The inquiries ordinarily conducted relate solely to solvency. With the case of the Security fresh before the public, it is to be hoped that the officers of the department will act upon a juster conception of their duties, and will test the accuracy of the companies' statements, as well as the quality of their assets and the soundness of their valuations. Still there will remain a wide field of investigation, embracing the question of economy in management. If a company is solvent, and its statement bona fide, the law as administered at Albany is satisfied. The Superintendent is sometimes satisfied with statements which are obviously incomplete, as, for example, when a company omits the detailed enumeration of its mortgages which is included in the returns called for under the law. Of the vital element of expense he takes no cognizance. There may be enormous unexplained items of expenditure in the accounts rendered, but they pass his eyes unchallenged. He requires no discrimination between the cost of managing old business and the cost of acquiring new, and thus the companies are enabled to conceal the extravagant percentages allowed for the introduction of lives. He does not attempt to trace out the miscellaneous disbursements, and so imposes no check upon the indefensible methods by which the officers of certain companies have been able to largely increase their regular compensation. With Mr. BIXBY'S resolution before him, the Superintendent will probably hereafter take cognizance of these and kindred points in the business of life insurance.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL FUNCTION OF THE VICE PRESIDENT.

A letter from an eminent publicist, which will be found in our columns to-day, brings into clear relief certain essential points relating to the duties in regard to the counting of the Electoral vote imposed by the Constitution on the President of the Senate. These points will not be precisely new to the readers of THE TIMES, but they are presented in the letter referred to with a degree of fullness and force which ought to secure for them general attention. One fact is incidentally alluded to in this communication which deserves somewhat extended notice. Several inquirers into the question of who shall count the vote appear to have been struck with the importance of this point, and it is likely to be prominently brought out in the debates in Congress on the problem which is now engaging the attention of the country. It is briefly as follows:

The committee of eleven of the Federal Convention, to which was referred on Aug. 31, 1787, "the postponed part of the Constitution," made a report on Sept. 4, in which occurred the following language in regard to the counting of the Electoral vote: "The President of the Senate shall in that house open all the certificates, and the votes shall be then and there counted." On Sept. 5 this part of the report was discussed, and it appears that "on several motions the words 'in presence of the Senate and House of Representatives' were inserted after the word 'counted.'" The order of the words was slightly modified before being placed on the journal, since it appears there precisely as it finds a place in the Constitution: "The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted." It is tolerably plain that amid all the alterations of phraseology the chief anxiety of the founders was to clearly announce the main proposition that the President of the Senate should open the certificates and count the vote. To remedy any ambiguity on this score in the language of the committee of eleven was the obvious intent of the amendment made "on several motions," and the form finally adopted was as clearly meant to show that, in opening the certificates and counting the votes, the President of the Senate had to discharge a constitutional function which both houses were, indeed, invited to inspect, but with which they could not interfere. Nothing could well have been further from the intention of the framers of the Constitution than, by a slight verbal amendment, and without debate, suggestion, or motion of any kind, to work so vital a change in the mode of counting the votes, or to transfer that power and duty from the President of the Senate to the Senate and House of Representatives if they could agree.

The obvious purpose of the convention is further shown in the resolution adopted by the members on Sept. 17, that when the House and Senate should be convened, after the Constitution had been adopted, the Senate should choose a President for the sole purpose of receiving, opening and counting the votes for President. The President of the Senate is usually the Vice President of the United States, elected by the people thereof, and not a Senator. He derives his powers from the Constitution, and not from the Senate. That body can neither add to nor detract from his authority, nor can it relieve him from the performance of any duty the Constitution may have imposed on him. One of his conceded powers is to preside over the Senate; another is to open the certificates containing the Electoral vote. The Democratic theory is that with the unsealing of the certificates the power of the Vice President ends. It would seem to follow that before any count is made the two houses must agree. In the event of a failure to agree, the President of the Senate would evidently be compelled to hold the unsealed certificates indefinitely, or to throw them away as waste paper. Those who believe that the framers of the Constitution left the way open for any such piece of absurdity as that, must have a very low opinion of their understanding.

All the Democratic interpretations of the language of the Constitution and the practice of its authors in the matter of counting the Electoral vote aim at superseding the constitutional power of the Vice President, by an exercise of usurped powers by members of Congress. In other words, an officer specially intrusted with the duty of counting the votes, is to be replaced by men who are constitutionally excluded from being Electors, and against whose possible influence over the choice of the States the framers of the Constitution were evidently very desirous to guard. The more the whole question is discussed, the more general will be the agreement of the intelligent majority of the people with the conclusion reached by Chancellor KENT, that, in the absence of legislation, the President of the Senate counts the vote and determines the result—the Senate and House of Representatives being present merely as witnesses of the transaction.

THE SILVER SCHEME AGAIN.

The silver party, led and officered by the Silver Ring, has captured the Chairman and, apparently, a majority of the members of the Senate Finance Committee. Yesterday the committee reported the Bland bill, without recommendation, as it left the House, providing for unlimited issue and unqualified legal tender. Our dispatches express the opinion that this defeats the bill for this session, and it probably does; but it secures a place for it on the calendar, and has a very different effect on the ultimate fate of the bill from that which would have followed from an adverse report. At the same time Mr. SHERMAN announces that in due order he will propose a substitute for the Bland bill, which will be found in the proceedings of Congress. If the Bland bill is practically dead, then Mr. SHERMAN'S substitute is a gratuitous surrender, so far as he is concerned, to the pernicious principle of that bill. There is hardly any essential difference between the Bland act and the Sherman proposition. The latter makes silver a legal tender "to the same extent and for the same purposes as United States notes;" provides for the redemption of the notes in silver on demand, and makes the notes thus redeemed a part of the sinking fund. There is also a perfunctory clause authorizing the President to appoint Commissioners to any international convention or conference which may be called for the purpose of adopting a ratio or relative valuation in the gold and silver coinages of the different countries of the world.

So Mr. SHERMAN takes his stand openly on the side of the Silver Ring. There is no longer any pretense of trying to defeat their measure by amending it, by imposing a limit on the legal-tender quality, or by limiting coinage. In time of profound peace, without the slightest necessity in the situation of the Government or of the commerce of the country, Mr. SHERMAN proposes an act which in principle and possible consequences is as unwarrantable and as mischievous as a new issue of legal-tender notes. He proposes to substitute for the notes, which have shown great stability for the past two years, and which have already appreciated to within a narrow margin of gold, legal tender in silver, which during the past six months has fluctuated nearly twenty-five per cent., in which changes of value have defied prediction, and the product of which is known to be largely controlled by a set of determined and unscrupulous speculators. We do not perceive much difference between a paper currency subject to the whims of Congress and a silver currency subject to the unknown and shifting influences of the foreign market, aggravated by the designs of mining speculators. The former has lately shown some tendency toward steadiness, and, so far as can now be seen, is in a fair way to become as good as gold. Silver has been tossed hither and yon by influences to which there is little clue, which the ablest experts have been unable to trace, which may recur with even greater violence in the immediate future.

Mr. SHERMAN'S provision for the redemption of the United States notes in silver on demand implies that silver is likely to remain more valuable than paper, as it now is. Certainly there would be no redemption unless this relation continued. But there is so little certainty of its continuance, and so much likelihood that it will not continue, if once we make silver a legal tender, and invite the holders of the European stock to send their silver to us, that the redemption feature may be regarded as in effect, if not in intent, a sham. It is a mere gilding of the pernicious proposition for a practically unlimited silver legal tender.

Equally unsubstantial is Mr. SHERMAN'S proposition regarding an International Coinage Convention. There might be some sense in sending Commissioners to such a convention if our own course were yet undetermined. There could be none in first plunging into the abyss and then appointing Commissioners to consult as to where we were likely to bring up. Mr. SHERMAN proposes to take part in a convention, the only possible purpose of which must be to examine as to the feasibility of a general agreement as to a ratio between silver and gold, and to have our Commissioners announce that we have solved that question for ourselves, and that by our law one ounce of gold is to be worth 15.98 of silver, whatever the rest of the world may say. Such action would only make us ridiculous. The warmest advocates of the remonetization of silver in Europe would condemn our action as arbitrary, ignorant, reckless, and foolish. The advocates of a gold standard, such as we ourselves practically employed for forty years, would not spare us. So empty, indeed, does this part of Mr. SHERMAN'S bill seem, that we can only regard it, like the redemption feature, as in effect a sham. The friends of a sound currency would do well to keep a close watch both on the Bland bill and on Mr. SHERMAN'S substitute. Improbable as is the passage of either, it is plain that the Silver Ring has scored another point, of which it will not be slow to seize the advantage.

THE DICE-BOX VS. THE BALLOT-BOX.

The argument in favor of the extra-constitutional commission for the counting of the Presidential vote proposed by the committee of the Senate, is that each party will have an equal chance, or an equality of risks, by the dice-box system. The same is true if the question is referred to the Independent Order of Red Men, or to any reputable base-ball or cricket club. No one knows how the Red Men or the cricketers stand politically, or how they voted at the last election. The element of uncertainty, so much valued by the compromising Senatorial mind, would here exist in all its vastness. There is one other possible reference by which the uncertainty of the decision might be increased and rendered more painful. The inimitable TOM CORWIN was wont to observe that the Almighty could foretell any future event except the verdict of a petty jury. Here is a hint that may be used by the compromisers of the Senate. Without compromising themselves too much, one of the thousand intelligent juries sitting on this day in the trial of cow and corn-fodder cases, could be selected by lot by some commission selected by lot, so that the lottery feature in the judgment rendered could be preserved in all its dubious and hazardous completeness. A plain man might object to so much circumlocution, when a shorter way is to flip coppers and be done with it. The children's method of drawing cuts to decide the main question at issue has the merit of directness. If the only problem is how to make the chances of each party for the Presidency precisely equal, the dice-box is probably the best substitue for the ballot-box yet invented.

But Congressional joint committees will find that there are 185 Electors, and considerably over 4,000,000 voters who will object to having their clear-sighted decision overruled by blind chance. They will think that the Chief Magistracy of the Republic is too exalted an office to be put up at a raffle. It is not clear that for the elected and the defeated candidates for the Presidency to toss pennies for the office would be exactly equitable. The proposition of the debtor against whom you have obtained a judgment for a large sum, to decide whether he will pay you or not by tossing up, would hardly be appreciated. However, it is proposed that the man who won at the last election shall be placed on the plane of equality with the man who lost, and be given an equal chance to win what he already has.

The people, through their chosen Electors, some weeks since elected Gov. HAYES to the Presidency. It remains only for the officer named in the Constitution to open the Electors' votes and formally declare the result, as his predecessors have done on twenty-two occasions before. This is a simple constitutional proceeding, with which casting lots and lottery schemes have nothing to do. That the defeated party should wish to have one more chance for success, to play one more game, is quite comprehensible. A foot race between the candidates for the Presidency, or a contest or wager of any kind, would give some hope to the vanquished of escaping the humiliation of defeat. Any method except the constitutional method, and any plan except that pointed out by precedent and law, would doubtless be gladly seized upon by the unsuccessful claimant.

To have the vote counted by such life-long Democrats as Justices CLIFFORD and FIELD, or by the City Council of New-York, would, doubtless, be better for a claimant with a bad case than to have it done as the fathers and founders performed this ministerial work. The only dangerous encouragement given to the scheme to go outside the Constitution, at a time when that instrument is our only safety, is by men who, having once, through lack of investigation, blundered into a false position, persist in continuing to blunder to the end. It has happened that men have preserved their consistency and lost their reputation for intelligence. Not consistency or persistency in the wrong, but capacity to get right, is most to be commended. If members of Congress utter the words of wisdom and statesmanship now, they will be pardoned for having been less wise ten years ago.

MR. FIELD'S BOOMERANG.

Gen. B. F. BUTLER, we believe, has the credit of inventing what may be called the accusation by innuendo. At least, it is certain that when he was a leading criminal lawyer in Massachusetts, and before he had manifested any aspirations for the honors of statesmanship, he employed this low art in the cases committed to him. In his hands the witnesses were prosecuted, not the criminal who was fortunate enough to secure him for a defender. Such was BUTLER'S reputation in Lowell, Mass., where he made his first step in fame, that a man who went into the witness-box to confront this terrible lawyer felt that he left his character behind him, though conscious of having lived an honest life. BUTLER began by "bully-ragging" a witness. To demoralize and utterly break him down, he accused him, by artful interrogatories, of every crime in the calendar. Once, when the Legislature of Massachusetts had under consideration the question of enjoining certain chemical works as a nuisance, an eminent chemist was brought forward as a witness on the side to which BUTLER, as counsel, was opposed. The "eminent criminal lawyer" by turns abused, insulted, and browbeat the eminent professor, and, at last, asked him if he had not, on a certain day, and in a certain place, accepted a certain sum of money for his professional opinion? The assemblage was simply horrified. The witness was a gentleman of high social standing, unblemished life, and world-wide renown. A white-haired Senator ventured to interpose that the witness was Prof. So-and-so of Harvard University. "Professor of Harvard!" thundered BUTLER, with cruel disdain. "Yes; we hanged one of those men the other day!" Prof. WEBSTER had lately been executed for the murder of Dr. PARKMAN.

Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD has been a diligent student of the methods of BUTLER. Like BUTLER, he has a heavy hand, a brutal touch, but none of the subtle refinement and keen incisiveness which are the characteristics of genius. When roaring, terrorizing, and the simulating of honest indignation are required, Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD is fully equipped for every emergency. Mr. FIELD has carried into the Congress of the United States the arts of a Tombs lawyer. It is a matter of common repute that he was elected to Congress to fill the vacancy in the Seventh New-York District at the express desire of Mr. TILDEN. It was found that Mr. HEWITT was too weak, or too fastidious to be the swaggerer and bully who was required. Mr. FIELD was accordingly elected, and put on the Committee of Privileges and Elections, where he has at once distinguished himself. Mr. TWEED, with fine magnanimity, has lent FIELD to TILDEN. The error of the attorney, however, is that he uses the same tactics in the case of his present client which he found so useful in the management of Mr. TWEED'S defense.

For example, when Secretary CHANDLER was before the committee the other day Mr. FIELD desired the Secretary to tell what had happened in Cabinet councils. The witness refused. Then, with that well-known bellow which the opponents of the late JAMES FISK, Jr., know so well, he roared: "Did you, on the 8th of November, telegraph to Gov. STEARNS, [of Florida,] 'You must send couriers to every county and doctor the returns to show a majority for HAYES?'" It does not matter what the answer was. It does not matter that the witness denied all knowledge of such a dispatch, or of several other fictitious dispatches which the eminent criminal lawyer who represents Mr. TILDEN pretended to read off. The intention was to mislead the public, to create the impression on the minds of the jury—we mean the people—that the prosecution, represented by Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD, have on hand much damaging testimony, which the contumacy of the witness alone prevents from being dragged to the light. There is no such evidence. To say that this style of examination is base and sneaking is to speak of Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD in complimentary terms.

It is not, however, that it is base and mean that it has been abandoned. It happens that Republicans have also the same privilege of asking questions. Mr. FIELD'S colleagues were obliged to remind him that accusation by innuendo was a game that two could play at. The man who had propounded impertinent questions might be put on the stand and asked "Did you smother one of your mothers-in-law with an ironing-blanket and hide her remains under the coal-cellar?" Or, "Did you ever have a father, and did he sell charcoal?" Then again, some such witness as GWIN, commonly known as the Duke of Sonora, might be asked by the Senate committee, "Did you agree for a certain consideration to deliver to SAMUEL J. TILDEN the Electoral votes of California, Oregon, and Nevada?" Or, "Did you advise W. T. PELTON, W. S. ANDREWS, ABRAM S. HEWITT, and others, on the 26th of October, at the New-York Hotel, to bet on a Democratic majority in those States? And did you not say that things were 'fixed' in those States?" Or Mr. A. S. HEWITT might be asked, "Did you not, on the 16th of November, telegraph to W. A. PIPER, San Francisco, that GROVER 'had been taken care of' and bets on Oregon were safe?" Or Mr. PELTON might be asked, "Did you not, with the assistance and connivance of W. S. ANDREWS, and other members of the so-called Bureau of Nincompoops, on Nov. 12, 13, and 14, send out a false and fraudulent return of the Florida election, all the figures of which were invented and wholly fictitious?" And "Were not these figures printed as telegraphic returns in the World and other Democratic newspapers, and editorially commented upon as such?" We have said enough to indicate how the policy of accusation by innuendo may operate as a boomerang. The colleagues of Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD have already seen the danger. They have shut up the eminent criminal lawyer.

THE BOSTON ARCHÆOLOGISTS.

The trophies of SCHLIEMANN disturb the sleep of the New-England antiquarians. A wild desire to go somewhere and dig up something is at present characteristic of every antiquarian, but the New-England lover of the antique is true to his protectionist prejudices, and prefers to dig at home rather than abroad. It is the opinion of leading Bostonians that the pauper antiquities of despotic Europe must not be permitted to flood the market and drive out American antiquities, and that true patriotism demands the exhumation of valuable archæological relics on this side of the Atlantic. Whereupon the Bostonians are now engaged in discussing the propriety of immediately digging up a set of choice antiquities, such as the Newport Mill and the Dighton Rock, and thus showing the world that New-England can hold her own in respect to archæology with either Greece or Troas.

The so-called Dighton Rock is a stone in the Taunton River covered with a quantity of well-defined scratches which local antiquarians, who are interested in the hotel business, call an inscription. This alleged inscription is absolutely undecipherable, and is hence said to be the work of early Norse explorers, who were deficient in education and consequently wrote very illegibly. If it is really a relic of the Norsemen, it is by far the oldest work of human hands to be found in New-England. The dates assigned to it by rival antiquarians differ to some extent, but all agree that it is even older than Mr. ADAMS, and that it was in existence before the first voyage of CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. Mr. OLE BULL, the eminent violinist, is so fully convinced that the inscription was written, as an advertisement, by an eminent Norse fiddler that, some time ago, he induced a learned Danish society to buy it, rock and all; and had it not been for the noble conduct of certain Bostonians, who induced the Danes to relinquish their purchase, the inscription would now be in Copenhagen, and the learned Danish society hotly quarreling over its meaning.

The other day the Bostonian archæologists, including Gov. RICE and a prominent manufacturer of sewing-machines, held a meeting, and discussed the Dighton Rock with a degree of enthusiasm seldom displayed since Mr. Pickwick discovered his ancient inscription at Ipswich. One learned Archæologist proved that the inscription was of Norse origin, inasmuch as several antiquarians in Denmark and in England, who have never seen it, are inclined to believe that it must have been made either by the Norsemen or by some other person or persons unknown. He also urged that the man who made the inscription might possibly have been called Eric, or that at all events some other Norseman may have possessed that name, and that hence a statue of the hypothetical Eric ought to be erected at once. Another archæologist asserted that the Dighton Rock was the only inscribed rock in New-England, and that this fact clearly demonstrated that the Norsemen were the first human beings who ever landed on this continent. Having thus settled the question of the true nature of the marks on the Dighton Rock, the learned archæologists were in a glow of happiness and enthusiasm, and would doubtless have proceeded to appoint a committee to solicit subscriptions in New-York and Philadelphia for money wherewith to erect a statue to Eric, had not a profane and skeptical person, who was unfortunately present, rose up and indulged in remarks which, like the colored minister's sermon against chicken-stealing, cast a gloom over the meeting.

This objectionable person began by boldly denying that the inscription in question was the only one in New-England. He asserted that not only were there several such inscriptions within twenty miles of Dighton, but that quantities of them were to be found in Maine, Vermont, New-York, and Pennsylvania. Furthermore, he claimed that these inscriptions were the work of Indians, and that they probably commemorated successful scalping expeditions against the Pilgrim Fathers or other barbaric events of contemporaneous aboriginal interest. Finally, he insisted that there was not a shadow of evidence connecting the Norsemen with the Dighton Rock, and was evidently inclined to think that Norsemen who could not write their own language would never have been guilty of the folly of making unintelligible scratches in order to appal the Indians with a pretense of vast literary skill.

In all probability the depressed archæologists would have dispersed in silence, and mourned in private over the destruction of their antiquarian hopes had not Mr. OLE BULL dropped his violin and courageously rushed to the defense of the Norseman. He exhibited to the unbelieving scoffer a photograph of the Dighton inscription, and solemnly asked him if he knew what it meant? The scoffer calmly replied that he did not, and was thereupon crushed by being advised not to criticise those who did. Inasmuch as no human being has ever been able to translate the inscription, the boldness of Mr. BULL'S retort was really sublime, and it rendered the scoffer temporarily dumb with amazement. The archæologists thereupon seized the opportunity to adjourn, and in all probability they will soon meet in secret, free from the presence of wicked skeptics, and solemnly resolve that the Dighton Rock was originally scratched by Norsemen who invented a new and intricate language, for that occasion only.

If they are wise they will refrain from digging up the rock and placing it where the heartless world can gaze upon it. Sooner or later Mr. ADAMS will see it and will remember that he made the inscription during his pre-historic youth by splitting kindling wood with a hatchet and carelessly permitting the blade to come in contact with the rock. If, however, they are determined to dig it up, let them send for Dr. SCHLIEMANN, and, after explaining to him that they wish to find the skeleton of Eric, together with a tin box containing a full history of the inscription, put him in charge of the affair. He will promptly discover anything within the bounds of reason, and the myth of the Norse explorer will thus be converted into genuine history, and skeptics and scoffers be permanently put to shame.

THE VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

RICHMOND, Jan. 16.—The third annual convention of the Young Men's Christian Association of Virginia closed its session in the Table Street Presbyterian Church at Petersburg, Sunday evening. Rev. T. D. Ransom, of Staunton, presided. The International Executive Committee were represented by Mr. George A. Hall and Mr. Thomas K. Cree, of New York, and Gen. George D. Johnson, of Alabama. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Dr. Reed and Rev. Dr. Jones, of Richmond, and others. Mr. Cree spoke upon association work, and the importance of an efficient State organization. Mr. Hall gave two Bible readings, and presented the work of the International Committee. Gen. Johnson spoke of the importance of work among the colored young men. Resolutions were adopted commending the work of the International Committee and the work among the colored young men. Resolutions were also adopted expressing sorrow for the death of Mr. Bliss, the sweet singer, and of condolence with the relatives and friends of the family.

LARGE DEFALCATIONS DISCOVERED.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 16.—An examination of the affairs of the late Major Gen. John P. Bankson reveals defalcations or discrepancies in his accounts amounting to $150,000. A number of city merchants and brokers are losers in amounts varying from $3,000 to $30,000; but the Hanuls Distilling Company, of which Gen. Bankson was Secretary and Treasurer, lose nothing, as every official transaction of the company was required to be countersigned by the President and approved by the Board of Directors.

A REQUISITION REFUSED.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 16.—The Governor to-day refused to grant an application for a requisition for the return of John A. Bigler, late Vice President of the City Bank, of this city, from San Francisco, on the ground that an effort was being made to use the criminal law to enforce the payment of a civil liability.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT'S DUTY

THE CONSTITUTION REQUIRES HIM TO COUNT THE VOTE.

THE FRAMERS OF THE INSTRUMENT EXPOUND ITS MEANING—THE RESOLUTION WHICH THEY ADOPTED FOR THE INSTRUCTION OF THE FIRST CONGRESS—NO POSSIBLE CHANCE FOR DEMOCRATIC QUIBBLING—CHANCELLOR KENT'S CONSTRUCTION OF THE LANGUAGE—THE PRECEDENTS CONCLUSIVE.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your columns have contained, from time to time, a very able exposition of the pending difficulty in counting and declaring the votes of the Electoral Colleges for President and Vice President of the United States, and I do not wonder at your deciding that the whole question has been fairly and fully presented, and, therefore, declining further communications on the subject. And yet, knowing, as you do, my long familiarity with constitutional questions, and that I have spent more than half a century in learning how to put a simple question in a manner best calculated to facilitate honest-minded but busy men in arriving at the truth, I hope you will permit me very briefly to review the requirements of the Constitution and the practice under it, as inaugurated by the very men who framed that instrument, and, of course, were the best qualified expounders of their own work.

The Constitution requires as follows:

"The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted. The person having the greatest number of votes shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed," &c.

It will be perceived that this clause does not, in so many words, declare who shall count the votes, but the conclusion is irresistible and a legal inference, that the Vice President, who opens and declares the votes, of necessity counts them, in order that he may declare the result of the election.

On this subject the late Chancellor Kent, than whom there can be no higher authority on the legal construction of language, in his celebrated Commentaries, vol. 1, page 227, says:

"The Constitution does not expressly declare by whom the votes are to be counted. In the case of questionable votes, and a closely-contested election, this power may be all-important; and, I presume, in the absence of all legislative provision on the subject, that the President of the Senate counts the votes and determines the result, and that the houses are present only as spectators, to witness the fairness and accuracy of the transaction, and to act only if no choice be made by the Electors."

CONCLUSIVE AUTHORITY ON THE SUBJECT.

But there exists still higher and more conclusive authority in favor of this construction of the Constitution.

After the convention had finished and ordered to be engrossed their draft of the Constitution, and, as it appears, on the very day on which Washington, as their President, transmitted it to the Congress of the Confederacy, then in session, the omission in section 3 of article 2 of that instrument, to specifically name the Vice President as the party who was to count, as well as open and declare the votes of the Electoral Colleges, became apparent, and they at once proceeded to remedy the omission by the passage of the following resolution, on the 17th day of September, 1787, giving their opinion in regard to what should be the mode of proceeding by the first Congress under the Constitution to be adopted:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this convention that as soon as the conventions of nine States shall have ratified this Constitution, the United States in Congress assembled, should fix a day on which Electors should be appointed by the States which shall have ratified the same, and a day on which the Electors should assemble to vote for the President, and the time and place for commencing proceedings under this Constitution; that after such publication the Electors should be appointed and the Senators and Representatives elected; that Electors should meet on the day fixed for the election of President, and should transmit their votes, certified, signed, sealed, and directed as the Constitution requires, to the Secretary of the United States in Congress assembled; that the Senators and Representatives should convene at the time and place assigned; that the Senators should appoint a President of the Senate for the sole purpose of receiving, opening, and counting the votes for President, and that after he shall be chosen the Congress, together with the President, should, without delay, proceed to execute the Constitution."

By this act those who framed the Constitution virtually amended it, to gratify the scruples of those who foresaw the possibility of trouble from what might be construed into an omission; and, consequently, an official construction was put upon their work, after it had left their hands, which made it imperative that the Vice President, or President of the Senate, should count, as well as "open" and "declare" the votes of the Electoral Colleges.

I might stop here, and with perfect justice declare that this official construction of their own work by the identical body who framed the Constitution, after that instrument had passed from their control, on the 17th of September, 1787, settles the whole question, and that the Constitution, in so many words, makes it the imperative duty of the President of the Senate to "open, count, and declare who has been elected President and Vice President."

ACTION OF THE FIRST CONGRESS.

But let us inquire how the first Congress of the United States assembled under the Constitution understood and obeyed its mandate.

"In the Senate of the United States, at the first session of the first Congress, began at the City of New-York, March 4, 1789. Monday, April 13. (Annals of Congress, 1st Cong., vol. 1, pp. 16-18.)

The credentials of the members present being and ordered to be filed, the Senate proceeded, by ballot, to the choice of a President, for the sole purpose of opening and counting the votes for President of the United States.

John Langdon was elected.

Ordered, That Mr. Ellsworth inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is formed; that a President is elected for the sole purpose of opening the certificates and counting the votes of the Electors of the several States in the choice of a President and Vice President of the United States; and that the Senate is now ready, in the Senate Chamber, to proceed, in the presence of the House, to discharge that duty; and that the Senate have appointed one of their members to sit at the Clerk's table and make a list of the votes as they shall be declared; submitting it to the wisdom of the House to appoint one or more of their members for the like purpose.

Mr. Ellsworth reported that he had delivered the message, and Mr. Boudinot, from the House of Representatives, informed the Senate that the House is ready forthwith to meet them to attend the opening and counting of the votes of the Electors of the President and Vice President of the United States.

The Speaker and the members of the House of Representatives attended in the Senate Chamber, and the President elected for the purpose of counting the votes declared that the Senate and House of Representatives had met, and that he, in their presence, had opened and counted the votes of the Electors for President and Vice President of the United States, which were as follows: * * *

Whereby it appeared that George Washington, Esq., was elected President, and John Adams, Esq., Vice President of the United States of America.

Mr. Madison, from the House of Representatives, thus addressed the Senate:

Mr. President: I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that the House have agreed that the notifications of the election of the President and of the Vice President of the United States should be made by such persons, and in such manner, as the Senate shall be pleased to direct."

To this action of the Senate, the response of the House was as follows:

"In House of Representatives, Monday, Feb. 11, 1793. (Annals of Congress, 2d Cong., p. 873.)

Mr. William Smith, from the committee appointed on the part of the House, jointly with a committee appointed on the part of the Senate, to ascertain and report a mode of examining the votes for President and Vice President of the United States, and for other purposes expressed in the resolution of the 5th instant, made a report, which was twice read and agreed to by the House, as follows:

That the two Houses shall assemble in the Senate Chamber on Wednesday next, at 12 o'clock; that two persons be appointed Tellers on the part of this House to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote and the persons elected, to both houses assembled, as aforesaid; which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice President, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the journal of the two houses."

It will thus be perceived that the Senate of the United States at their first session under the Constitution, obeyed implicitly the official construction placed upon that instrument an

the 17th of September, 1787, by the very body that framed it, and that their first official act was, "to proceed by ballot to the choice of a President, for the sole purpose of opening and counting the votes for President of the United States."

Their second official act was to inform the House of Representatives that they had elected a President "for the sole purpose of opening the certificates and counting the votes of the Electors of the several States in the choice of a President and Vice President of the United States;" that they are ready to receive the House in the Senate Chamber; and also, that they have appointed one of their members—to do what? "To sit at the Clerk's table to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared—submitting to the wisdom of the House to appoint one or more of their members for the like purpose."

Mark the fact, that the House is not asked or required also to appoint a teller or tellers as a matter of duty or of importance, implying that they have official and constitutional duties to discharge, but expressly declaring that they are only "to sit at the Clerk's table, to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared;" and that the House may or may not, at their pleasure, appoint one or more of their members for the same purpose, and none other.

How ridiculous, then, the attempt to make the tellers important official persons, who have grave and responsible constitutional duties to perform, when in fact they have their origin in a simple act of courtesy on the part of the Senate to the House, and by that body so considered and accepted. The Constitution simply required the presence of the two houses to witness the performance of his constitutional duties by the President of the Senate, but gives neither house of Congress any power over the President of the Senate in the performance of his prescribed duty. The Senate, however, advised the President to notify the Vice President of his election, prescribing the form of the notification to be used, in which the President of the Senate is made to say: "The undersigned, President of the Senate, did, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and count all the votes for President and Vice President," &c.

THE PROCEEDINGS IN LATER CONGRESSES.

The proceedings at the second and third elections of President and Vice President were in all respects similar to the proceedings at the first election of President, except that at the third election the House of Representatives made an abortive attempt to interfere with the rights of the Senate, and the duties of their President in certifying to the Vice President the fact of his election according to the terms of the Constitution, and in the words of the convention which framed that instrument. This attempt, under the inspiration of the Democracy, who had got possession of the House, was speciously covered up by a resolution that the President of the United States, and not the President of the Senate, should hereafter notify the Vice President of his election. The Senate discovered the game of the Democracy, and promptly took action as follows:

"In Senate, Feb. 10, 1797.

Mr. Sedgwick, from the Committee of Conference above mentioned, reported that the following resolution should be adopted by the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the notification of the election of Vice President elect be made by such person and in such manner as the Senate may direct.

On motion [from the House of Representatives] that it be Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate (in such manner as he shall judge most proper) to the person elected Vice President of the United States, for the term of four years to commence 4th day of March next, information of his said election."

It passed in the negative.

Ordered, That the resolution this day agreed to by the House of Representatives, relative to the notification of the election of the Vice President elect, be referred to Messrs. Mason, Hillhouse, and Sedgwick, to consider and report thereon to the Senate.

Mr. Mason reported from the committee last appointed, and the report being read, was amended and adopted as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause to be transmitted to Thomas Jefferson, Esq., of Virginia, Vice President elect of the United States, notification of his election to that office, and that the President of the Senate do make out and sign a certificate in the words following:

Be it known that the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, being convened in the City of Philadelphia, on the second Wednesday of February, in the year of our Lord 1797, the underwritten Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate did, in the presence of the said Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and count all the votes of the Electors for a President and for a Vice President, by which it appears that Thomas Jefferson, Esq., was duly elected, agreeably to the Constitution, Vice President of the United States of America.

In witness thereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal, this 10th day of February, 1797.

JOHN ADAMS.

Ordered, That the Secretary lay this resolution before the President of the United States."

And precisely similar certificates by the President of the Senate, declaring in every case that he, the President of the Senate, had opened and counted all the votes, were issued in 1789, 1793, 1797, 1801, 1805, 1809, 1813, and 1817; and it was only in 1821, when the House of Representatives claimed to discuss the Electoral vote of Missouri, that the Senate ceased to exercise its right to issue a certificate, setting forth that its President had exercised his constitutional duty to open the certificates and count the votes of the Electoral College and declare the result.

In 1801 occurred the difficulty between Jefferson and Burr under the Constitution as it was originally framed—each claiming the Presidency. Consequently, the two houses of Congress passed, and in 1804 the several States adopted, the twelfth amendment of the Constitution, which is now in force, and under which the recent Presidential election took place. And on reference to that amendment it will be perceived that, so far as the opening the certificates and counting the Electoral votes are concerned, both Congress and the people, through their State Legislatures, adhered to the identical language of the Constitution of 1787. That is to say, the amendment, as well as the article amended, directs that "the President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted."

And why was this? Because the convention which framed the Constitution, on the 17th of September 1787, after that instrument had been engrossed and was in the hands of their President, George Washington, to be laid before the Congress of the Confederacy, passed a resolution, construing article 11, section 23, of the Constitution, and directing the President of the Senate to count the votes, as well as open the certificates, of the Electoral Colleges, and declare who was elected President. And also, because the full meaning of article 11 had been declared by the practice of the Senate, its President, and the House of Representatives, in the election of George Washington, in 1789 and 1793, of John Adams in 1797, and of Thomas Jefferson in 1801.

THE FRAMERS OF THE CONSTITUTION ITS BEST EXPOUNDERS.

No intelligent person who claims to be honest will pretend to deny that those who framed the Constitution were the best expounders of its meaning, and the convention which framed that instrument, on the very day of its adjournment, Sept. 17, 1787, gave their explanation of the meaning of article 11 in their recommendation to the first Congress to assemble under it, how to proceed. Congress obeyed that recommendation in 1789, 1793, and 1797, and when, in 1801, the House of Representatives presumed to interfere with the action of the Senate, it promptly rebuked that body, and ordered the President of the Senate to certify to Mr. Jefferson that he, the President of the Senate, had, "in the presence of both houses of Congress, opened all the certificates, and counted all the votes of the Electors for President and Vice President," and that Thomas Jefferson, Esq., was duly elected Vice President of the United States; and the House of Representatives submitted to the rebuke, and promptly repealed its resolution depriving the President of the Senate of his constitutional right and conferring it upon the President of the United States!

And from that time until 1821 the Senate never failed to order its President to issue to any Vice President elect a certificate, similar in all respects to that issued by John Adams to Thomas Jefferson.

I have thus, Mr. Editor, demonstrated to you and your readers that, by the Constitution, it is made the duty of the President of the Senate to open the certificates and count the votes of the Electoral Colleges. I have shown you that the convention which framed the Constitution so construed that instrument, and that they ordered the first Congress so to construe it. I have demonstrated to you, from Congressional records, that they and their successors did so construe it; and I have shown beyond cavil that such construction was in accordance with public opinion and the opinion of the framers of the Constitution, who, as members of Congress, were called upon to construe its provisions when it first went into operation. And I cannot better conclude than by quoting the following extract from the leading Democratic journal of this City, when claiming, and doubtless believing, because it had been so told, that all precedents are in favor of the Democratic assumptions:

"The existing forms [the twenty-second joint rule] originated and have expanded under notions of propriety and courtesy. They are of no obligation whatever and have no force. Abused as many of them have been in the sense of centralising power around the President, and investing him with attributes never contemplated by the Constitution, it might be well now to return to the plain modes of the fathers."

You will perceive that I have made no allusion to the Oregon trick to give Mr. Tilden an Electoral vote. I have not done so, simply because it is quite unworthy of reference, except to denounce it as a disgrace to all concerned, and because I do not believe there is an honest Democrat in Congress who, if elected President of the Senate, would deem it possible to open and count the Grover-Cronin Oregon fraudulent certificate of the action of the Electoral College of the State of Oregon.

JAMES WATSON WEBB.

THE NEW-JERSEY LEGISLATURE.

THE HOUSE COMMITTEES, AND WHO ARE ON THEM—THE RULES ADOPTED—THE UNITED STATES SENATORSHIP.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TRENTON, Tuesday, Jan. 16, 1877.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock this morning, and immediately afterward ordered an adjournment till to-morrow morning. The House held two sessions, but beyond the announcement by Speaker Rabe of his committees, and the introduction of one or two bills, no business of importance was transacted. At the morning session it was announced that Mr. Scovel was not able, on account of other engagements, to serve on the Committee on Rules, to which he had been appointed, and Mr. Lund was appointed to fill the vacancy. The only objection made to the adoption of the rules of the last House was that rule No. 19, precluding members from voting on matters in which they are personally interested, might cut Powers, Democrat, out of his right to vote on the already initiated contest by Hutchinson, his Republican competitor for his seat. Mr. Egan wanted the rule amended so that it would not affect Powers' right to vote; but the fact that a Democrat in Monmouth is contesting the seat of his Republican competitor, who now holds the place, being brought to the notice of the committee, it was concluded that, as the rule seemed to be a two-edged sword, cutting both ways, it was about as well to leave it in operation, and with a few unimportant changes, the House, on the recommendation of the committee, voted to adopt it, and with it all the rules under which the Assembly of last year acted. As soon as that had been done the Speaker announced the committees, a full list of which will be found annexed. The chairmanships are nearly evenly divided between the two parties—18 being given to the Democrats and 16 to the Republicans. It will be observed that Scovel, the nominee of the Republican caucus for the Speakership, gets the Chairmanship of the Judiciary Committee, while Howell, the leader of the Republican revolt, secures the Chairmanship of the Banks and Insurance Committee, which gives color to the story that Howell's defection is explained, measurably at least, by his relations with the Newark Mutual Company. The committees on Federal Relations, and on Militia, may, it is thought rise to National importance before the Presidential complications shall have been unraveled, and they were selected in that view. The Committee on Militia is led by Major Harris, who acquired his military title in the service of the late Confederacy. The Committee on Elections consists, as required by the amended rules, of three Democrats and three Republicans. That the committee should be non-partisan was part of the arrangement on the strength of which the four Republicans left the caucus last week.

The question of the selection of a United States Senator continues as heretofore to engage principally the attention of members. Nothing of an active nature has been done today by any of the candidates. The Democracy, however, took the matter into caucus this afternoon, and joint committees were appointed to fix a time for the holding of the joint caucus. The committee have since met and agreed, it is understood, to call a caucus for to-morrow evening. That may be regarded as a gain for McPherson, who, confident that he is now strong enough to overcome his enemies, is anxious to have the agony over as soon as possible. He is a politician of more than ordinary shrewdness; but objection is made that he is without the qualifications for the place to which he ambitiously aspires. It is also objected that he comes from Hudson County, which has already captured more than her share of legislative honors. It is also said that Senator Randolph, though residing at present in Morristown, is more intimately identified with Hudson than with Morris, and that if McPherson be chosen, Hudson will have both the seats of New-Jersey in the national Senate. But local preferences are not the kind of arguments that carry the greatest weight in the contest, and it will probably be decided on more potential grounds. Meanwhile Judge Green and his friends are equally assured of success. He is characterized among the ordinary run of Democrats as a "Swallow-tail." It is said, too, that he is more a New-Yorker than a Jerseyman, spending as he does, only a few months of each year at his country-seat in Bergen County. "Cattell," say his opponents, "occupied one of the New-Jersey seats in the Senate and represented Philadelphia. We don't want to have another such experience with Green." He is being pushed vigorously, however, by a clique of politicians known as the "State-house combination," and it is said that when the screws are applied he or some other candidate of the ring will win.

THE HOUSE COMMITTEES.

The Speaker to-day announced the following committees:

She was on her passage from Bombay to Akijah. She is owned by Owen Read and others, of this city.

THE EASTERN COMPLICATIONS.

THE PROPOSITION OF THE CONFERENCE NOT YET ACCEPTED BY THE PORTE—LORD SALISBURY'S INTERVIEW WITH THE SULTAN—MILITARY MATTERS.

LONDON, Jan. 16.—An extra edition of the Daily Telegraph says: "We have just received important dispatches from Pera, from which we select the following as of immediate interest:

PERA, Jan. 15.

The Marquis of Salisbury has had an interview of two hours' duration with the Sultan. The Sultan is disposed to accept all the conditions of the amended schemes submitted to the conference."

The following dispatch to Reuter may refer to the same interview, since nothing has heretofore been received about an interview subsequent to yesterday's conference. If the two dispatches refer to the same interview it will be seen that Reuter's fuller information leaves the position the same as at the adjournment of the conference yesterday:

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 15.—The Marquis of Salisbury at a private audience of the Sultan on Sunday, is understood to have strongly insisted upon his acceptance of the modified proposals. The Sultan, while maintaining his previous objection on the ground that the Turkish Constitution did not allow him to yield to the demands of the powers, did not give a decisive reply.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—The Standard's special dispatch from Constantinople says:

The Marquis of Salisbury at his interview with the Sultan on Sunday, in order to disabuse his Majesty's mind of any idea formed from the reports which had been purposely circulated in Constantinople to the effect that he [Salisbury], was at variance with his colleagues in the British Cabinet, read a telegram from the Earl of Beaconsfield, which declares that Lord Salisbury has the entire approval and support of the Government, and that Turkey if she rejects the proposals of the powers, has nothing to expect from England. The Sultan was much impressed by Lord Salisbury's remarks, but merely said the question must be decided by the Porte.

A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Constantinople, states that several plenipotentiaries have requested audience with the Sultan for the purpose of taking leave.

The Grand Council of Turkey to decide on the Porte's reply to the last proposals of the powers will meet to-morrow or Thursday.

The Times' dispatch from Belgrade says partisans of Russia declare the Russian volunteers were removed from Servia on account of insubordination, and will be replaced by regular troops from Russia in the event of a war.

It is stated that the Porte has sent a telegraphic dispatch advising Servia to make peace immediately, as no extension of the armistice beyond the 1st of March will be granted, and if peace is not then concluded the Turks will march on Belgrade. If this is true, it will probably lead Servia to decide in favor of peace, unless Russia gives her positive assurance of powerful support.

The Constantinople correspondents of the Telegraph and News both represent that, according to the proposals as now submitted to the Porte, the Commission of Supervision would have no executive power, but would merely watch the execution of the reforms and report their observations to the Ambassadors at Constantinople. The Vienna correspondent of the News reports that Midhat Pasha has taken the unusual step of inviting the Catholic, Armenian, Greek and Bulgarian Patriarchs to participate in the Grand Council which decides on the Porte's answer. The council will meet on Thursday and the conference on Saturday.

A dispatch from Vienna to the Daily Telegraph says Gen. Ignatieff, at last Monday's sitting of the conference, when giving notice of his intention to withdraw in the event of a refusal by the Porte, did not, like the other Plenipotentiaries, state that he intended to leave his Embassy in care of a Chargé d'Affaires. It is probable, therefore, if the Turks refuse the last proposals, diplomatic relations between Turkey and Russia will totally cease.

Count Andrassy has returned to Vienna from Pesth to confer with Prince Auersperg on the critical situation.

PESTH, Jan. 16.—A correspondent of the Pesther Lloyds had an interview with Midhat Pasha on Monday, and reports that the Grand Vizier then declared in the most positive manner that he would never accept an international commission or foreign control over the appointment of Governors under any form whatever.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

PARIS, Jan. 16.—The Figaro announces that M. Bartholde, the French Minister to the United States, will shortly be replaced at Washington by Max Outrey, Minister to Japan. M. Bartholde will return to Paris to fill an important post in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. [This news is confirmed by a dispatch from London.]

M. de Macère, Minister of the Interior, has been chosen President of the group of the Left Centre. The French Academy of Medicine has awarded to Dr. Squire, of Elmira, N. Y., the Prize of Encouragement.

ATHENS, Jan. 16.—J. Meredith Read, the American Minister, had an audience with the King to-day.

THE ASHTABULA DISASTER.

THE CORONER'S INQUEST—EVIDENCE AS TO THE CONDITION OF THE BRIDGE—FUNERAL OF THE UNRECOGNIZED REMAINS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ASHTABULA, Jan. 16.—E. A. Beebout, of the Canton Bridge Company, a practical engineer, testified to-day before the acting Coroner's inquest that he had examined the bridge carefully, and produced a written statement of the result. He testified that this examination revealed the fact that the braces had been fastened to the angle blocks in an insufficient manner, and that some of the braces had slipped out of place, and that ends of others had been chipped away to accommodate the tension rods, thus reducing materially their ability to perform the office intended. The joint State legislative committee appointed to investigate the cause of the accident were here to-day, and, after a careful survey of the scene of the accident, and a visit to the freight-house and cemetery, appointed a sub-committee to take such portions of the testimony thus far given before the Coroner's jury as they may see fit, and see that the broken bridge is fully and carefully measured by the Surveyor of Franklin County. The committee will hold its first session to-morrow in Cleveland, at which time Mr. Amasa Stone, President of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad at the time the bridge was constructed, will be examined, as also Mr. Charles Collins, Chief Engineer.

RAIN IN CALIFORNIA.

LIGHT SHOWERS REPORTED—SNOW-STORMS ALONG THE COAST—A GOOD PROSPECT FOR FAIR CROPS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 16.—Rain commenced falling lightly this evening and throughout the day in occasional slight showers, with fresh wind varying from south to west. The barometer is falling, and the indications favor more rain to-night. Reports from all parts of the State show that in the southern counties, San Diego, Los Angeles, and San Luis Obispi, rain is threatened, but none has yet fallen since that previously reported. The same is true of the tier of counties lying next northward in the interior, while in Santa Cruz and Monterey, on the coast, rain has fallen during the day. In the central portions of the State it has been raining at intervals all day, the showers extending northward over the Sacramento, Napa, and Sonoma Valleys, as far as Tehama County, on the Upper Sacramento, and along the northern coast. Along the line of the Central Pacific Railway in the mountains it has been snowing heavily, with the prospect of a continual storm at Yreka.

It snowed last night at Portland, Oregon, with indications of more falling. The wind throughout the State during the day has varied from south-west to south-east. The indications are that the present change in the weather will result in a general storm. If such proves the case, and rain falls copiously, good crops may be expected in all portions of the State, as it is only in a few limited localities that any serious consequences have yet ensued from the drought, the damage, such as it is, being mostly confined to San Diego and those portions of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Valleys in the vicinity of Sacramento and Stockton.

THE DISTRICT POLICE BOARD.

THE BILL NEITHER SIGNED NOR VETOED YET—PROBABILITY OF ITS BECOMING LAW WITHOUT SIGNATURE—MURTAGH'S ADMINISTRATION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—The bill abolishing the Police Board of the District has not yet been signed nor vetoed. There is some doubt about what will be done with it. The President was claimed to have expressed his approval in advance, and also after the passage of the bill to have said he would approve it as soon as received. Now it appears that there was a misunderstanding on his part of the provisions of the bill till it was placed before him. He had supposed it did abolish the Police Board, but it only made that board subordinate to the District Commission. To that proposal the President had no objection. The impression is that the President will, under the circumstances, permit the bill to become a law without his signature. The 10 days within which he must veto the bill, if at all, will expire next Friday. Meanwhile, the four gentlemen appointed some days ago to act with Murtagh, have, with one exception at least, declined that honor, and new names are now published. The board will have no time to accomplish more than an organization unless the President vetoes the bill. It is believed the bill would be immediately passed by both Houses, over the President's veto, because the vote for it was unanimous in both houses, and the investigation has already shown the necessity for the measure. The management of the old board has been inefficient and expensive, if not worse. Murtagh admits most of what has been alleged concerning his attempt to have Whitthorne arrested, and the evidence indicates that Whitthorne's habits were such that an arrest would not have been difficult. Charles A. Dana was shadowed in 1872 by policemen detailed at Murtagh's request, as the evidence abundantly proves. The inevitable conclusion from all the facts thus far discovered is that reform is necessary.

AFFAIRS IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

MEMORIAL OF GOV. CHAMBERLAIN AND THE OTHER STATE OFFICERS TO CONGRESS—THE TRUE STATE OF AFFAIRS THE REVERSE OF THAT REPRESENTED BY WADE HAMPTON.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—In the Senate to-day Mr. Patterson, of South Carolina, presented the memorial of D. H. Chamberlain, and the State officers of his Government in South Carolina, in relation to the condition of the affairs in that State, which was partially read, when, on motion, the reading was discontinued, and the paper ordered to be printed in the Congressional Record. The memorialists take issue with the memorial of Wade Hampton and others, charging that the majority of its statements and allegations are untrue in fact, many others so presented as to mislead, and many facts requisite to a correct knowledge of the matters in question are omitted and suppressed. They therefore ask Congress to accept from them a full and correct statement, which they stand ready to make good by proper proof when required.

They recite, first, the general character of the recent election, and charge violence and intimidation of Republican voters; second, the action of the Returning Board and of the Supreme Court of the State. They review these at great length, quoting voluminously from laws and from works and proceedings in reference thereto. They go into the question of the organization of the Senate and House of Representatives, and review all the action taken in regard to it, and also review the case of Wallace and Mackey.

Regarding the organization of the House of Representatives, the memorialists specially affirm that all members of the House were admitted into the hall, and were not, as alleged in the Hampton memorial, and have not at any time been, excluded therefrom by the officers or forces of the United States or of the State of South Carolina. Eight persons, they say, claiming to be elected as members of the House from Laurens and Edgefield, were excluded, not from the State-house, but from the hall of the House of Representatives. Those eight persons—as has already been stated—held no certificates of election from the Secretary of State, and were not entitled to be admitted to said hall, except by favor of the House when duly organized. They describe explicitly the manner of the organization of the House, and claim that a majority of all the members were present when the Speaker and other officers were elected, and at no time since that day has the number of members of said House been reduced below a legal and constitutional quorum; but, on the contrary, the number has been increased by decisions of cases of contested election to the number of 73, of whom 69 remain at this time lawful and regular members thereof.

In conclusion, they pray that Congress will, by all lawful and constitutional means, continue to uphold the authority of the lawful and constitutional Executive and Legislative departments of the Government of South Carolina, as represented by D. H. Chamberlain as Governor, and the State officers and Senate and House of Representatives of said State, by protecting the said State Government against domestic violence, now threatened by Wade Hampton and others falsely styling themselves officials of said State.

The memorial is signed by D. B. Chamberlain, Governor; R. H. Greaves, Lieutenant Governor; F. L. Cardoza, State Treasurer; S. C. Dunn, Controller; P. B. Elliott, Attorney General; S. H. Hayne, Secretary of State; J. K. Talbert, Superintendent of Education; J. Kennedy, Adjutant and Inspector General; S. A. Swailes, President protem. of the Senate, and E. W. M. Mackey, Speaker, of the House of Representatives.

THE MISSISSIPPI ELECTION.

A YAZOO DISTRICT ATTORNEY ON THE CONVERSION OF NEGROES TO DEMOCRATIC VIEWS—FIGURES THAT PROVE FRAUD AND INTIMIDATION ON THEIR FACE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—The committee continued the investigation in regard to the conduct of the late election in Mississippi. George A. Wilson, District Attorney for Yazoo and several other counties in Mississippi, being called for examination, testified that he takes an active part in politics; as far as he knows there was no disturbance or intimidation in connection with the elections of 1875 and 1876, in Mississippi; A. T. Trupard and Anderson Clark, two prominent Republicans, had both told witness that they never knew of fairer elections than those of 1875 and 1876. In Holmes County, where the witness resides, there was a Republican majority of 1,500 votes in 1872, and in 1876 there was a Democratic majority of 1,400. In Yazoo County there was a majority of 2,000 Republican votes in 1872, and in 1876 there was a Democratic majority of 4,193; the total vote of Yazoo County in 1876 was 4,300; Madison County gave a Republican majority of about 2,000 in 1872, and in 1876 there were but 13 Republican votes cast in that county; witness stated positively that this change has been wrought by a voluntary change of opinion among the voters in the counties above mentioned.

Mr. Price, of Mississippi, who was partially examined by the committee yesterday, was placed on the witness stand to-day and examined further regarding the intimidation practiced in the county in which he resides at the election of 1875. He said that he knew a large number of colored men who did not vote at the election of 1875, as they feared that bodily harm would be done them if they presented themselves at the polls.

GENERAL MISCELLANY.

THE WESTERN RIVERS.

A FRESH PERIL IMPENDING — THE LATE GORGED RIVERS THREATENING A DISASTROUS FRESHET IN THE OHIO.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 16.—The destruction of property caused by the breaking up of the ice gorges is nearly over; but now another formidable danger is threatened in the shape of a flood. The Monongahela, Youghiogheny, Big Sandy, Licking, and other tributaries, are pouring an immense volume of water into the Ohio River, and the consequent rise below must be very heavy. The water at this point is now 42 feet, a very high stage, and the floods let loose by breaking of the Middleport and Marietta gorges have not yet reached here. Mingled with the ice that is pouring out of the Licking River are shocks of corn, timber, and other evidences of a destructive flood in its upper waters. The Big Sandy, a comparatively small stream, has risen to the unprecedented height of 45 feet, and is dealing destruction along its banks. Fears are entertained of a flood in the Ohio as great as the memorable one of 1847, and the running of large quantities of ice will render it doubly disastrous to shipping. The damage caused by the ice to-day has been comparatively light.

REPUBLICAN CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS FOR THE CURRENT YEAR — DISTRICT ATTORNEY PHELPS ELECTED PRESIDENT.

The Republican Central Committee met last evening at Republican Hall, in Thirty-third street, near Broadway, to organize. There was a very full attendance, the membership of the committee having been increased by the new apportionment from 175 to 291. The meeting was called to order by Mr. Jacob M. Patterson, Jr., the President of the old committee, and ex-Alderman Oliver P. C. Billings was made temporary Chairman. The following officers were unanimously elected:

President—Hon. Benjamin K. Phelps.

First Vice President—James C. Pinckney.

Second Vice President—Pierre C. Van Wyck.

Secretaries—Willard Bullard and Theodorus McLeod.

Treasurer—Thomas Murphy.

Sergeant at Arms—James Armstrong.

Mr. Isaac Dayton, of the Thirteenth Assembly District, after making some remarks in favor of fairness and impartiality in the government of the Republican Party of the City, offered a resolution as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee, to consist of one member from each delegation to this committee to be styled the Committee of Conference, be appointed by the President, who shall be duty bound to inquire into the defects alleged to exist in the present party organization of the Republicans of the City of New-York, and whether there are any abuses or irregularities in Republican associations of the City, and whether a scheme may not be practicable whereby the Republican voters of the City of New-York may more generally and conveniently than under the present system participate in the primary meetings and the elections of delegates to nominating conventions, and committees and councils of the party; such committee to give to Republicans claiming to be aggrieved or desiring to offer propositions for the improvement of the organization of the party an opportunity to be heard.

Gen. Joseph C. Pinckney raised a point of order that the Constitution of the Central Committee called for the reference of all protests and appeals from all sources to the Executive Committee, and that the appointment of a special committee, such as contemplated by the resolution, was unconstitutional. It was then moved that the resolution be referred to the Executive Committee, which appointed, which motion was adopted. The committee then adjourned.

THE ASHTABULA DISASTER.

A Times reporter inquired of Mr. William H. Vanderbilt yesterday whether or not the Lake Shore Railroad Company, of which he is President, proposed to make an investigation into the cause of the Ashtabula disaster. Mr. Vanderbilt replied that the railroad company, by itself, had not contemplated making an investigation, for the reason that its officers believed the investigation now in progress on the part of the Ohio Legislative Committee would probably develop all the facts that could in any way be obtained. The railroad company itself would be far less able to conduct a thorough examination than a committee of the Legislature which had power to summon witnesses and compel them to testify. The officers of the road had, however, been instructed to render the Legislative Committee every possible assistance. Immediately upon learning that the committee had been appointed, Mr. Vanderbilt said he telegraphed to the agents of the company to call the fullest and freest investigation. The company was more anxious to find out why its bridge broke than anybody else could be. If had other bridges, and it was important to know whether they had not the defects that proved fatal to the Ashtabula bridge. The officers of the company had been unable to discover what caused the accident, and if they could learn the cause from any outside source they would gladly aid in any investigation with that end in view.

FAT MEN'S RACE.

The announcement that 20 or more "fat men" would compete in a foot race for a purse of $25 drew a large number of spectators to Gilmore's Garden last evening. Eleven men in all faced the starter. At the sound of the bell they darted away in fine style, a thick-set German, with flaxen hair and a jelly-like consistency of flesh, leading at a rapid pace. For the major part of the first round the Teuton continued to lead, but at the quarter-pole a tall Irishman, with a gigantic stride, "collared" him amid loud cheers, and after a brief struggle showed in front. During the next two rounds the athletic Hibernian had it all its own way, and when he pulled up a winner of the heat, his comparisons of various nationalities were strung out around the entire course. The second heat was a repetition of the first, the "big Mick," as his backers affectionately termed him, taking the heat and race easily, in 3:32. The winners and the amount awarded each, were as follows: Dan Regan, 204 pounds, first place, $10; William Grote, 213 pounds, second place, $8. The third prize, $7, was divided between Patrick Tansey, 243 pounds, and Joseph Dearsley, 224 pounds.

BUSINESS FAILURES.

Henry Plousky, tailor, of No. 748 Broadway, made an assignment for the benefit of creditors to Lewis Meyer.

Peter Schwindt, tailor, of No. 55 West Thirty-second street, assigned his property to Mitchell Herschfield yesterday.

Lucien A. Blanding, Charles L. Walker, and Sumner R. French, composing the firm of Blanding, Walker & Co., produce dealers, of No. 311 Greenwich street, assigned their property to Putnam Conklin.

A meeting of the creditors of Leggett & Storms, hotel proprietors, will be held to-day at No. 48 Chatham street, at 2 o'clock P. M., at which proposition will be made for the settlement of the affairs of the late firm.

The failure of Orrin Benedict & Co., manufacturers of hats, at No. 546 Broadway, is reported, with liabilities estimated at upward of $150,000. Mr. Benedict said yesterday that at present he could give no statement of the liabilities and assets, and their resumption would depend upon the action of the creditors, who would hold a meeting, but he could not tell how soon. The firm did an extensive business, and employed 250 men at their factory in Bethel, Conn. The partners are Orrin Benedict, U. S. Benedict, and W. H. Barnum.

THE THIRD DISTRICT COURT-HOUSE.

The Aldermanic committee appointed to continue the investigation of the charges made by Mr. Robert Cushing against the Third District Court-house Commission, which was commenced under the direction of the previous board, will meet for that purpose on Monday at 2 P. M. A meeting of the committee was to have been held yesterday, but a quorum was not present.

REDUCTION OF CAPITAL STOCK.

In consequence of excessive taxation, the Board of Directors of the Phenix National Bank resolved to ask the assent, by vote of the shareholders, to a reduction of the capital stock from $1,800,000 to $1,000,000, by returning at par, in cash, the amounts of the reduction to the shareholders pro rata, according to the number of shares held by each at the time of the reduction. A meeting of the shareholders was held at the banking-house yesterday, when a vote was taken on the proposed reduction, resulting in the adoption of the proposition by a majority greatly in excess of the legal majority of 2,000 shares required. The saving to the bank in taxation, it is estimated, will be about $30,000 a year. The Directors feel entirely confident that the reduction affected will leave ample facilities for the business requirements of the bank.

THE MEXICAN REVOLUTION.

GALVESTON, Jan. 16.—A special dispatch to the News from Brownsville says: "Gen. Diaz failed to effect a compromise with Iglesias. He attacked the forces of Iglesias in Guanajuato, commanded by Gen. Antillon, on the 3d inst., and Antillon was defeated, surrendering his whole army and all his material of war to Gen. Ignacio Martinez. Iglesias has asked to be allowed to retire to private life. Gen. Quiroga, according to promise, supported Lerdo until Nov. 30. He then surrendered over 5,000 men and a large amount of war material to Gen. Trevino and retired to his ranche. Under the pretext that he was fomenting trouble, he was arrested, tried, and condemned, and, according to a telegram, he was shot on the 12th inst.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 16.—A letter from Tucson says: "Advices from Sonora to the 9th inst. report that ex-Gov. Pesqueira has pronounced against Gen. Mariscal, the military Governor, and is in the field with some 400 men. Serna, who overthrew Pesqueira's Government a year ago, has been placed by Mariscal in command of districts Altar, Ures, and Hermosillo. Mariscal has 600 troops at Ures. Two skirmishes have already occurred in the vicinity of Ures, in one of which Pesqueira's brother was killed. The mass of population adhere to Mariscal's Government. Travel through the State is unsafe.

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

THE MURDER OF MAGGIE BAUER.

FRANK M'CONICHI TO BE TRIED AT THE ENSUING TERM OF THE QUEENS COUNTY COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER—EX-JUDGE BUSTEED TO CONDUCT THE DEFENSE.

The trial of Frank McConichi for the murder of Maggie Bauer will take place at the approaching term of the Queens County Court of Oyer and Terminer. The case for the people is to be conducted by District Attorney Downing, and the defense by ex-Judge Richard Busteed, who has been requested by County Judge Armstrong, as will be seen by the following correspondence, to appear for the prisoner:

JAMAICA, Jan. 4, 1877.

To Hon. Richard Busteed:

MY DEAR SIR: One McConichi is now imprisoned in this County Jail and is under indictment for murder, and the District Attorney informs me that he expects to try the man at the ensuing Oyer and Terminer. The prisoner seems to be poor and friendless and is without counsel. His situation is such as to appeal to the humanity and generosity of every worthy member of the legal profession. And relying upon your well-known sympathy for the unfortunate I take the liberty of asking that you will act as counsel for the prisoner and take charge of his defense.

W. J. Youngs, Esq., of Oyster Bay, whose office is in the Evening Post Building, I think, will be glad to aid you in the case, and you can select from the Bar of the county such others as will consent to join you in the defense. You can get your subpœnas from County Clerk Sniphin and give them to whatever Constable you select, who will be placed at your service. The clerk will furnish you on demand a copy of the testimony before the Coroner's inquest. Yours truly, JOHN J. ARMSTRONG,
Queens County Judge.

JAMAICA, Jan. 10, 1877.

Hon. John J. Armstrong, County Judge of Queens County.

MY DEAR SIR: I am much obliged for the kind terms in which you inform me I have been assigned by you to the defense of Frank McConichi, who is under indictment for an alleged murder, and I accept the trust with an abiding sense of personal and professional responsibility.

It is the chief glory as well as the distinguishing characteristic of the legal calling that the "poor and friendless" may have the lawyer's services without pecuniary regard. In such a case every man fit to be allowed to practice, feels himself under the pressure of a general retainer. Very truly yours,
RICHARD BUSTEED.

In the event of Mr. Young's being unable to assist in the prisoner's defense, Judge Busteed will probably call upon Mr. T. J. Armstrong, of Jamaica, Long Island, to assist him in the conduct of the case.

MISHAPS IN WALL STREET.

THE DANGERS ATTENDING ATTEMPTS TO FORD A SLOPPY STREET — A GOOD DEAL OF LAUGHTER AND SOME VERY BAD LANGUAGE.

A good many people managed to get a great deal of enjoyment yesterday out of the execrable condition of Wall street, at its intersection with Nassau and Broad. The foundation of ice which remained beneath the more recent layers of snow had been worn out in several places, and deep pools had formed. These were surrounded by precipitous and slippery hummocks, partly covered by slush, and were filled with a mixture of dirty water and partly-melted snow, in which particles of ice floated about to deceive the incautious pedestrian who put his foot upon one of them with the mistaken idea that he had found bottom. The result was a plunge, followed by an undignified scramble through a lake six feet in breadth, and a difficult landing on the other side with wet pantaloons and dripping feet. Two or three of these disasters collected a crowd of boys, and after a time men joined the boys, and the crowd was swelled to one of from two to four hundred, who stood on the four corners to laugh at the mortification of the unfortunate. A sprucely-dressed young broker came along in a marvelous hurry, passed through the crowd at the gutter, and sprang across the street. Reaching the gulf of slush, he endeavored to halt. A frantic effort to recover his footing deprived him of his balance, and he sat down violently in the element, while an omnibus that passed along showered upon his back a rain of dirty spray. Of course every body laughed again, and continued to laugh as long as there were persons venturing to attempt this shorter way across instead of taking a longer one around. Every stage or carriage that passed floundered through the holes with as much tossing and splashing as would be made by a boat in a storm. There were attempts made to clear a gutter in order that the water might drain away. As fast as outlets were opened the melted snow from Broadway ran into the hollows and kept them filled. Nothing but the absolute removal of the ice and snow from the street could effect an entire cure, and this had not been accomplished at dark last evening, when the crowds were still lingering in anticipation of further sport.

DETENTION OF THE MAILS.

ALL TRAINS MORE OR LESS BEHIND TIME—MAILS DELAYED 20 HOURS BETWEEN NEW-YORK AND BUFFALO.

In consequence of the succession of unusually heavy snow-storms the transportation of mails has been attended with great trouble and embarrassing delay. Especially has this been the case with the through Western mails. On the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad the mails have been detained daily for the last two weeks for several hours. The postal car which left this City last Friday morning at 8:30 arrived at Buffalo at 6 P. M. on Saturday, being due at 1 A. M., making it overdue 17 hours. The postal train which left on Saturday at 8:30 A. M. reached Buffalo at 9 P. M. on Sunday, being delayed 20 hours. These two days (Saturday and Sunday last) were the severest of the season, and the obstruction to the trains has been greater than for a long number of years previously. The mail train due yesterday, by the above line, at 7 A. M., did not reach the City until 4 P. M. The mails transported by the Erie Railway have also been seriously delayed. Those due at 8 A. M. yesterday did not arrive until 2 P. M. The San Francisco mails arrived yesterday on time. The snow is unusually heavy all along the line of the New-York Central. Every effort has been made to clear the tracks, and thousands of men have been employed shoveling snow, but their efforts have not been altogether successful. So much has traffic been impeded that it has been necessary to attach from two to four engines to each train. Other impediments have also been reported. The midnight Montreal express train for New-York, on Monday, was detained six hours by two freight trains, which were kept standing on the track for no assignable reason. The Syracuse and Chenango Valley Railroad, from Syracuse to Earlville, a distance of 40 miles, is completely blocked up with snow, and there has been no traffic of any kind on the road for several weeks. The Sodus Point and Stanley Railroad has also stopped running trains.

CAPTURE OF AN ESCAPED CONVICT.

James Carpenter, alias Patrick Smith, the leader of the gang of convicts who on June 2, 1875, boarded a freight train on the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad at Sing Sing, and succeeded in effecting their escape from the prison, was yesterday arrested at a house of ill-repute in West Fourth street. The names of the participants in the daring escape and the terms and offenses for which they were sentenced, are as follows: James Carpenter, alias Patrick Smith, burglary, five years; James Farrell, highway robbery, 15 years; John Quinn, manslaughter, 15 years, and Frank Woods, alias Frank McKenna, burglary, five years. The men were employed with a gang of convicts in building a wall which separates the prison grounds from the railroad track. About 8 o'clock on the morning of the day mentioned, as a freight train was passing on its way to New-York, the above-named convicts, at a preconcerted signal, simultaneously precipitated themselves on the locomotive. While two of them detached the engine from the train, the others shielded themselves behind the cabins of the engineer and fireman, in order to escape being shot by the guards. After the locomotive had proceeded a short distance the convicts pointed revolvers, with which they had in some manner been provided, at the head of the engineer, and compelled him to run the engine about two miles below Sing Sing, when they jumped off. Woods was recaptured about a month after, in this City. The escape was planned by Carpenter, who is known to the Police as a most skillful burglar. Immediately after his arrest, Superintendent Walling telegraphed to Detective Jackson, who arrived yesterday afternoon and immediately identified Carpenter, who was handed over to his custody, and will be returned to Sing Sing Prison this morning. James Farrell and John Quinn, the other two convicts who escaped, are still at large.

THE MAIL ROBBERS COMMITTED.

The case of John Kelly, John Crawford, John De Frees and Mary Jane Collins, who are charged with robbing the mails, was continued yesterday before United States Commissioner Shields. The Government concluded its case the day previous, and nothing was therefore left but for the defense to put in their evidence. This was done in a few minutes, the only witness put on the stand being John Crawford, and his testimony was decidedly damaging to Kelly, who the witness swore took a mail bag from the wagon driven by De Frees, on the morning of the 29th of December. All the prisoners were remanded to the Ludlow Street Jail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

REGISTERED LETTERS.

REPORT OF THE BUSINESS IN THE NEW-YORK OFFICE FOR 1876—THE INCREASE OF WORK FOR THE YEAR.

In no department of the Post Office is more care, more unfailing accuracy demanded, than in that of registry—the department of registered letters. From the moment a letter is placed in the hands of the Government clerk, at the window of the department in the General Post Office, or at one of the many stations, the Government protects it as it passes from hand to hand, and, until it is delivered to the person to whom it is addressed, the most careful scrutiny is maintained upon it. It is never out of hand, it cannot escape the multitude of checks and counter-checks to which it is subjected, and if it should become diverted from its proper course, it may, by means of the safeguards of this kind which are thrown around it, be traced immediately to the individual, who will be held responsible for its disappearance. The force at present employed in the General Post Office has been worked to its utmost capacity for several months past, handling as many as 5,000 registered letters in one day in several instances. On Dec. 30, the mail of the German steam-ship Kronprinz contained 1,338 packages, the largest registered letter mail ever received in the Post Office in this City by foreign steamship, and on that day more than 5,000 letters were handled by the clerks. The new system of interchanging through pouches, which has greatly simplified the registered letter business of the country, and which was made necessary by the rapid increase of that branch of business in the Post Office Department, has been extended. It began in July, 1875, when an interchange of special registered pouches was effected with seven cities. These pouches were locked in this City, and could only be unlocked at the offices for which they were intended, by keys held at those offices. The interchange now includes 17 offices, an extension having been made in January, 1876, and there is now a double daily interchange with Washington and Philadelphia. Mr. Charles Forrester, Jr., yesterday finished his report for the past year, which is given below, compared in part with the business of 1875:

Registered letters received by foreign steam-ships		139,842
Registered letters for New-York reported "not received"		24
Registered letters from New-York reported "not received"		11

The number reported "not received" will probably be reduced to a very small figure, as two of those appearing in the report as "not received" have already been acknowledged, and the experience of the department has shown that those not accounted for are as frequently destroyed by accident, the loss of mails at sea, or by the burning of mail cars, or by theft, and very few of them through the negligence of the Post Office authorities.

THE BOARD OF HEALTH.

A CONFERENCE WITH THE PRESIDENTS OF STREET RAILROADS—THE GATES ON THE FRONT PLATFORMS TO BE ABOLISHED.

A conference was held at the office of the Board of Health yesterday between the members of the board and the President of the street railroads in this City, respecting the enforcement of the ordinances of the Sanitary Code which relate to the cars. President Chandler, Prof. Janeway, and Dr. Vanderpool represented the Health Department, and there were also present the Presidents of the leading railroads. The chief subject under discussion was section 181 of the Sanitary Code, which was adopted Sept. 16, 1873, and which required gates to be placed on the front platforms of the cars. The representatives of the railroad companies contended that the placing of gates on the front platforms of cars was an additional source of danger. A number of accidents have occurred through the experimental gates which were put on care of two of the lines. A man was killed about Christmas in trying to get on a car over the gate, and two accidents recently occurred on the Elevated Railroad. Intoxicated men invariably attempt to get on the cars over the gates, and by having the front platform closed up dirty men are driven into the cars or at least through them. The enforcement of the ordinance would tend to overcrowding the rear platform, and ladies and others would be greatly annoyed by having to push their way through the crowds. The delays in getting on and off would lead to quick time being made in making up time, and thus more accidents would follow. Many persons would be excluded who now find entrance by the front. Stationary gates are, they said, impossible, as there are no turntables at the end of the routes, and reversible gates lead to delays. During the Third Avenue cars are at certain hours of the day run at intervals of 15 seconds, and the changing of the gates from one end of the car to the other would give rise to a delay of at least 15 seconds more. Another consideration urged by the railroad men was, that it would prevent smoking, and also that policemen, who, while in uniform ride free on the front platform, would be excluded from this privilege. The cars would be liable to jump the track, owing to the increased weight on the rear platform, caused by overcrowding. The section alluded to also conflicts with the ordinance requiring soiled clothing to be carried on the front platform. The Eighth avenue line used chains, and the Sixth avenue line used gates for a time, but were compelled to abandon them. During the conference it was incidentally mentioned that the street railroads in this City carry annually 165,000,000 passengers, and President Phillips, of the Third Avenue Railroad, stated that on the line he controlled 100,000 passengers were carried daily, and it was argued that the percentage of accidents was very small.

The result of the conference was that the objectionable section was repealed. Section 166 of the Sanitary Code, which prohibits the placing of hay or straw on the floors of the cars, was amended so as to permit the use of clean, wholesome straw, provided that it be entirely changed at least every 24 hours. The Presidents of the roads present agreed to post a notice in their cars that soiled clothing must be carried on the front platform only. Suits will be at once commenced against the Second, Third, and Fourth Avenue Railroads for having cushions in their Harlem cars in violation of Section 164 of the Sanitary Code.

MISSING VESSELS.

Clark & Seaman, of No. 86 West street, agents of the New-York and Halifax Steam-ship Line, said yesterday that they had heard nothing of the missing steam-ship George Cromwell, which left Halifax on Jan. 3 for St. Johns, Newfoundland. Hopes were still entertained that she had only been driven out of her course by breakage of her machinery.

The steam-ship Colombo, of the Wilson Line, is still missing. A duplicate of her manifest, received here by mail, shows that she was loaded with iron, rags, and chemicals, and that she carried only one passenger, whose name was William Salt. The vessel was of 1,616 tons capacity.

The steam-ship August Andre has not yet been heard from.

The ship George Green, which is a vessel of 990 tons register, owned by Charles R. Green, of this City, has probably been wrecked, pieces of wreck bearing her name having been washed ashore on the coast of Devonshire. Among the fragments found were a chest of drawers containing many of the ship's papers and private letters to Capt. Wilson and his wife. Some fragments of a small boat have come ashore in the Parish of Ringmoor, a large whale-boat was found at North Ambe with the tholes in position, and the back-board of a boat with the name George Green, New-York, was washed up on the beach.

STOLEN MONEY RETURNED.

Controller Kelly yesterday received from Hon. Charles J. Fairchild, Attorney General, the sum of $102,801 06, of which amount $100,000 is a payment on account of a compromise made with Woodward, and the balance for a final settlement with the Watson estate.

GEOGRAPHICAL SCIENCE.

ADDRESS BY JUDGE C. P. DALY.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE AMERICAN GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY—REVIEW OF THE PROGRESS OF GEOGRAPHICAL RESEARCH DURING THE YEAR—CONDITION OF THE OCEAN BASIN—WHAT THE SIGNAL SERVICE HAS ACCOMPLISHED—THE WORK OF THE BRITISH ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

Judge Charles P. Daly delivered his annual address last evening at Chickering Hall, before the American Geographical Society. Rev. Dr. Henry W. Bellows presided. Previous to the reading of the address the following society officers were elected: President, Charles P. Daly; Vice Presidents, George W. Cullum, Francis A. Stout, Frederick A. Conkling; Foreign Corresponding Secretary, Charles A. Joy; Domestic Corresponding Secretary, James Muhlerberg Bailey; Recording Secretary, Elial V. Hall; Treasurer, George Cabot Ward. Among the distinguished gentlemen present were Roswell D. Hitchcock, Rev. Dr. Preston, Levi P. Morton, Charles T. Cromwell, Henry Bergh, John Savage, Isaac L. Hayes, Harlow M. Hoyt, and William H. Monell.

JUDGE DALY'S ADDRESS.

Judge Daly began his address by referring to the increased interest manifested during the past year in the enlargement of geographical knowledge, which had been shown not only by the investigations and explorations which had taken place, and the discoveries which had been made, but by the establishment of geographical societies in Denmark, Spain, and Portugal, by a large increase of members in the leading societies of England, France, and Italy, and in the inauguration by the King of Belgium of an international organization, composed of prominent geographers, African explorers, and the heads of the leading geographical societies of the world, to carry on the work of exploring and civilizing the interior of Africa upon a systematic plan—a movement of great interest, and which, in all probability, will lead to very important results. Sir William Thompson, at last September's meeting of the British Association at Glasgow considered the subject of a high internal temperature of the earth, and declared that the greatest depth that had been reached in observations of underground temperature was scarcely one kilometre; (which is less than a mile;) that whatever might be the age of the earth, we ought to be sure that it was solid in the interior, and that any geological hypothesis must be rejected which assumes that the solid earth is a shell resting on a liquid mass. In considering the questions of the accuracy of the earth as a timekeeper, and the permanency of its axis of rotation, he had also declared that since the first known observation of an eclipse of the moon at Babylon, March 19, 721 B. C., the earth had lost a portion of its velocity, and was now, as a timekeeper, going slower, and that if a perfect clock were set to agree with the movement of the earth at the beginning of a century, it would, if this retardation is uniform, be 22 seconds behind at the end of the century.

Judge Daly next briefly referred to the results of the observations made during the voyage of the Challenger, which had been sent to investigate the physical and biological condition of the great ocean basin. Sir Wyville Thompson, who had given the general results of the expedition, had stated that the whole bottom of the sea was gradually receiving accumulations, giving rise to formations which must be regarded in the rocks of the future, the débris of the land was found to be carried out into the sea some hundreds of miles, and clays were being formed, mixed up with the débris of animals. Within a certain distance of the land the deposits, to a great extent, were formed of this material. Over a great part of the North Atlantic there was being deposited the Globigerina ooze, composed, principally, of a small chambered shell, extremely minute, and these shells were found in enormous quantities. This deposit was almost entirely of carbonate of lime, and the only rock it could form would be limestone. Therefore, over a large part of the North Atlantic, and over many other parts of the world, this limestone was being laid down. All over the bottom of the sea there is a large quantity of pumice, showing that there are volcanoes, either below the water or otherwise that are constantly throwing out material from the crust of the earth; and this pumice, which is the froth of lava, is frequently so light as to float on the water, and when the ship was at rest they saw pumice moved about by the current over the surface of the sea. The temperature of the sea at 13,000 feet is very low. It is usually but a little above the freezing point at the bottom of the Pacific and the Atlantic and portions of the Southern Sea.

In considering the progress of the surveys, explorations, and other Governmental work in the United States of a geographical character, the speaker stated that they were limited this year, owing to the smallness of the amounts allowed by Congress to certain departments. The survey of the lakes by the United States Engineer corps had, he said, been carried on by Gen. C. B. Comstock. The excellent triangulation along Lakes Ontario, Erie, and Michigan had been continued, the topography of the Niagara River has been completed, and many points determined for the State survey of Michigan. One of the most interesting results of the survey is a new determination of the elevation of the great lakes. They find Lake Ontario to be 247.25 feet, and Lake Erie 573.58 feet above mean tide at New-York, which corresponds almost exactly with the results reached by Mr. James T. Gardiner, three years ago, by a different method. The geographical explorations and surveys, under Lieut. Wheeler, west of the 100th meridian, have also been continued, and about 25,000 square miles traversed by the different parties in Nevada, New-Mexico and California.

The corps of the United States Signal Service, continued the speaker, have also been making rapid advances during the year toward a complete knowledge of the conditions and causes of the American climate. They have nearly completed the most extensive collection of altitudes of places in North America which has ever been gathered, including several thousand profiles, representing almost every railroad and canal. From this and other data they have prepared a model of North America on a large scale. A telegraph line has been built by them from Central Texas across the Llano Estacado, that dreaded waterless desert, and one across the high and arid plateaus and ranges of Southern New-Mexico and Arizona to San Diego, on the Pacific. This gives an unbroken line from New-Orleans along the southern border of the United States, stretching from ocean to ocean. Thirty meteorological stations are placed along the line, the highest being 6,800 feet above the sea. Another line of stations follows the Rio Grande River from its mouth to the elevated plateau of Colorado. The Mexican telegraph lines now extend from the mouth of the Rio Grande River to San Luis, thence to Tampico, and thence through Vera Cruz along the coast nearly to the extremity of Yucatan. The Signal Service are preparing to place stations down even to Yucatan. The gulf of Mexico has been nearly encircled with a telegraph line, along which meteorological stations will be placed at such short intervals that no hurricane or storm can move from the Gulf without notice of its escape and the direction of its flight being given at once to the whole country. Arrangements have been made for a chain of stations to the extreme eastern end of the West Indies, all connected by telegraph with the Washington office. It Congress is wise enough to give sufficient appropriation to carry out these excellent plans, it will be impossible for any hurricane to enter the United States from the south unheralded, for hourly bulletins of its progress can be posted in every seaport. Who can estimate the lives and treasure that such an arrangement may save?

The speaker next reviewed the work of the International Commission appointed for the survey of the exact boundary line between the United States and British America from the Lake of the Woods to the Rocky Mountains, of which Capt. J. Anderson, had, during the year, given an interesting account to the Royal Geographical Society, and then passed to a consideration of the results of the Arctic expedition of the Alert and the Discovery. He declared the expedition to have been a success from a geographical and scientific point of view. To reach the Pole, he said, was not the main object in an Arctic expedition, that being a mere geographical feat, to which necessarily great éclat would be attached, but the chief object of such an expedition was to explore the Arctic region in every direction as far as possible to obtain scientific information in a quarter of the globe where it was of the highest interest, not only as respects the past physical history of the earth, but to enable us to unravel phenomena and obtain a knowledge of physical laws affecting its present condition which are of high scientific value, or, to express it in a popular form, of the greatest practical importance. This object has been to a considerable degree advanced by this English expedition. The Alert not only attained the highest latitude—82° 24'—ever reached by a vessel, and the sledge expedition under Commander Markham, the furthest northern point attained by man, 83° 20' 26" north latitude, but the expedition, in an unknown region, discovered and traced a line of coast extending over nearly 50° of longitude, ascertained to a considerable extent the nature of the Polar Sea bordering this newly-discovered coast, and collected a large amount of scientific information in the examination of both land and sea. But the speaker said, while he entertained the highest opinion of the capacity, skillful seamanship, and judgment displayed by Sir George Nares, in command of the expedition, he could not overlook certain matters in his report and address to the Royal Geographical Society, charging Drs. Kane and Hayes with publishing misleading delineations of the coast, and with altering the names of the headlands discovered by Admiral Inglefield. He then retuted both these reflections and severely criticised the course pursued by Capt. Nares in returning to England in one year, when his orders had been to remain two years and to endeavor to gain the highest northern latitudes.

Judge Daly next spoke at some length in relation to the geographical work accomplished during the year in Central and South America, Europe, Asia, India, and Africa. In Central America, he said, the several surveys instituted by our Government across the American Isthmus, to ascertain the most feasible route for the construction of an interoceanic ship canal, have been completed, and, although all the reports have not yet been published, it is understood that the result of the survey shows that the Nicaragua route is the most practicable. It will take 10 years, at least, to construct it, and the cost is estimated at about $10,000,000. The Department of State, it is said, is now in correspondence with various friendly powers for the negotiation of treaties guaranteeing the neutrality of the canal, which, in an undertaking of such magnitude, must be done by the Governments that will participate in its construction. The Russians, he said, had been very active during the past year, and had sent numerous expeditions into Asia, chiefly in Siberia and north-eastern Asia. Mr. Chekanetsky had explored the lower course of the Lena and Olenok rivers, the object of his journey being to make geographical, geological and botanical surveys; the German Arctic Society had determined upon a plan for polar research by the establishment of scientific observatories, with expeditionary trips and yearly communication, in Siberia; Messrs. Lidenauer and Lopatin had explored the Rivers Ket and Chulym, in Siberia, to ascertain if it is possible to join the rivers Ob and Yenisseï, and found that the Ket only could be used for that purpose; Prof. Nordenskjold had left in July last for the mouth of the Yenissei, to endeavor to organize commercial communication by water between the northern countries of Europe and the northern portion of Asia, and had found the Yenisseï navigable, and susceptible of the establishment of a trade route to it through the Kara Sea. In India the great survey was going on at the rate of 40,000 square miles a year, and in Palestine the ruins of Pala, Guadara, Galama, and other ancient cities had been explored by Mr. Victor Guerin, while the American Palestine Exploration Society had suspended for the present the work of triangulation. In alluding to the work presented in West Africa, the Speaker referred briefly to the subject of the African pigmies. When M. Du Chaillu, he said, had laid before the society the account of the pigmies he had found in Western Africa, near the equator, it was received in certain parts of Europe with incredulity; but these pigmies of the western coast have since been seen by others, and the existence of races of pigmies is now established by the facts gathered by Schweinfurth, Miani and others in Africa, and by recent researches in India.

Judge Daly concluded his address with an interesting description of the explorations of New-Guinea and Australia. In alluding to the appearance and habits of the natives of the former, he said that Rev. George Brown, a missionary, who visited the islands on the north-east coast of the country, described the natives as nude savages of the oriental negro type, who live more like beasts than human beings. He found cannibalism prevailing throughout the islands, not, as among some other savages, as a religious rite, but as a means of subsistence. He has given the details of what he saw of this horrible practice, which are too revolting to repeat. He says he was assured by the natives that there was in the islands a race of human beings with tails, who were not monkeys; that the tail was bony and inflexible, so that those with this caudal appendage had to dig a hole in the sand before they could sit down, as they died if the tail was broken. We have thus revived, the speaker concluded, the account of the men with tails, heretofore reported to exist in Borneo and the interior of Africa, but always upon native information, with the exception of hearsay information alleged to have been given by a sailor cast away on the coast of Borneo, and, like all such information, of little value.

At the conclusion of the address a vote of thanks to the speaker was adopted, after which the meeting adjourned.

A JUVENILE WANDERER AT HOME.

THE ADVENTURES OF CARL SIEFERT—A TEN-YEAR-OLD BOY'S TRIP FROM AMSTERDAM TO NEW-YORK AND BACK.

Carl Siefert was born in Saxony about 10 years ago. He lived in the town where he was born for several years, when his father removed to Amsterdam and engaged in the work of a washerman. Little Carl was brought up under the care of his grandmother, who spoke no Dutch, so that the boy was still a German, among the Hollanders, in November last, when the adventure began which has just ended. He was of a wandering disposition, it would seem, and used to annoy the old grandmother by frequent long excursions about Amsterdam. On one occasion, having wandered down to the wharf of the New-York steam-ship line, he saw a woman going on board with several children, when he joined the group of little ones, and followed them into the cabin, and down to the steerage. Early in November the steamer sailed, and arrived in New-York on the 19th of that month. Carl coming to this port as a "stow-away." At Castle Garden his case became known to the authorities, and he came ashore, wandering off once more, according to his bent. A day or two after he was found at the Police Headquarters, and Superintendent Walling sent him to Castle Garden, in charge of Detective Von Gerichten. A letter was written to the United States Consul at Rotterdam, relating the story that Siefert gave of himself to the Commissioners of Emigration, and on the 23d of November, after a stay in this City of only about five days, he was once more put on board the Rotterdam and sailed for Holland. On reaching Rotterdam he was taken in charge by the United States Consul, and the following letter has just been received from him on the subject:

UNITED STATES CONSULATE, ROTTERDAM, Dec. 28, 1876.

To the President of the Board of Emigration, New-York:

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you the following communication, received from the Mayor of the City of Rotterdam:

"Carl Siefert, sent back to Rotterdam by order of your board, has been sent by the Commissioner of Police of this city to Amsterdam, where his parents are said to be living."

The Commissioner of Police not having received any further communication from the police at Amsterdam, believes that Carl Siefert has been brought to his parents. FR. SCHMIDT, United States Consul.

INSTALLATION OF REV. DR. BEVAN.

The congregation of the Brick Presbyterian Church, corner of Fifth avenue and Thirty-seventh street, assembled in that edifice last evening to install Rev. Dr. Lewellyn D. Bevan, recently of London, as Pastor. Rev. Dr. Marling commenced the services by reading a chapter from Thessalonians. A sermon was next preached by Rev. Dr. Adams from a text selected from the second Epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians, 16th to 20th verse, and two additional verses from the succeeding chapter of the same book. The substance of the text was that, having known Christ in the flesh, we should know Him no more; and that as God in Christ was reconciling the world unto Himself, the great Apostle besought the people to be reconciled to God. After the sermon, Rev. Dr. Marling read the act of installation and propounded the usual formal questions to Rev. Dr. Bevan, who occupied a seat in a pew opposite the pulpit. Rev. Dr. Hutton then delivered an prayer, and was followed by Rev. Dr. Shedd, who delivered the customary charge to the Pastor. Rev. Dr. Murray delivered the charge to the congregation, in which he exhorted them to support their Pastor in the work he was about to undertake, and to let him see that they appreciated his calling. Rev. Dr. Bevan then entered the pulpit, and briefly addressed the congregation, thanking its members for their kindly presence, and promising to endeavor to discharge the trust reposed in him with love and fidelity. At the close of the address the members passed the pulpit in single file through the central aisle, and gave the hand of welcome to their new Pastor.

THE PHELPS CONTEMPT CASE.

Dr. Phelps attended before the Grand Jury at 11 A. M. yesterday, in conformity with his promise. Assistant District Attorney Bell was present on behalf of the District Attorney's office. The foreman of the Grand Jury repeated to Dr. Phelps the questions put to him on Thursday last, in relation to his knowledge of the Bennett-May duel. The Doctor declined to answer, on the ground that he was not bound to state anything which might tend to criminate himself, and read a legal justification of his course, which had been prepared by his lawyer. The witness was thereupon directed to withdraw and await the appearance of the Grand Jury in the Court of General Sessions. Dr. Phelps thereupon left the Grand Jury room and entered the court-room, where he was joined by his counsel, Mr. John A. Foley. After waiting until 1 o'clock the Doctor and his counsel were informed that the Grand Jury, not being prepared to present any bills, would not attend in court that day. The witness thereupon left, and will meet the Grand Jury in court to-day, when he will be formally discharged by Judge Gildersleeve. None of the witnesses summoned to testify to what they knew of the alleged duel were in attendance.

THE SECURITY LIFE COMPANY.

Another fact was yesterday brought to light in relation to the assets of the insolvent Security Life Insurance and Annuity Company, which makes them even more worthless than has been heretofore stated. The real estate held by the company, located at Williams' Bridge, was valued by the appraisers of the Insurance Department at $31,241, as stated in Deputy Superintendent McCall's report, printed yesterday. It now appears that there is a mortgage on this property of $25,000 which was overlooked when the valuation was made, and this fact must be taken into consideration in holding the Receiver, William H. Wickham, responsible for the assets. The Receiver stated yesterday that he did not think the bringing of suits against the former Trustees of the institution, with a view to recovering some of the misappropriated funds, would result in any good, and that it would only entail a further loss of money.

FLOATING THE AMERIQUE.

The last load of goods from the steam-ship Amérique was brought to this City yesterday by lighters, and consisted principally of salted hides. The efforts of the Wrecking Company to float the vessel were begun on Monday. Three heavy cables, attached to heavy anchors, were brought to bear upon her, and, by means of a steady strain, she was shifted about 10 feet. At 10 o'clock yesterday morning she had been moved five feet further, and at 6 o'clock last night, by persistent efforts, having due regard for the safety of the huge hull, she had been shifted about half her length, and the Coast Wrecking Company were then very confident that they would be able to float her off with the next high tide, which would occur at an early hour in the evening.

The steamer Rotterdam, of the Rotterdam Line, about which some apprehensions began to be felt on Monday in consequence of her non-arrival, reached Sandy Hook yesterday morning, and at noon landed 12 steerage passengers at Castle Garden. Goodyear delivered a lecture upon "Winckelmann, the Father of Art in Germany; the Poet, Painter, Sculptor, Art-writer, and Philosopher." The lecture was very comprehensive, covering the life of the subject from his boyhood, through years of poverty and severe struggles, up to the time when he was recognized as one of the celebrities of his country, and as the great revivalist of art in Germany, and sketching fully the works of his life and the influences of his labors upon his contemporaries and the greater influences upon posterity.

A respectably dressed man who gave his name as Rane was found in a drunken sleep in front of the Olympic Theatre on Monday night. When taken to the First Precinct Station-house and searched, a roll of bills amounting to $1,000 was found in his pocket. Justice Walsh yesterday fined Rane $10.

It is proposed to erect in this city within a few days, at some prominent public point, a regular weather signal service station. The instruments used will be of the most scientific construction. THE PRESIDENTIAL VOTE.

REPORT OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE.

TO VOTE WHERE SINGLE CERTIFICATES EXIST TO BE REJECTED WITHOUT CONCURRENCE OF BOTH HOUSES—DOUBLE RETURNS TO BE REFERRED TO A COMMISSION OF FIVE SENATORS AND FIVE REPRESENTATIVES, WITH FIVE JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT—FOUR OF THE JUSTICES DESIGNATED, WHO CHOOSE A FIFTH.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—The joint committee of the two houses for arranging a method of counting the Electoral vote agreed, to-night, upon a scheme which has been stated in the form of a bill, and which will be presented in both houses to-morrow, unless the action should be reconsidered in the morning, which is not probable. The bill provides that the two houses shall assemble on the second Wednesday of February, in the hall of the House of Representatives. The President of the Senate will be the presiding officer. Two tellers are to be appointed on the part of the House, and two on the part of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall open all the certificates of Electoral votes, in alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A, and the tellers, having read the same, shall make a list of the votes as they appear on the certificates. They shall certify this list to the President of the Senate, who will announce the result, and the person having a majority of the votes shall be declared President of the United States. If any question shall arise on the reading of any certificates, as to whether the votes shall be counted, the objection having been stated by the presiding officer, the Senate shall withdraw to its own Chamber; the objections raised shall be considered and decided without debate, and unless both houses concur in sustaining the objections, the vote objected to shall be counted.

When two sets of returns have been received from any State, they shall be opened by the President of the Senate and laid before the joint meeting. In cases where more than one set of returns are presented from the same State, the two returns, with all accompanying papers, are to be referred to a commission to consist of five Senators to be elected by the Senate; five members of the House, to be elected by the House, and the four Associate Justices of the United States Supreme Court, for the first, third, eighth, and ninth circuits, and these four Associate Justices shall select a fifth Justice who shall not be the Chief Justice. The senior Associate Justice shall preside at the sessions of this tribunal, and it is clothed with all the powers of either or both houses of Congress to make investigations. The decisions of this commission shall be made in writing to both houses, which shall be convened in the hall of the House of Representatives to receive such decisions, and the decision of the commission shall stand, unless both houses concur in rejecting them, as is provided in the first section of the bill with reference to the vote of objected States, from which but one return has been received.

No time is specified as to when the commission shall determine the questions referred to it for decision, but the bill provides that the commission shall immediately convene and proceed to determine the questions referred to them.

The four associate Justices who will constitute part of the commission, and who are designated by the circuits over which they preside, are Nathan Clifford, of Maine; Samuel F. Miller, of Iowa; Stephen J. Field, of California, and William Strong, of Pennsylvania. The other four associate Justices, one of whom will be selected to complete the commission, are Noah H. Swayne, of Ohio; David Davis, of Illinois; Joseph P. Bradley, of New-Jersey, and Ward Hunt, of New-York.

This grand commission of 15 persons, who are to decide the important questions referred to them by the joint meeting, are to take an oath to act impartially and give a true judgment according to the Constitution and the laws. They are to decide by a majority of votes, whether any and what votes from the disputed States are the votes provided for by the Constitution, and how many Electors were duly appointed in each of said States.

No debate is in order in the joint meeting, and no questions are to be put by the presiding officer, except in motions that the two houses separate. He shall have power to preserve order. The bill makes provision for the seating of the President of the Senate, the Senators and the officers of the Senate in the hall of the House. The joint meeting shall not be dissolved until all the votes are counted and the result declared; but when the houses have separated to consider any question raised, either house can take a recess till the next day.

Any power now existing in the Constitution, which would prevent proceedings in the United States courts as to the right or title of the person declared elected, are not to be impaired by the provisions of this bill.

The agreement of the Joint Committee will not be quite though nearly unanimous. There is believed to be one Senator and one Representative who will not concur; but they will not offer a minority report. The committee will meet to-morrow morning, when it will be determined whether the bill will be accompanied by a statement of reasons. The committee has discussed every variety of suggestion and proposition that can be conceived. During the last meetings there came in from the House branch of the committee many frivolous proposals, which seemed to have no purpose but to harass and delay. The last question in dispute was finally voted upon this afternoon. When it was apparent that the time to agree or disagree had arrived, the House Committee insisted for a long time upon placing the five senior Justices on the commission, which would include two Republicans, two Democrats, and one Liberal, and the manner of selecting the fifth Justice was about the last matter to be decided.

The element of chance, or the lottery scheme, was retained till the universal reprobation with which that proposal was hailed by the country, when it became known, compelled it to be abandoned. The new method of selecting the fifth Justice led to the change in designating the four, so as to distribute them geographically and maintain the party balance of two Republicans and two Democrats. The most objectionable features of the first proposition presented by the Senate Committee have been removed, but how the bill, as finally offered, will be received in Congress cannot be imagined till the terms are known publicly and discussed to-morrow.

THE SITUATION IN LOUISIANA.

THE INSURGENTS NOT TO BE DISTURBED IN THEIR POSSESSION OF PUBLIC PLACES AT PRESENT—NICHOLLS' CHIEF ADVISER AN UNCONQUERED REBEL—NO QUORUM IN THE SENATE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 17.—The status quo in which New-Orleans is, is such as was left after the uprising of the Nicholls insurgents, and not before it. The Police-stations, captured unlawfully by armed men, are still held by the captors, and so with the courts and the mortgage offices. Gen. Augur has required from Gov. Packard a written pledge that the Governor would make no attempt to regain possession of the Supreme Court-room. Nothing could be better in the interest of peace, unless there might be exacted from Mr. Nicholls a pledge that the Judges and Clerks of the Supreme Court would not be obstructed in the occupation of their room, and the possession of the records of the court.

The report sent North that the White League had disbanded is not true. A large force of the organization, with its commissioned and non-commissioned officers, is massed at the Jackson square court buildings, under the thin guise of a rebellious Sheriff's posse. What they intend to do under the armistice of the present they do not say. Conservative Democrats express fear that Mr. Nicholls will fall completely under the control of the last-ditchers. His chief and constant adviser is Gen. Alciabides de Belnac, a fiery, untamed warrior, who has not yet surrendered. While the fighting men are standing, as at present, with guns in their hands, it is not pleasant to think that an after-dinner influence might bring on a riot here that should equal the horrors of 1866, when the members of a Constitutional convention were slaughtered by Democrats.

The Senate to-day had no quorum, and there was no ballot for United States Senator. Things remain on both sides as they were a week ago.

GEN. AUGUR'S REPLY TO THE LETTER OF GOV. PACKARD—MAINTENANCE OF STATU QUO.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 17.—The following is Gen. Augur's reply to Gov. Packard's letter of last night:

HEAD-QUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF, NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 17, 1877.

Hon. S. B. Packard, State-house:

DEAR SIR: Your letter dated the 16th inst., which you had published in the newspapers and telegraphed North before it was possible for me to see it, is received. Though addressed to me I understand very well that it is not particularly intended for me, and but for some errors affecting me personally I should not think it necessary to make any reply. You state that "orders had been issued early on this day (the 9th inst.) by the honorable Secretary of War directing that unauthorized armed bodies should be required to desist, &c. I (you) consider this order of the Secretary of War as virtually commanding a maintenance of statu quo; consequently the State forces in charge of the different positions outside of the Capitol were directed to make such resistance as would compel a manifestation of force and a breach of the peace on the part of their opponents. It was my understanding that neither side should be permitted to interfere with the status of the other side." In reply to this, I would state that the time of day at which this order was issued is immaterial. It was not received here until some time after the surrender, without resistance, of the Supreme Court-room, Arsenal, and all the other police stations, and it is quite a new thing to me to hear that you ever considered that order as commanding a maintenance of the statu quo. Yourself, and the officers in command immediately under you, have repeatedly stated that it was your intention to seize any favorable opportunity to recover the court-room, and you have repeatedly sent your Sheriff to demand that room, and have twice since that time made written application to me for troops to assist in such recovery. This does not look as though it was your understanding that neither side should be permitted to interfere with the status of the other side. It was the fact that these threats to recover lost ground, whenever a favorable opportunity presented itself, that has furnished an excuse for the Nicholls party to keep a force in readiness to resist any attempt to recover; and it was in view of this very condition of affairs that yesterday morning I directed two of my staff, one to see you and one to see Gen. Nicholls, to inquire, not to request, if some agreement or understanding could not be entered into by which statu quo could be guaranteed until such time as the President should make his decision. Such agreement would do away with the supposed necessity of keeping up a body of armed men on either side, and diminish very greatly the chances of violence and bloodshed. I made no request in the matter; I had no right to make any request. It was simply a suggestion in the interest, as I thought, of peace, and to give a moment's quiet to the citizens of this excited city. Neither Gen. Nicholls nor yourself thought it advisable to adopt it, and there it ended.

An error was also made in the form of the memorandum left you by Major Russell last night, though of no particular moment, still I prefer to be reported correctly. In directing the staff officer last night to deliver to you and Gen. Nicholls each a copy of the dispatch of the 15th from the Secretary of War, he was told: "Say to each that I hope they will give assurances that the President's wishes shall be respected." I made no request for such assurances. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. C. AUGUR,
Brigadier General Commanding.

The Republican this morning, referring to Gen. Augur's latest instructions from the War Department, says:

"What is the present status according to the understanding of the Administration? Its explained in the President's dispatch, of which that of the Secretary is intended to be explanatory: A Supreme Court legally constituted, to make room for five lawyers who have been called together by a private citizen of the State to act in a judicial capacity; a Governor declared duly elected in the manner provided by the laws of the State, ignored by the leaders of armed men, and all public places filled in the same manner that characterized the alleged appointments to the Supreme Court. In the meantime the process of law is paralyzed; no business is transacted in the courts, and but little is done in the markets. The people are excited and weary; mercantile houses are failing, and others are in financial straits. Scarcely any produce comparatively is coming to market, and stocks of goods in store find no buyers."
